Loyalty and Security Legislation
(see: Civil Rights)

Lynching, Anti- (also see: Racial Discrimination; Civil Rights)—(1930, p. 384). In harmony with sound traditions and repeated pronouncements of the A. F. of L. that practice of economic and civil injustices upon the colored wage earners and our fellow citizens are herewith unequivocally and sharply condemned and the voice of American labor reaffirms and emphasizes its faith in and devotion to the principles and ideas of equal opportunity, fair-play and justice for all Americans in industry and before the law without regard to race, creed, color or nationality, as the safest assurance and guarantee of the stability of our institutions; and the A. F. of L. pledges its forces and calls upon all affiliated unions to employ their great influence and power, in cooperation with various civic and religious organizations, to stamp out lynching and mob violence and industrial discrimination because of race or color as a disgraceful crime and a blot upon American civilization.

(1934, p. 624) The A. F. of L. herewith proclaims its absolute and unequivocal condemnation of Lynch and mob law, and calls upon Congress to enact legislation which will wipe out this shameful blot of barbarism from American soil. Reaffirmed: 1935, 1937, 1938, 1939.

Whereas—In the last half-century, some 5,000 or more persons have been the victims of lynching in the United States of America, some of whom have been white and women; and

Whereas—Lynching harks back to the brutal methods of the barbarian and savage, and constitutes a blot, a stigma and a shame and disgrace upon a so-called civilized country, and earns the condemnation and scorn of all civilized peoples; and

tion, together with the Executive Council and the President of the American Federation of Labor, have made definite and sharp declarations against this national evil and inhuman practice, and that there is a growing enlightened sentiment in the South against this horror; therefore, be it

Resolved—That the 59th Annual Convention of the American Federation of Labor express its unqualified condemnation of lynching and mob terror, and denounces the Southern filibuster in the United States Senate against the Wagner-Van Nys-Gavagan Anti-Lynching Bill, as opposed to and in contravention of all democratic procedure and practice, preventing, as it were, through physical force and a blocking process, the will of the people from being heard and registered, and calls upon the Congress to enact a Federal law to wipe out lynching.

(1940, pp. 81, 406) A. F. of L. has consistently supported anti-lynching bills and the E.C. was authorized by the 1940 convention to continue its efforts to secure such legislation. In the report of the E.C. to the convention the purpose of the proposed legislation was set forth as enlisting "the aid of the Federal Government within its constitutional province to supplement the efforts of the states in stamping out lynching and removing the threat of mob violence from American life. It is a basic premise of this legislation that the function of checking and punishing mob violence is in the first instance an obligation of the states and that it is only when state agents fail or refuse to do their duty that Federal power is to be exercised in the form of penalties upon the state agents and agencies which have been derelict in their duty. The Federal Government cannot intervene in any case in which state agents and agencies have been diligent in attempting to prevent and punish mob violence. The proposed legislation will operate in three ways: (1) The Department of Justice is empowered to investigate lynchings wherever there is evidence of delinquency on the part of local officials. (2) Local officials who are remiss in their duty with reference to restraining the mob or bringing lynch-ers to the bar of justice are subject to punishment. (3) The county or city whose peace officers or other agents charged with law enforcement, aid the lynchers or refuse to oppose the mob, become liable for damages to the victim of mob violence or the next of kin of such victim."

Legislation of this character has frequently been before Congress but has failed because filibustering in the Senate has prevented a vote. At this session the bill passed the House on January 10, 1940, by a vote of 252 to 131. It was favorably reported by the Senate Committee on Judiciary by a vote of 11 to 4 but there has been no action by the Senate to date.

(P. 512) Convention adopted the following statement setting forth the position of the A. F. of L. on the need for an adequate anti-lynching law.

"... that this convention endorses the principle of an anti-lynching law, and that the officers and the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor be requested to give their support to legislative measures which will bring an adequate anti-lynching law into existence."

(1941, pp. 251, 543) The convention unanimously adopted a resolution definitely and sharply expressing its opposition to lynching and mob law and reaffirming its stand endorsing and supporting a federal anti-lynching law.

Whereas—Lynching and mob-law are a disgrace and menace to American democracy and Christianity, and since the lynching of American citizens, white and black, for over fifty years shows that the states, individually, are incapable of abolishing this evil, therefore, be it

Resolved—That this Convention of the American Federation of Labor in New Orleans, Louisiana, November, 1944, go on record as condemning lynching and mob-law as a grave danger to our constitutional government and an attack upon civilized society, and hence call upon the House and Senate of Congress to enact a federal law against lynching and mob-law.

Your committee recommends that the position previously taken by the convention of the American Federation of Labor to prevent lynchings be reaffirmed.

(1946, pp. 220, 490) Res. 7 called for legislation protesting against the prevalence of lynching in some of the states. The Executive Council reported that support had been given in the Congress to bills against lynching. The convention recommended continued efforts to secure enactment of these proposals.

(1946, pp. 549, 594) The convention considered two resolutions, Nos. 142 and 165, dealing with civil rights and anti-lynching legislation. The convention decided that "the American Federation of Labor vigorously and unequivocally condemn these crimes, and urges the Congress of the United States to enact, as speedily as possible, legislation which will permit the Federal Government to intervene in cases where individuals or groups have been deprived of their civil rights, guaranteed under the Federal Constitution, or have been denied due process of law or adequate protection against violence."

(1947, p. 651) The convention, through adoption of Res. 47, reaffirmed the position of the A. F. of L. in support of anti-lynching legislation "in the interest of justice and fair play for all peoples regardless of race, color, religion, national origin, or ancestry."

(1948, p. 235) Res. 10 provided that the A. F. of L. go on record as opposed to lynching in all of its reprehensible forms and called upon Congress to enact legislation abolishing this grave attack upon the life of American citizens and American democracy.

Machinists, International Association (Disaffiliation)—(1943, p. 43) The following communication was received by the officers of the American Federation of Labor from President Brown and Secretary-Treasurer Davison, of the International Association of Machinists:

Washington, D. C., May 27, 1943.

Mr. William Green, President,
American Federation of Labor.

Mr. George Meany, Secretary-
Treasurer,
American Federation of Labor.

Dear Sirs and Brothers:

In our communication of May 20, 1943, to the A. F. of L. Executive Council we advised that the general membership of the International Association of Machinists had by referendum vote decided to withdraw from the American Federation of Labor.

In that letter, copy of which is herewith attached, we set forth the causes leading up to our membership's decision and once more made an earnest appeal that the same consideration be granted the Machinists' Union as was given other American Federation of Labor affiliates.

For reasons best known to themselves the A. F. of L. Executive Council chose to deny our request, thereby clearly demonstrating that justice and a fair application of the true principles upon which the American Federation of Labor was founded, no longer enters into their deliberations nor governs their decisions.

On May 22, International President H. W. Brown attending your Council meeting, stated that:

"In view of the A. F. of L. Executive Council's refusal to grant the request presented in our communication of May 20, 1943, and in the absence of any offer of protection of our work jurisdiction, the Executive Council of the International Association of Machinists, in session assembled, has no alternative other than to determine the effective date on which the mandate of our membership shall be carried out."

That statement was confirmed in a letter addressed May 24 to Secretary-Treasurer George Meany by President Brown.

An impartial analysis of the manner in which the Council has handled our repeated appeals for justice can only lead to one conclusion; namely, that A. F. of L. convention decisions and rulings pertaining to the work jurisdiction of our union were totally disregarded and the merits of our contentions completely ignored when our case was decided. By their refusal to abide by A. F. of L. convention decisions and rulings affecting our jurisdiction and to grant us the relief asked for they have once more placed their stamp of approval on the practice whereby thousands of our members are compelled to pay tribute to other A. F. of L. unions for the right to work at our trade.

After due deliberation we have concluded that not until the International Association of Machinists is assured of the same consideration in the preservation of its rights and work jurisdiction as is accorded other members of the American Federation of Labor family, can there be any justification for a continuation of our forty-eight year affiliation with the American Federation of Labor.

You are, therefore, duly notified that our affiliation with the American Federation of Labor is withdrawn as of May 31, 1943.

It is with sincere regret that we take this step. However, in leaving the American Federation of Labor, we are firmly resolved to continue one of the traditional policies of the International Association of Machinists—to respect the jurisdiction of and co-operate with the bona fide trade unions who respect our jurisdiction.

Fraternally yours,

By Order of the Executive Council,
International Association of Machinists, per

(Signed) H. W. Brown,
International President.

(Signed) E. C. Davison,
General Secretary-Treasurer.

The Executive Council learned of this action taken by the International Association of Machinists with a feeling of deep regret. The representatives of the American Federation of Labor appealed to the officers of the International Association of Machinists to reconsider their action and to withdraw its notice of withdrawal from affiliation with the American Federation of Labor. We urged that through conferences and discussion, efforts be put forth to bring about a settlement of differences which had arisen between the International Association of Machinists and international organizations affiliated with the American Federation of Labor. The Council emphasized the fact that better results could be obtained through the pursuit of such a policy in the settlement of the differences within the family of Labor than by withdrawal from affiliation and an attempt to bring about a settlement through resort to force and forceful methods.

Notwithstanding the withdrawal of the International Association of Machinists from affiliation with the American Federation of Labor, we have continued the status quo regarding affiliation of local unions of the International Association of Machinists with city central bodies, state federations of labor and local metal trades councils. Furthermore, we have not thus far enforced the provisions of the Constitution regarding the affiliation of the International Association of Machinists with the Metal Trades Department and the Railway Employees Department, which were chartered by the American Federation of Labor. The Executive Council has hoped that such action might be avoided through an early return of the International Association of Machinists to membership in the American Federation of Labor. The efforts of the officers of the American Federation of Labor and the Executive Council to bring about a re-affiliation of the International Association of Machinists with the American Federation of Labor still continue.

Supplemental Report of the Executive Council—International Association of Machinists

(Page 317) In our report to the convention, we have set forth the action on May 27, 1943 of the International Association of Machinists in withdrawing from the American Federation of Labor and we have set forth our efforts to have this organization withdraw its notice of withdrawal in the interests of harmony within the family of the American Federation of Labor.

We are now happy to report to this convention that, after extended conferences, the International Association of Machinists has, through the following communication complied with our request:

"October 6, 1943

"Mr. George Meany,
Secretary Treasurer,
American Federation of Labor,
Statler Hotel,
Boston, Massachusetts.

Dear Sir and Brother:

This is to advise you that our letter of May 27, 1943 announcing the International Association of Machinists' withdrawal from the American Federation of Labor is herewith withdrawn.

With kindest regards, I remain

Fraternally yours,

—s— H. W. BROWN,
International President,

—s— E. C. DAVISON,
Secretary-Treasurer."

In addition to the above, we wish to report that the International Association of Machinists has paid its per capita tax to the American Federation of Labor up to and including September 1943.

We, therefore, recommend that the Credentials Committee of this convention be instructed to give immediate consideration to the seating in this convention of the delegates representing the International Association of Machinists.

(1946, p. 78) The officers of the American Federation of Labor were greatly surprised when they received an official communication from President Brown of the International Association of Machinists, officially advising that said International Union was withholding the payment of per capita tax to the American Federation of Labor until certain conditions were met by the Executive Council. This refusal on the part of the International Association of Machinists to pay per capita tax to the American Federation of Labor as required by the laws of the Federation was interpreted by the Executive Council as discontinuation of the affiliation of the International Association of Machinists. The facts herewith set forth are made clear in an official communication addressed to the Executive Council by President Harvey W. Brown of the International Association of Machinists, reading as follows:

Washington, D. C., November 29, 1945

To Executive Council,
American Federation of Labor

Attention:

Mr. William Green, President,
Mr. George Meany, Secretary-Treasurer.

Dear Sirs and Brothers:

This will acknowledge your communication dated November 19, 1945, in which the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor serves notice that the International Association of Machinists "has discontinued its affiliation with the American Federation of Labor—because of failure to comply with the provisions of Section 3, Article X of the Constitution of the American Federation of Labor."

The language of this notification erroneously implies that the International Association of Machinists is "refusing to pay per capita tax" for the purpose of discontinuing its affiliation with the American Federation of Labor. Since this is not the case, and for the purpose of a true and correct record, we direct your attention to the following plain facts concerning the deferment of our per capita tax to the American Federation of Labor.

The Executive Council of the International Association of Machinists deferred the payment of per capita tax to the American Federation of Labor at a time when the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor, in total disregard of our established jurisdiction and actions of A. F. of L. conventions, took action to parcel out to another organization work which is a part of our trade and which had always been performed by members of our organization. This was done notwithstanding the promise made at the Boston Convention, i.e., that the American Federation of Labor Executive Council would do everything possible to assist us to protect our trade rights. We believed that with such assistance we would regain work rightfully belonging to our trade and which was being performed by other A. F. of L. crafts in contravention of actions of A. F. of L. conventions and agreements made in good faith.

The actions of the American Federation of Labor Executive Council which precipitated our Council's action to defer per capita tax payments actually took away more of our work and thus increased and complicated the difficulties of our membership in following the work of their trade. Thus we were left no choice but to conclude that the Boston Convention promise either had not been made in good faith or had since been rescinded.

Thereupon our Executive Council decided to defer the payment of per capita tax until the entire matter could be submitted to our Convention for decision. This was done in our recent Convention held at New York City. The Convention overwhelmingly endorsed the prior action of our Executive Council, that is, to defer the payment of per capita tax to the American Federation of Labor until we are accorded the same treatment and consideration by the A. F. of L. Executive Council as this body accords to other A. F. of L. affiliated Unions.

Pursuant to the laws of the International Association of Machinists, this Convention action is now being submitted to a referendum vote of our membership. We cannot escape the conclusion that the latest action of your Executive Council, as set forth in your communication of November 19, 1945, is timed and intended to influence our referendum vote. In this conclusion we are influenced by the language of the A. F. of L. Constitution which was used as a basis for the notification set forth in your November 19, 1945, communication, viz:

capita tax on or before the 15th of each month and assessment or assessments when due and payable shall be notified of the fact by the Secretary-Treasurer of the Federation, and if at the end of three months it is still in arrears it shall become suspended from membership by the Federation, and can be reinstated only by a vote of the convention when such arrearages are paid in full, as provided in Section 2 of this Article."

Since the International Association of Machinists has deferred all per capita tax due since November 1944, this notification according to the A. F. of L. constitutional proviso, quoted in your communication of November 19, should have been served immediately after February 15, 1945. The A. F. of L. Executive Council, however, saw fit to withhold such notice until the eve of our referendum vote.

We desire to have your records show clearly that the International Association of Machinists is neither dissatisfied with the announced principles nor the bona fide laws of the American Federation of Labor. We shall always adhere to these principles and abide by such laws. We do not believe, however, that our membership can long tolerate the discriminatory application of these principles and laws.

The International Association of Machinists stands ready now or at any time to the future to pay in full all American Federation of Labor per capita tax now held in abeyance and all subsequent per capita tax when due upon conclusive assurance that the discrimination against our organization will cease and that we will be accorded the same treatment and consideration as is being accorded other affiliated Unions.

With best wishes, I remain,

Fraternally yours,

(Signed) H. W. Brown,
International President.

The following reply to this communication was sent by the President of the American Federation of Labor:

Washington, D. C., December 3, 1945.

Mr. Harvey W. Brown, President,
International Association of Machinists,
Machinists Building,
Washington 1, D. C.

Dear Sir and Brother:

I transmitted a copy of your communication dated November 29th to the members of the Executive Council for their information and consideration. I am confident that the members of the Council will note, as I noted, your comment regarding the communication sent you by direction of the Executive Council regarding the result which inevitably followed your refusal to pay per capita tax to the American Federation of Labor for the period intervening since November 1944.

The laws of the American Federation of Labor provide that if at the end of three months an affiliated organization has failed to pay its per capita tax, it becomes suspended from membership in the Federation. The records show that the International Association of Machinists failed to pay per capita tax as required by the laws of the American Federation of Labor, for a period of twelve months. The refusal of the International Association of Machinists to pay tax to the American Federation of Labor was voluntary on its part; it made its own decision to refrain from paying per capita tax as required by the laws of the Federation and with full knowledge that to do so meant a discontinuation of its affiliation with the American Federation of Labor.

When an organization makes its own decision to refuse to pay per capita tax to the American Federation of Labor and does so voluntarily, it is reasonable to conclude that it discontinues its affiliation with the American Federation of Labor of its own accord and of its own free will. Such action must be interpreted as a discontinuation on the part of the International Association of Machinists of its affiliation with the American Federation of Labor. I am sure the International Association of Machinists entertains this same point of view toward its chartered local unions when they refuse to pay per capita tax to the International Association of Machinists, as required by the laws of said organization.

You are wrong in your conclusion that the latest action of the Executive Council, as set forth in the communication sent you, was timed and intended to influence the referendum vote. The Executive Council was tolerant and highly considerate. It awaited the action of the special convention of the International Association of Machinists which convened in New York on October 29th. All members of the Council had hoped that the convention would direct you and your associates to comply with the laws of the American Federation of Labor and to place the International Association of Machinists in good standing with the American Federation of Labor. When your convention failed to do this the Executive Council believed that the time had arrived when it should act and carry out the provisions of the constitution of the American Federation of Labor.

There is no difference in the refusal of an international union to pay tax to the American Federation of Labor and deferring the payment of per capita tax. You make clear in your letter that both the Executive Board and the special convention of your International Union have refused to pay per capita tax to the American Federation of Labor until certain conditions are met by the Executive Council or by a convention of the American Federation of Labor. I sincerely regret this action, and I regret more than words can express that the International Association of Machinists is no longer in affiliation with the American Federation of Labor.

Very truly yours,
 (Signed) William Green,
President,
American Federation of Labor.

On February 6, 1946, a communication was addressed to the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor signed by the members of the Executive Council of the International Association of Machinists, which reads as follows:

Washington, D. C., February 6, 1946.

Executive Council,
 American Federation of Labor
 Attention:

Mr. William Green, President,
 Mr. George Meany, Secretary-Treasurer.

Dear Sirs and Brothers:

Accept this as formal notification that the membership of the International Association of Machinists has by referendum voted in excess of 4 to 1 to continue the deferment of our per capita payments to the American Federation of Labor until such a time that the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor demonstrates by conclusive action that it will accord our Organization the same treatment and consideration as it accords other affiliated Organizations.

Specifically our membership has directed that we, their officers, continue the deferment of our American Federation of Labor per capita tax until we consummate a written understanding with your Council, which will, without reservation, accomplish the following results, all of which are consistent with the laws and Convention actions of the American Federation of Labor:

1. When called upon by interested parties the President of the A. F. of L., in his absence the Secretary-Treasurer, shall by written notice announce that the jurisdiction of the International Association of Machinists covers

(A) The erecting and repairing of machinery of all description (including trucks, tractors and all other automotive equipment) on construction projects, in buildings (during course of construction or when completed) or elsewhere.

(B) The maintenance and repairing of automobiles, trucks, busses, tractors and any other automotive equipment and machinery of all description operated by or for local interurban or distance transportation companies, individuals or business establishments of any kind.

2. The President of the American Federation of Labor shall notify (in writing) the Building and Construction Trades Department, A. F. of L., and all subordinate Councils thereof, that they shall in no way interfere with the International Association of Machinists' right to negotiate with any employer an agreement covering the erecting and repairing of machinery of all description (including trucks, tractors and all other automotive equipment) on construction projects, in buildings (during course of construction or when completed) or elsewhere.

3. The letter be withdrawn which the President of the American Federation of Labor addressed April 23, 1943, to President William E. Maloney, International Union of Operating Engineers, and any other information he addressed to any party, wherein the President of the A. F. of L. attempted to turn over to the International Union of Operating Engineers the work involved on a ship while the ship is undergoing a trial test, prior to turning the ship over to the owner or purchasers and before commissioned for service to determine if the machinery meets specifications.

Pursuant to this direction from our membership the Officers of the International Association of Machinists stand ready to meet with authorized representatives of the American Federation of Labor to discuss and/or consider any matters that will, or may, lead to the results which will justify resumption of our per capita tax payments.

The Executive Council directed that the International Association of Machinists be advised that the Council could not respond to the suggestion made in the communication received from the International Association of Machinists, but that instead it become a part of the American Federation of Labor, and after it places itself in good standing with the American Federation of Labor the Council will take up the grievances enumerated and give them consideration, and sincerely and earnestly endeavor to work out a settlement which will be fair, just and satisfactory to all concerned. This decision of the Executive Council was transmitted to President Brown of the International Association of Machinists on June 19th. As an answer to the aforesaid communication, the following letter was received from President Brown, under date of July 1, 1946:

Washington, D. C., July 1, 1946.

Mr. William Green, President,
American Federation of Labor,
A. F. of L. Building,
Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir and Brother:

This will acknowledge receipt of your letter dated June 19 wherein you reply to the communication our Executive Council addressed February 6, 1946, to the American Federation of Labor Executive Council.

Recently, the writer appointed our General Secretary-Treasurer Eric Peterson, and General Vice-Presidents H. J. Carr, A. J. Hayes and H. F. Nickerson to represent our Association in any conferences that may be arranged with authorized representatives of the American Federation of Labor to endeavor to arrive at a satisfactory settlement of the disputes affecting our Association.

Therefore, I am referring your communication of June 19 to the above referred to Committee for further handling.

Sincerely and fraternally,

/s/ H. W. Brown,
International President

Following the receipt of this letter arrangements were made to hold a conference between the committee representing the International Association of Machinists and the officers of the American Federation of Labor and members of the Executive Council residing in Washington. Said conference was held at the headquarters of the American Federation of Labor on July 25, 1946. A free, open and frank discussion of the situation took place. It was the opinion of all who participated in the conference that some definite progress was made toward bringing about the reaffiliation of the International Association of Machinists with the American Federation of Labor. It was agreed that further conference between the committee representing the International Association of Machinists and the representatives of the American Federation of Labor would be held on some date which would be mutually convenient about the middle of September.

It is the earnest hope of the Executive Council that further progress will be made at the next meeting of the committees representing the International Association of Machinists and the American Federation of Labor.

Your committee is exceedingly sorry that this large, forceful group of trade unionists is temporarily not in the A. F. of L.

It is encouraging, however, to note that negotiations marked by some success have been conducted to effect the reaffiliation of this organization with the A. F. of L.

There are obviously strong differences of opinion regarding jurisdictional matters. Your committee submits that the proper way to settle these differences must ultimately be on the convention floor. We would urge, therefore, that our fellow workers in the Machinists take steps in their organization to bring them again soon into our family—properly, their family—so that as members they may plead their case on the floor of the convention, and as members approach our common problems.

We frankly state we need them and want them in our family, and we think they need us and we trust they will want to rejoin their family soon. The prospects are brighter now for such a reunion.

(1947, pp. 166, 427). The Executive Council submitted a report on efforts made during the preceding year to bring about reaffiliation of the International Association of Machinists with the A. F. of L. The convention committee which considered this subject submitted recommendations which were unanimously adopted as follows:

(P. 427) The Executive Council renders a detailed report of the special efforts made by its committee to achieve the reaffiliation of the International Association of Machinists with the American Federation of Labor. The committee of the Executive Council approached the matters in dispute between the American Federation of Labor and the International Association of Machinists carefully and sympathetically. It recognized the urgent need to have this great International Union return to the fold of our Federation at the earliest date. Accordingly, it conducted the negotiations in a friendly and fraternal spirit and offered to the International Association of Machinists substantial concessions, bringing the discussions far along toward a settlement. We commend the Executive Council and its committee for the judicious and statesmanlike manner in which it conducted these negotiations.

When final and complete agreement could not be reached, the committee representing the International Association of Machinists, after careful study, placed the views and proposals of the American Federation of Labor before the Executive Council of the International. Our proposals were then submitted to the membership of the International Association of Machinists for a referendum vote. The International's membership failed to accept these proposals by a small margin of votes.

This action we all in the American Federation of Labor deeply regret. When all organized labor is under concerted attack from anti-social forces, the need for solidarity in trade union ranks becomes imperative. Continued failure to settle past differences will not resolve them, but will only serve to create new differences. Continued absence of the Machinists from the ranks of the American Federation of Labor in this critical time can result only in serious harm to the entire trade union movement. We urge the International Association of Machinists to reconsider their action and re-enter the house of Labor at the earliest date, with confidence that a fair and just basis of accommodation on the jurisdictional question can and will be found.

(1948, pp. 238, 460) Res. 22 requested the officers of the A. F. of L. to "continue their efforts to bring about the reaffiliation of the International Association of Machinists."

(1949, p. 40) Executive Council requested to "take steps to invite the International Association of Machinists back to the House of Labor."

(P. 434) We have carefully considered this part of the Report and the exchange of letters having taken place. We rejoice in understandings and conclusions reached and in the assurance of President A. J. Hayes that these understandings and conclusions will be referred, for final confirmation, to the members of that organization with the recommendation of its officers and Executive Council that reaffiliation to the American Federation of Labor be favored and approved.

We commend the officers and members of the Executive Council for the splendid manner in which these negotiations have been carried on—for their patience, tolerance and sympathetic approach. We likewise commend the officers of the International Association of Machinists for recognition and response to the need of our time for unity of purpose and harmony of action in the field of labor and of labor organization.

We hope and trust the general membership of the International Association of Machinists, for whom we have always had the highest regard, will acquiesce, favor and approve the words and deeds of their officers and Executive Council and bring into early fruition the reaffiliation of this splendid organization.

(1951, p. 45) On January 1, 1951, the International Association of Machinists reaffiliated with the American Federation of Labor. It is now an integral part of our organized labor movement. Its membership numbers over 500,000.

This reaffiliation took place as the result of extended negotiations carried on between committees representing the American Federation of Labor and the International Association of Machinists. As reported to our Sixty-ninth Annual Convention which was held at Houston, Texas, in September, 1950, the Executive Council of the International Association of Machinists recommended reaffiliation and submitted the question of reaffiliation to a vote of the membership. The referendum proposal was submitted to the membership of the Machinists on October 25, 1950. The vote was overwhelmingly in favor of reaffiliation. This action of the membership of the International Association of Machinists must be interpreted as meaning that they not only desired reaffiliation with the American Federation of Labor, but were of the opinion that such reaffiliation would serve to promote their economic, social and industrial interests, and in addition would serve to promote trade union solidarity, to advance the common interests of the workers throughout the nation, and thus increase the influence and standing of the organized labor movement.

The importance of this development is reflected in the fact that the International Association of Machinists is one of the pioneer organizations which has long been established and has functioned over a long period of time. The Executive Council extends a hearty welcome home to the membership of the International Association of Machinists. We regard their reaffiliation as highly important and deeply significant.

(p. 409) We welcome the return of the International Association of Machinists to our family. Their reaffiliation means even more than a significant increase in membership; it means greater functional union within the trade union movement.

It brings back to our own family an old union with a glorious history. It assures to them and to us all a richer united effort to serve the common good. We genuinely rejoice at their return.

Machinists vs. Building Trades Department

(Jurisdiction)

(1941, pp. 248, 516) The convention considered resolution No. 16 introduced by delegates from the International Association of Machinists providing that it be

RESOLVED, That this convention declare null and void any and all decisions, orders or awards by the Building and Construction Trades Department or its officers, which aim to interfere, and are in conflict with, the trade rights and jurisdiction, the American Federation of Labor granted the members of the International Association of Machinists over the building, assembling, erecting, dismantling and repairing of machinery in machine shops, buildings, factories, or elsewhere where machinery may be used, and that no additional such decisions, orders or awards which interfere with the herein stated trade rights of the members of the International Association of Machinists shall be rendered by the Building and Construction Trades Department or officers thereof; and be it further

RESOLVED, That the President and Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor stand instructed to render every possible assistance in enforcing the intent of this decision.

In lieu of the aforementioned resolution, the convention after considerable discussion approved the report of the committee:

Concretely stated, and as developed in the discussions during the hearing on this resolution, the purport of this resolution is to define the authority of a Department of the Federation in matters of jurisdiction.

Your committee is of the opinion that where members of the Department in question have agreed that the Department may consider, define and determine conflicting claims of jurisdiction by such methods as they may approve, that such procedure is clearly within the discretion and authority of such Department. However in the event a ruling or decision thus rendered by the Department affects the jurisdictional right of an organization not affiliated to such Department, and not having previously agreed to such arrangement or procedure, direct or indirect, that such ruling or decision shall not be binding on a nonaffiliated organization to the Department. In other words the Department possesses no authority to render a decision in jurisdictional disputes, between an affiliated and nonaffiliated union to the Department, unless by agreement of all the unions involved. On the other hand the Department is within its authority to safeguard, protect and promote the jurisdictional rights of its affiliated unions.

(1942, p. 470) Resolutions 2, 3, and 4 of the 1942 convention all dealt with jurisdictional disputes between the International Association of Machinists and other A. F. of L. affiliates. The convention Committee on Resolutions in reporting on these resolutions made the following statement which was adopted by the convention after lengthy discussion:

"... these subjects were not properly before the convention at this time ... and that therefore the convention could not consider those three resolutions or the subjects pertaining to them."

The Council decision was based upon Section 12 of Article III of the A. F. of L. constitution which provides: "No grievance shall be considered by any convention that has been decided by a previous convention except upon the recommendation of the Executive Council, nor shall any grievance be considered where the parties thereto have not previously held a conference and attempted to adjust the same themselves."

The Council found that the grievances contained in the three resolutions aforementioned had been decided at the 1941 convention; no recommendation had been made by the Executive Council to the 1942 convention. The constitutional question having been raised, the Executive Council ruled that under the prohibitive restrictions of the constitution, they could not be considered at this (1942) convention.

was brought to the convention in the form of a resolution. The Committee on Adjustment, to which the dispute was referred, reported that the two organizations at interest had reached an agreement as provided for in the original agreement between them dated October 25, 1923.

(1942, p. 62) The dispute between the named organizations continued despite compliance with action of 1941 convention which directed that conferences be held in an attempt to adjust the controversy.

Pursuant to these instructions, the Executive Council held conferences with the representatives of the International Association of Machinists and the Amalgamated Association of Street and Electric Railway Employees of America. In fact, the controversy was considered in some form at every meeting the Executive Council has held during the past year. The last conference was held at the meeting of the Executive Council which convened in Chicago, Ill., beginning August 4, 1942. Representatives of both organizations met with the Executive Council and all efforts possible were made to compose differences, to promote an understanding and to reach a settlement of the jurisdictional disputes existing between these two organizations.

The Executive Council sincerely regrets it failed to bring about a settlement. It was impossible to find a basis of accommodation. Appeals were made to the representatives of both organizations to settle their differences and to establish harmony and cooperation.

(1942, p. 523) This jurisdictional problem again came to the attention of the convention through a resolution proposing to outline jurisdictions. The whole subject was again referred to the Executive Council with the request that it continue its efforts to bring about an adjustment.

Machinists—Engineers (Jurisdiction)

(1944, p. 333) At a meeting of the Executive Council held in Chicago, Illinois, August 21, 1944, consideration was given to a jurisdictional dispute which arose between the International Association of Machinists and the International Union of Operating Engineers regarding the making of necessary repairs on machines operated by members of the International Union of Operating Engineers in order to keep said machines in operation.

A committee was appointed by direction of the Executive Council for the purpose of meeting with the official representatives of the two organizations directly concerned and directly interested for the purpose of working out a solution of the jurisdictional problem and with instructions that said committee report back to the members of the Executive Council.

The committee reported to the Executive Council that it was agreed between the representatives of both unions involved that the dispute was "Whether the Engineers or Machinists would make the repairs on machinery operated by the Engineers at the site of operation." Because it was impossible to bring about an agreement between representatives of the Operating Engineers and the representatives of the Machinists upon the question in dispute, the committee recommended to the Executive Council "that the jurisdiction over all repairs necessary to keep the machine in operation on machines operated by the members of the International Union of Operating Engineers on the site of the operation belongs to the International Union of Operating Engineers." The recommendation made by the committee was adopted by the Executive Council.

Mahon, William D. (Tribute)

the attention of the 63rd annual convention of the American Federation of Labor, we now pause to pay tribute to William D. Mahon, president of the Amalgamated Association of Street and Electric Railway Employees of America, on the occasion of his jubilee anniversary which marks his fiftieth year as president of that magnificent union.

The Federation concurs in the words of our great American poet, Carl Sandburg, in describing this sterling leader of labor: "It would take a man-sized book to tell how and why Bill Mahon is one of the figures to give meaning to the cause of labor and the mystery of democracy. His integrity and sagacity, his fidelity to the plain folks from whom he came, his modest needs and humble ways of living, are worth looking at in this time of world crisis when the war and the peace after the war are to bring such hard tests of labor and democracy."

Bill Mahon spent all his adult years in a ceaseless, relentless struggle against economic and social injustice. And today, as in the early years of his struggle his watchword is, "Freedom Through Organization."

In the last decade of the nineteenth century the lot of the street car workers of America was pitiful indeed. They labored from twelve to eighteen hours a day and for this they were paid from ten to fifteen cents an hour. They were inadequately fed, they lived in slums, their families suffered the social indignities of poverty, want and squalor. They were scorned by the press, sneered at by the politicians and ignored by the general public.

Among the first to work for the organization of these men was Bill Mahon who, together with the immortal Samuel Gompers, decided to organize an international union of street car workers. In 1892 at Indianapolis, Indiana, such a union was formed. The organization was immediately subjected to hostility of the most vicious kind; men were bribed, detectives and spotters were employed against active members of the union, violence was used and provoked on the slightest pretext. But Bill Mahon and his associates worked ceaselessly and never faltered for a moment, although the early days of the union were frequently black indeed.

Today, Bill Mahon and his early co-workers have been amply repaid, not in terms of personal reward but in the satisfaction of a job well done. Members of the Amalgamated Association today receive from eighty cents to a dollar and twenty-five cents an hour, they are protected against discrimination, they enjoy the rights of seniority; they live as all American workers should live—in decent comfort, worthy of their hire, providing for the comfort, health and education of their families. All these things—and more—the street car men of America and Canada owe in great measure to the labors of William D. Mahon and those who worked at his side.

Although all his life Bill Mahon has been humble and modest, honors came to him at frequent intervals. In 1916 he attended the British Trades Union Congress as a fraternal delegate of the Federation. He was elected vice-president of the American Federation of Labor in January, 1917. Shortly afterwards he was appointed a member of the Federal Electric Railway Commission, created by President Wilson to investigate and recommend a plan for the rehabilitation of the street railway industry. He resigned as vice-president of the Federation in 1923, but twelve years later, in 1935, was appointed vice-president.

We have merely been able to sketch a few of the outstanding achievements in the life of this tireless, outstanding citizen and leader of labor. Much has been said and written about Bill Mahon. Officials, delegates and guests to the 63rd annual convention observed with regret that, due to ill-health, he was unable to be with us. To the many expressions of admiration, love, and respect which have been voiced on the floor and in the corridors of the convention, the Federation now adds this official and yet warm tribute to an absent colleague.

God grant him added years of fruitfulness, not only for the sake of the splendid union which he heads, but also for the sake of all of us who have been privileged to know him!

Maintenance of Way—Building Trades

(Jurisdiction Dispute)

(1951, p. 47) The jurisdictional dispute which has existed for some length of time between the Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way Employees and organizations affiliated with the Building and Construction Trades Department has developed into an acute stage. Efforts have been put forth by the Executive Council to bring about a settlement of this controversy, but no progress has been made and no settlement has been reached.

The records show that this controversy has been dealt with by conventions of the American Federation of Labor and the Executive Council over a long period of time.

During the past year the officers of the Building and Construction Trades Department made vigorous protest to the Executive Council against the Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way Employees organization, charging it with trespassing upon the jurisdiction of Building and Construction Trades Unions in the construction and erection of buildings on railroad properties and railroad rights of way.

The Executive Council put forth

special efforts to settle the controversy at its meeting held in Chicago during the month of May, 1951. It failed to promote or reach an agreement because of the uncompromising position taken by representatives of the Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way Employees. As a result, the Executive Council decided that the jurisdiction of the Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way Employees is not building construction, but is the original jurisdiction of the organization when chartered and as later modified by agreements it signed with various segments of the Building and Construction Trades and which were approved by the 1922 Convention.

The Executive Council, therefore, submits this jurisdictional dispute to the Convention for consideration and action.

(P. 442) Decision of Executive Council (May, 1951) in Chicago, concurred in.

Management Labor Policy Committee (Nat'l) (see: Employment Security).

Manganese Deposits—(1935, p. 587) The A. F. of L. favors government acquisition of the manganese deposits of the U.S. of America.

Manpower (War) (also see: War Production; Conscription)

(1943, p. 8) In his keynote speech to the convention the President of the A. F. of L. said "A complete analysis will be made of the war manpower situation. We will make a survey ourselves and we will endeavor to promote better utilization of the available manpower and womanpower of our nation, because we are opposed to a resort to force or the enactment of forcible measures to compel free American workers to do things against their will."

(National Service Legislation)

(1943, p. 134) There has been consideration of national service legislation. We have opposed such action on the grounds that: 1. The War Manpower Commission has broad powers under its Executive Order which it has never fully used. 2. Employees and employers everywhere are anxious to cooperate with a voluntary program that is adequate. 3. The possibility for improvement, through voluntary cooperative action on the part of management and Labor have hardly been tapped, and until the full possibilities, under the voluntary program have been exhausted, there is no indication for the need for national service legislation.

(Defense)

(1943, pp. 128, 529) The E. C. Report contained a lengthy survey of estimated manpower needs in the national defense program. The convention committee report on the several parts of this survey was unanimously approved:

The Report of the Executive Council indicates the estimated need for manpower, with the labor requirements of essential industries and the estimated national labor force up to January 1944. At that time we shall reach the peak of 65,900,000. The definite effort to use all available personnel is indicated by the decrease in unemployment, gainful employment of women, return of older workers to the labor market, importation of foreign workers, the training programs, the employment of children and soldiers, etc.

We highly commend the organization of representative management-labor committees by districts and areas, with the machinery to appeal to the highest authority. The Administrators have, however, encountered difficulties when they have attempted to bypass this machinery to set up national determination of production urgency to fix local manpower regulations, and squeezing out local civil industries and services. This proposal also puts determination of labor priorities outside the management-labor committee.

Manpower is the human force necessary to carry out production plans. Such human force is inseparable from the personalities of free human beings just as manpower is inseparable from the managerial and material aspects of production. The key to manpower is consent of the individuals, while the key to production is cooperation.

The War Manpower Commission initiated a program based on consent and cooperation and the results were good. But with the development of stringencies the interests unfavorable to democratic cooperation and local determination of plans began to use centralization of policy-making with orders to localities.

Your committee recommends that we urge the maintenance of voluntary, decentralized administrative machinery and that study be given to improving this kind of machinery rather than to the development of compulsory methods or a National Service Act.

The causes of labor turnover have been lack of adequate housing, transportation, stabilization of wages within industries, between industries and localities, inadequate stores and services to sustain community needs, fatigue caused by long hours and delay in transportation, inadequate medical services, inadequate schools, separation from families, etc. Workers cannot continue to live and work indefinitely under conditions that needlessly undermine their vitality. Efforts should be directed to correct these causes. When the communities and plants are more suitable for workers, then emphasis can safely be directed to mobilize workers in response to needs. Unions are the most dependable and experienced agencies through which to accomplish this end. U. S. Employment Service should welcome trade union cooperation.

Imported Workers

We recommend further that when foreign workers are imported that, in addition to the safeguards necessary to assure them decent living conditions, safe working conditions and fair compensation, there should be created a commission of wage earners of the country concerned and the United States, to act as a supervisory body to which the imported workers can appeal grievances not otherwise adjusted. Such a commission should inquire into reports of abuses of foreign workers such as already have come from states where Mexicans have been imported.

Prisoners of War

We are deeply concerned as citizens as well as workers over the employment of prisoners of war. Such employment involves the welfare of our soldiers who may become prisoners in enemy countries as well as conditions of work for our citizens here and the reputation of our nation for practices of fair dealing with all men.

Our State Department as well as the War Department should have a part in formulating policies to be followed with respect to prisoners of war.

We recommend that the President of the United States should be asked to create a commission to study this subject and recommend policies to safeguard all interests. Such a commission should include a representative of the State Department, the War Department, but should be mainly civilian with adequate representation of labor, management, and farmers.

The Geneva Convention on prisoners of war stipulates only that prisoners of war shall not be employed on projects contributing directly to the conduct of war, but does not provide for the protection of hostages or deal with employment of prisoners in privately owned undertakings. The way that our country may deal with prisoners of war becomes the justification for similar policies to our soldiers who are their prisoners.

No Compulsory Service for Private Gain

So far the Management-Labor Committee has been fairly successful in keeping manpower a cooperative undertaking. Field Order No. 3 provides for the right of appeal on any order or regulation to management-labor representatives at the next level. While individuals and labor representatives have not always taken advantage of their right to appeal, that right is available to all who believe their rights are invaded and it is only a matter of becoming aware of their rights.

Regulation No. 7 specifically provides that the Manpower Administration shall make the maximum use of existing hiring channels: "To the maximum degree consistent with this regulation and with the objectives of employment stabilization programs, local initiative and cooperative efforts shall be encouraged and utilized and maximum use made of existing hiring channels such as private employers, labor organizations, professional organizations, schools, colleges, technical institutions and government agencies."

Under this provision union locals are authorized to enter into agreements with the local employment office so as to integrate the work with that of manpower, or international unions may make agreements with the U. S. Employment Service.

Under the optional provisions of Reg. 7, regional and area manpower directors, together with Management-Labor Manpower Committees may include in their local stabilization programs planned to meet their special needs, provisions designed to protect individuals from loss of seniority or other reemployment rights to promote effective utilization of manpower by employers, to afford individuals a greater measure of protection against arbitrary discharge, etc. To guide area and regional manpower committees in protecting workers against undue and unjust hardships the national Management-Labor Manpower Committee worked out a series of recommended provisions. These recommendations have been sent to all labor manpower representatives and may be obtained from national headquarters.

Efforts have been made to circumvent this democratic machinery by giving decisions upon labor priorities to a committee independent of it. According to the West Coast Priority Order, decisions upon production urgency were to be made in Washington and a local labor priority committee would adjust labor priorities to carry out production urgency locally. The Labor Priorities Committees were to consist of representatives of the contracting Federal agencies. The American Federation of Labor representative insisted that all labor priority orders must be referred to management-labor committees for consideration in advance of promulgation.

There are powerful interests seeking to discredit efforts to solve manpower by voluntary cooperation as an excuse for the enactment of a compulsory service law. Organized labor and industrial management must redouble efforts to make cooperation a success. We know that manpower resources are far from exhausted, that labor utilization in many private plants and government institutions is inefficient and very wasteful, that estimates on which manpower policies are based are far from exact. We know also that no outside authority could be entrusted with control of human lives without the most meticulous specification and protection of rights and assurance of fair conditions and under most necessitous emergency. Even then involuntary servitude is not justified.

surveyed in a special section under this title in the Report of the Executive Council. The report stated, in part:

Availability of qualified labor has been, in general, sufficient to meet the requirements of the national defense program during the past year. Nevertheless, many serious manpower problems have arisen and have been dealt with successfully through voluntary action. Experience since the beginning of the present defense program has proved the effectiveness of the voluntary machinery in meeting the nation's manpower needs.

Throughout the past year high levels of employment have been maintained for the country as a whole and on the national basis unemployment has been kept to a low level. Within this general picture, however, two contradictory developments have stood out. One has been the development of labor shortages in certain areas despite the fact that no general labor shortages have been felt. In a number of new plants located in out-of-the-way areas, temporary shortages of workers of certain skills have been experienced. In such areas also recruitment has been hampered by the inadequacy of housing and community facilities, as well as the absence of essential services such as day nurseries, which would make it possible for women workers to accept defense employment. Some shortages have also been felt in a few scientific, professional, and highly-skilled metal-working occupations and in certain skills in the electronics industry and in foundries. Wherever our membership was affected, our affiliates have taken effective action to help overcome such shortages.

On the other hand, in a number of areas, unemployment reached serious proportions. In some of these areas joblessness was traceable to dislocations resulting from the defense effort. In a number of cases extended unemployment was due to plant shutdowns necessitated by the conversion from civilian to defense production. In others, work was curtailed or suspended due to the critical shortages of materials. In still others, it was clear that business firms were taking advantage of tax benefits, as well as local inducements, to shift their defense production away from established plants to little-developed areas where they could maintain lower labor standards. In the case of the building trades there was substantial unemployment last winter in several localities, notably in New York City, due to a combination of factors related to the defense program. There was also substantial unemployment and part-time employment in the textile, apparel, shoe and related industries affecting localities where such industries were concentrated.

All these developments were taking place against the background of increasing demand for manpower throughout the land. The very effect of quick military mobilization bringing our armed forces to over 3,500,000 within a short period of time served to drain the supply to industrial employment, especially younger men. By maintaining the 3,700,000 under arms in the years immediately ahead, the nation's manpower supply will continue to be taxed.

To deal with all aspects of the manpower problem on a voluntary basis a network of labor-management manpower committees on the national, regional and area basis was provided. The program as a whole was guided by the Director of Defense Mobilization with primary responsibility for initiating and carrying out manpower policies resting with the Department of Labor and its Defense Manpower Administration.

Full participation of organized labor at the policy-making level was assured through a 14-man National Labor-Management Manpower Policy Committee which met regularly twice a month to advise the Director of Defense Mobilization and the Secretary of Labor on all major manpower issues. . . .

Although it was becoming increasingly apparent that management members were intent on either preventing significant action by the Committee or greatly diluting the necessary policies, the Committee has succeeded in making a valuable contribution to the national defense and at the same time keep manpower policies and programs on a voluntary basis.

Defense mobilization has given rise to many important developments vitally affecting the wage earners of the nation. To help devise practical programs to deal with these problems, a network of labor-management manpower committees has been established by areas and regions throughout the country with equal participation of labor and management. Guided by the national Labor-Management Manpower Policy Committee in Washington, this system of direct participation by worker and employer representatives in the shaping of our manpower policies has become an instrument for a truly voluntary manpower program. It has provided a means for labor participation in policy decisions, as well as a source of information to labor regarding current manpower developments. At the same time, it has given an opportunity for employers and unions alike to contribute to the national mobilization effort through their own institutions.

We commend the American Federation of Labor representatives serving on labor-management committees for their contribution to this activity, and urge them to report to the membership they represent important current developments. We hope that in the future these committees will become a source of effective guidance to the government agencies concerned and will also provide a basis of labor-management cooperation in programs that will contribute to sound employment practices and develop future employment opportunities.

(1954, p. 102) Efforts were again made this year, as in 1953, to amend the appropriations bill for the Defense Department so as to kill the operation of Defense Manpower Policy No. 4 under which special arrangements are provided for firms located in areas with heavy unemployment to obtain government contracts. While this policy has proved only moderately successful in bringing additional business to these areas, the A. F. of L. has supported Defense Manpower Policy No. 4 since this policy at least recognizes the necessity for distributing government contracts to help reduce unemployment.

(p. 541) Defense Manpower Policy No. 4 is the Federal Government policy which gives firms in areas of heavy unemployment preference in bidding for government contracts.

While this policy has not proved too effective, and during the past year has actually been weakened, it does stand today as the government's only specific program for placing additional government contracts in these labor surplus areas. As such it deserves the support of organized labor.

The A. F. of L. was successful in defeating efforts to have this policy repealed by Congressional action.

Foreign Workers

(1943, p. 132) Since the summer of 1942, there has been pressure from various industries and from agricultural employers to meet the manpower shortage in certain sections of the country by importing foreign workers, chiefly from the Bahamas and from the Republic of Mexico. The management and labor committees, as a whole, have consistently taken the position that the War Manpower Commission should not sanction the importation of foreign workers except where it can be shown positively that there are no American workers available, and in no case should the foreign workers be imported except under provisions that definitely provide that their employment will not undermine the wage standards or the working conditions of American workers. The procedures that have been worked out now provide for such guarantees.

(1944, p. 576) Another departure from basic policy appears in the various proposals — some of which have been consummated — to meet stringent manpower needs arising from poor working conditions or from the low wages prevailing in some occupations, or from both by the importation of foreign workers. We recommend that the War Manpower Commission be called upon to establish a policy under which the importation of foreign workers would be permitted only after every other means, including wage adjustment, have been exhausted in meeting manpower requirements, and then only on approval of the accredited representatives of the other workers in the establishment in which they are to be employed.

Hiring Controlled

(1943, p. 134) Under the terms of the Executive Order No. 9279 of December 5, the chairman of the War Manpower Commission was authorized to require in any labor market area where he deemed it would contribute to the prosecution of the war, that all hiring should be done through the U. S. Employment Service. In the development of the national standards implementing this program, in the critical labor market areas, through incorporating provisions for central control of hiring in stabilization plans, we have used the inclusion of a clause to provide for the maximum use of existing private hiring channels, such as trade unions, private industry, etc. Accordingly, such a clause was inserted in the national standards to cover referrals of workers by business agents of unions.

Prisoners (War)

(1943, p. 133) It is now reported that there are some 60,000 Italian prisoners of war in continental United States. Under the terms of a War Department circular issued some months ago, officers in charge of prison camps were authorized to make arrangements for the use of these prisoners in private employment, subject only to the terms of the Geneva Convention of 1929 and to the security regulations of the War Department. Under the terms of this circular, a number of incidents arose in which prisoners of war were allocated to private employers at wage rates and under working conditions which were substandard. Our Management-Labor Policy Committee has recently taken action which will provide that prisoners of war shall not be used in competition with free American labor and shall not be employed except at a cost to the employer at least equal to the cost of employing free American labor. We have pressed for the employment of these prisoners under conditions that will assure the maximum of good treatment to American soldiers who are captured by the Axis forces. We have also expressed the view that they should be employed chiefly on public work projects other than public building and construction work.

(1944, pp. 83, 536, 555) Two resolutions (Res. 126, 155) were submitted for consideration by the Convention, recommending that the Executive Council be directed to register a vigorous protest with President Roosevelt as Commander-in-Chief of our armed forces against the continuation of the use of prisoners of war for manpower purposes by the War Department, and

That the Executive Council insist upon an administrative policy that will protect International Unions against unfair competition in any corps area caused by the use of prisoners of war in competition with members of the union.

The convention was in accord with the purpose of the resolutions and they were referred to the Executive Council for consideration and action.

(P. 576) The report of the convention committee under the title of "Manpower" contained the following:

We note certain departures from the voluntary manpower system which have crept into the program of the War Manpower Commission. One of these is the acceptance of Prisoner-of-War labor as a supplement to the use of free labor. While we approve of employment for prisoners of war as salutary in meeting the desires and needs of the prisoners to escape enforced idleness, we do not approve their being employed in competition with free labor nor in any way which adversely affects the wages, conditions or employment of free labor. We therefore recommend that the War Manpower Commission be urged to discontinue the employment of Prisoner-of-War labor by private employers altogether, and to provide employment for Prisoners-of-War only on such public projects as will not conflict with the employment of free labor.

Soldiers Furloughed

(1943, p. 133) There has been from some quarters increasing pressure to use soldiers furloughed from the army to meet manpower shortages, particularly in agriculture and in non-ferrous metal mining. With respect to these proposals, we have taken a vigorous position to the effect that soldiers should only be used where there was clear evidence that an emergency existed and that no other civilian labor was available. We have also taken the position that when used, members of the armed forces should be paid the full prevailing rate for work of a similar nature in the area where they are employed, so that their employment does not tend to undermine the standards of working conditions for civilian workers. Procedures have now been worked out effectuating these principles. As a result, the requests for the use of furloughed soldiers have declined, but in some genuinely critical situations, they are being utilized. They are being used with particular effectiveness in non-ferrous metal mines of the West. Their employment in each case, however, is voluntary on the part of the soldier and his placement is worked out in cooperation with the U. S. Employment Service and representatives of the labor unions which are the accredited collective bargaining agencies for the mines in which the soldier is to be employed. This employment is helping to meet a situation which is very critical to the entire war production program.

Emergency Control

(1944, p. 245) The E. C. report contained a lengthy report on the work of the War Manpower Commission, including special subsections on matters of direct and vital concern to the workers. It was pointed out that on August 4, 1944, Director of War Mobilization James F. Byrnes issued a directive "not in harmony with the voluntary program" announced as Government practice:

On August 4, 1944, the Director of War Mobilization issued a manpower directive which, though intended to meet the particularly urgent manpower situations existing in a limited number of critical industries, included provisions which in the opinion of the Management-Labor Policy Committee were not in harmony with the voluntary program. The committee felt particularly that the reference to compulsions contained in this directive threatened the support which had been voluntarily given to effective and operating manpower programs in many areas. Consequently on September 6, the members of the Committee submitted to the Chairman of the War Manpower Commission a series of recommendations. The Committee recommended that the Chairman request the Director of War Mobilization to clarify his position with respect to the use of compulsion and at the same time to make clear the over-all policy under which the Commission could develop programs designed to meet the specific requirements of the few critical industries.

These recommendations were adopted and resulted in the issuance of a "clarifying statement" from Mr. Byrnes and an announcement by the Chairman of the War Manpower Commission to the effect that resort to sanctions and compulsion would only be made in rare cases of refusal to cooperate with a program generally supported by Management and Labor in a locality. He announced at the same time that controls over the free movement of labor would be relaxed just as soon as their wartime necessity ceased to exist.

(See also: Employment Service; Job Freezing)

(1942, p. 200) The Manpower Commission was created by Executive Order on April 18, 1941. Simultaneously with the Executive Order creating the Manpower Commission, two of what had been the main functions of the Labor Division were transferred to the new Commission—labor supply and war training.

The Commission has the following responsibilities:

1. To formulate plans and programs and establish basic national policies to assure the most effective mobilization and maximum utilization of the nation's manpower in the prosecution of the war; and issue such policy and operating directives as may be necessary thereto.
2. To estimate the requirements of manpower for industry; review all other estimates of needs for military, agricultural, and civilian manpower; and direct the several departments and agencies of the Government as to the proper allocation of available manpower.

3. Determine basic policies for, and take such other steps as are necessary to coordinate the collection and compilation of labor market data by Federal departments and agencies.
4. To establish policies and prescribe regulations governing all Federal programs relating to the recruitment, vocational training and placement of workers to meet the needs of industry and agriculture.
5. To prescribe basic policies governing the filling of the Federal Government's requirements for manpower, excluding those of the military and naval forces, and issue such operating directives as may be necessary thereto.
6. To formulate legislative programs designed to facilitate the most effective mobilization and utilization of the manpower of the country, and with the approval of the President, recommend such legislation as may be necessary for this purpose.

The Commission has twelve regional boards on each of which is a representative of the U. S. Employment Service, the Training Division, the Civil Service, the Army, and the Navy. In each locality one person represents manpower, and there is a local Labor Supply Committee consisting of equal representation of Labor and of Management.

The Chairman of the Manpower Commission on May 25, 1942, issued Order No. 1, creating its Management-Labor Policy Committee, which was authorized to consider and recommend to the chairman matters of major policy, to initiate studies and formulate policies as well as consider those referred to it by the chairman. . . .

The Chairman of the Manpower

Commission assured the President of the American Federation of Labor that the Management-Labor Committee was co-equal with the Commission and that no action would be taken without the approval of the Committee. This assurance is doubly important in view of the great power given to the Commission—power which would amount to control over their work lives. The agency is wise in giving to representatives of Labor and employers a voice in deciding policies and in setting up a nationwide system of representative committees by districts and localities to which appeal may be taken from decisions of administrators carrying out policies of the Commission.

This organization is applying the fundamental principles of democracy in first trying to get voluntary cooperation and when orders must be given developing them in accord with the experience and judgment of those concerned.

As the War Production Board has responsibility for war production, the Manpower Commission has responsibility for the best possible use of our citizenry for the needs of war and the civilian population.

(Management-Labor Policy Committee)

(1943, p. 131) The War Manpower Commission was created by the President on April 18, 1942, by Executive Order No. 9139. On May 25, 1942, the chairman of the War Manpower Commission, issued an order establishing the Management-Labor Policy Committee. This committee was given a new status on December 5, 1942, when in Executive Order No. 9279, the President provided that the chairman of the War Manpower Commission should appoint a Management-Labor Policy Committee, which provided that he shall consult with the members thereof in carrying out his responsibilities. This Executive Order also transferred the Selective Service System to the War Manpower Commission.

In March, 1943, upon the voluntary suggestion of the members of this committee, seven spokesmen for Labor, Industry, and Agriculture conferred with the chairman on the subject of the reorganization of the Management-Labor Policy Committee. In accordance with the suggestions made at that time, the committee was reorganized.

(1944, pp. 238, 575) The report of the Executive Council on this subject is in two sections: (1) a review of Manpower and Production Achievements, and (2) an appraisal of the current situation with respect to Manpower needs and with respect to the policies and program of the War Manpower Commission.

The record set forth in the first section is an eloquent testimony to the production achievement of American labor. This section further indicates that the various phases of manpower requirements that have during the past months been critical have, for the most part, been satisfactorily met. This points to the conclusion that though there remain certain critical manpower needs in relation to the war production program, they are not essentially different from those needs which have been satisfactorily met before and without recourse to compulsory labor legislation.

We are of the firm conviction that with the continued cooperation of organized labor and industrial management with government agencies, these problems too can be solved. We therefore recommend the renewed endorsement of the voluntary manpower program carried out under the provision for participation of labor and management on the National Management-Labor Policy Committee in the War Manpower Commission and the regional and area war manpower committees.

A study of the record of the National Management-Labor Policy Committee indicates clearly the quality of the contribution made to the program of this important war agency by the President of the American Federation of Labor and his alternate. The representatives of the Federation have stood four-square for voluntary principles as the basis for our manpower program and have led the opposition to all efforts to substitute compulsion.

We recommend an expression of appreciation of the services of these representatives with instructions to continue their support of voluntary principles. . . .

A . . . departure from basic policy appears in the various proposals—some of which have been consummated—to meet stringent manpower needs arising from poor working conditions or from the low wages prevailing in some occupations, or from both by the importation of foreign workers. We recommend that the War Manpower Commission be called upon to establish a policy under which the importation of foreign workers would be permitted only after every other means, including wage adjustment, have been exhausted in meeting manpower requirements, and then only on approval of the accredited representatives of the other workers in the establishment in which they are to be employed.

Maritime

Legislation (Ship Construction)—(1940, pp. 71-2, 389) Efforts to suspend provisions of the 8-hour law on work covered by contracts of the Maritime Commission for ship construction were introduced to "expedite national defense." The A. F. of L. intervened and succeeded in having the following inserted in the contracts:

That the wages of every laborer and mechanic employed by any contractor or subcontractor engaged in the performance of any such contract shall be computed on a basic rate of 8 hours per day and 40 hours per week and work in excess of 8 hours per day or 40 hours per week shall be permitted upon compensation for all hours worked in excess of 8 hours per day or 40 hours per week at not less than one and one-half times the basic rate of pay.

Nothing in this Act shall be construed to modify any contracts between management and labor in shipyards which provide for conditions more favorable to labor than the minimum provisions as to hours per day and hours per week and for overtime provided in this Act.

(Construction Loans)

(1940, pp. 93, 408) The A. F. of L. supported bills authorizing the Maritime Commission to make loans on more liberal terms for the construction of commercial fishing vessels. Members of the Atlantic Fishermen's Union were faced with increasing unemployment since the Navy Dept. had acquired, or planned to acquire, a number of fishing vessels, trawlers, draggers, which had been used in the New England fisheries.

(Unemployment Insurance)

(1940, pp. 92, 408. When H.R. 9798 was introduced certain omissions from the coverage of the bill made it objectionable to A. F. of L. affiliates, as likely to interfere with the operation of union hiring halls. Amendments to meet this objection were proffered by A. F. of L. representatives. At time of convention no report had been made on the bill.

(Child Labor on American Vessels)

(1940, pp. 92, 408) A. F. of L. favored passage of legislation implementing provisions of Draft Convention No. 58 (Int'l Labor Conference) providing that minors under 15 years of age shall not be employed on vessels. Attention was directed to the fact that "the only Federal law requiring a minimum age for child labor in the American Merchant Marine was enacted in 1872 and provided that boys who are to be apprenticed to sea service must have obtained the age of twelve." Subsequent Act of Congress dated June 25, 1936, provided "that no boy shall be shipped unless he meets the physical qualifications contained in regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of Commerce." Under those regulations a boy of any age may enter sea service as long as he produces a certificate from a reputable physician "that he is qualified physically." Hearings were held in House Comm. on Merchant Marine and Fisheries in February, 1940, but at time of 1940 convention of A. F. of L. committee had not reported the bill.

(Waiving Navigation and Inspection Laws)—(1942, p. 151) The 77th Congress, prior to our country's declaration of war upon the Axis nations, passed a number of measures modifying or suspending navigation and marine inspection laws during the emergency declared by the President. All these modifications or suspensions will be continued in full force and effect until six months after the termination of the present war shall have been proclaimed. On January 16, 1942, Senator Van Nuys introduced a bill, S. 2208, known as the Second War Powers Act. After brief hearings, in executive sessions only, S. 2208 was enacted into law and approved on March 27, 1942 (Public Law 507). Title V of this Act is a blanket authorization to waive compliance with any and all navigation and inspection laws enacted since the birth of our Republic. It reads as follows:

"Sec. 501. The head of each department or agency responsible for the administration of the navigation and vessel inspection laws is directed to waive compliance with such laws upon the request of the Secretary of the Navy or the Secretary of War to the extent deemed necessary in the conduct of the war by the officer making the request. The head of such department or agency is authorized to waive compliance with such laws to such extent and in such manner and upon such terms as he may prescribe either upon his own initiative or upon the written recommendation of the head of any other government agency whenever he deems that such action is necessary in the conduct of the war."

(Marine War Risk Insurance)—H.R. 6550 (Public Law 482) extends for six months after the end of the war, the Act to Amend the Merchant Marine Act of 1936, which provides marine war-risk insurance. The law repeals the provision that a vessel or its officers and crew carrying contraband cannot be insured. Approved March 6, 1942.

H.R. 6554 (Public Law 523) enlarges the powers and duties of the Maritime Commission with respect to insurance provided for the waterborne commerce of the United States, authorizes the Commission to insure the officers and members of the crew of American and certain foreign vessels against loss of life, personal injury, loss of personal effects or detention by an enemy. Approved April 11, 1942.

(Medals for Merchant Seamen)—House Joint Resolution 241 (Public Law 524) directs the Maritime Commission to provide and award a suitable medal to each person who in the American Merchant Marine, on or after September 3, 1939, has distinguished himself, or during the war distinguishes himself, by outstanding conduct or service in the line of duty. The Chairman of the Maritime Commission has announced that a famous sculptor and outstanding medal designer, had been requested to create a design for such a medal. This is the first time such recognition has been extended to the seamen of the American Merchant Marine. Approved April 11, 1942.

(Subversive Activities Among Marine Radio Operators) — H.R. 5074 (Public Law 351) was introduced June 17, 1941, because of certain evidence adduced at hearings that a number of . . . marine radio operators have subversive tendencies. The Communications Act of 1934 does not authorize the Federal Communications Commission to suspend a license because of subversive activities. This bill passed the House on July 22, 1941, and remained in Senate Commerce Committee until December 8, the day after the attack on Pearl Harbor. As amended by the Senate, the bill gave that authority with the right of appeal for any person so charged, and promptly enacted into law, it is unlawful to employ any person or to permit any person to serve as radio operator aboard any vessel if the Secretary of the Navy (1) has disapproved such employment for any specified voyage, route, or area of operation, and (2) has notified the master of the vessel of such disapproval prior to the departure thereof.

(P. 487) Under the subject Maritime Legislation, the Executive Council has reported upon:

Waiving Navigation and Inspection Laws

Marine War Risk Insurance, H. R. 6550

H. R. 6554 (Public Law 523)
Medals for Merchant Seamen

Subversive Activities Among Marine Radio Operators.

Under the subhead "Waiving Navigation and Inspection Laws" your committee notes a measure was enacted waiving certain laws during the period of the war.

Your committee recommends that the Executive Council be requested to see that all such modifications of existing laws be promptly made null and void immediately after the declaration of peace.

We note with approval under the subhead "Marine War Risk Insurance" that the Act of 1936 is to be extended for six months after the end of the war, and that officers and crews carrying contraband can be insured.

We note "H. R. 6554" enlarges the powers of the Maritime Commission with respect to insurance provided for the water borne commerce of the United States.

Under the subhead "Medals for Merchant Seamen" the Council reports that the Chairman of the Maritime Commission is the director, and authorized by Congress to provide with proper design, a medal for the seamen of the merchant marine who have distinguished themselves by outstanding conduct or service in line of duty.

We note with gratification that this is the first time in the history of our country where such proper recognition has been given to the seamen of the American Merchant Marine.

Under the subhead "Subversive Activities Among Marine Radio Operators," we note the Executive Council calls attention to the previous employment of . . . marine radio operators who had been engaged in subversive activities, or had shown subversive tendencies.

The Communications Act of 1934 did not authorize the Federal Communications Commission to suspend the radio operators likewise because of subversive activities. After December 8, 1941, Congress enacted a measure making it unlawful to employ any person, or permit any person, to serve as radio operator aboard any vessel if the Secretary of the Navy had disapproved such employment.

Your committee commends the actions of Congress on this matter, for nowhere is it more dangerous to the Nation's interest to have any one but loyal men than in the radio room aboard each ship. None but loyal Americans should be employed as radio operators, and particularly during a period of war.

Your committee is justified because of some instances which have occurred, in expressing the hope that radio operators who have been suspended because of known subversive activities, will not be permitted employment as radio operators during the period of the war.

Maritime Trades Department Establishment Authorized

(1939, p. 449) Res. 14, calling for the ultimate establishment of a Maritime Trades Department, was referred to the Executive Council "so that it may take up the subject matter of the resolution with the international organizations interested."

(1942, p. 65) Pursuant to instructions of 1941 convention communications were directed to the organizations concerned to determine whether they favored the establishment of a Marine Trades Department. Replies were equally divided between those favoring and those disapproving the formation of such a Department. It was therefore, deemed inadvisable to form such a Department within the A. F. of L.

(1946, p. 84) The convention which was held in Seattle, Washington, in October 1941, approved the purpose of two resolutions which were introduced in the convention calling for the creation within the American Federation of Labor of a maritime trades council or department and directed that the representatives of the national and international unions involved in the formation of such a council or department hold conferences for the purposes of giving consideration to the subject.

Steps were taken following the adjournment of the Seattle convention to create a Maritime Trades Council or Department within the American Federation of Labor. Inquiry and investigation disclosed that some organizations whose affiliation with such a department would be essential to its success were not ready to participate in the formation of a Maritime Trades Department. Because of this situation, action on the resolutions approved by the Seattle Convention was deferred until it became reasonably clear that the unions whose membership in a Maritime Trades Department was essential to its success were ready and willing to accept membership in a Maritime Trades Department. These facts were reported to the Toronto, 1942, convention.

Recently it became clear that the time had arrived when a successful Maritime Trades Department could be formed. Conferences were held in Chicago, Illinois, August 15th and 16th, 1946, of representatives of unions eligible to membership in such a department. At these conferences, a Maritime Trades Department was formed in conformity with the unanimous vote of the representatives who participated in said conferences. A charter for the Maritime Trades Department was issued by the Executive Council. This department, therefore, has been organized, chartered, and is now functioning as the Maritime Trades Department of the American Federation of Labor.

(Page 413) Your committee heartily approves the creation of the Maritime Trades Department of the American Federation of Labor. The establishment of the department at this time has a two-fold significance. In the first place, it recognizes the great growth in numbers and power of the various maritime unions in the A. F. of L., and their importance, acting as a coordinated group, for the common good of all, with all the strength and prestige that their being a department of the A. F. of L. will afford them.

In the second place, this move at this time shows our appreciation for the great work of this group of unions in fighting not only for their own economic betterment, but even more in fighting for the security of our nation. No group in America has had to fight more determinedly against the Communists than have our maritime unions. For this, the reason is clear; they are a highly strategic and absolutely essential group in maintaining our country's security.

Your committee would, at this point, recall to our members the heroic fight which this great segment of our organization has made since the work of totalitarian forces threatened our country's security. We would recall how in those dark days of the Nazi-Communist Pact, when the Communist-dominated waterfront unions were refusing to carry food and other supplies to the free nations and free peoples of the world, how our men then risked their lives—and many, indeed, gave their lives—to help those who as free men were fighting for a free world.

We recall that before June, 1941, our men from the maritime unions fought the Nazi terror even as today they continue to fight the forces of Communism and all other forces from the right and the left which seek to exploit and destroy free men on the waterfront and on the seas. . . .

As we recall the great sacrifices of these men before Pearl Harbor, during the war, and since the war, sacrifices which in fact emulate the record of Andy Furuseth, who so magnificently gave his all for the cause of freedom—we pause to give a solemn thought of appreciation to their work, and to consecrate ourselves to help them in their fight to keep our waterfront free.

We are happy to realize that in and through this new department our maritime workers may now the better help themselves, and serve us all.

(Retirement)

(1950, pp. 331, 499) Res. 119 directed attention to discrimination against maritime service during the war in that those government employees who served in this branch of the service lost the time that they so served, and called upon the officers of the A. F. of L. to secure the enactment of legislation to make eligible for employees who resigned from employment with the U. S. Government for the purpose of service in the U. S. Maritime Commission upon being returned to duty shall be eligible to purchase credits for the lapsed time toward retirement.

(1951, pp. 305, 513) Res. 77 provided: That the officers of the American Federation of Labor, in convention assembled, be instructed to make every effort to secure the enactment of legislation to make eligible for employees who resigned from employment with the United States Government, for the purpose of entering the United States Maritime Commission, upon being returned to duty, be eligible to purchase credits for the lapsed time toward retirement.

Mass Production Industries

(1927, pp. 40, 317) Second among our outstanding problems we list "How to Organize Highly Mechanized Industries." The use of mechanical power and machine tools is characteristic of quantity production, and also of the still more highly specialized method called mass production. So great are the changes constituting mass production that the effect is an industrial revolution with transformations comparable to the first industrial revolution that introduced the factory system. These methods mean for the individual worker highly repetitive jobs and subdivision of the work previously done by craftsmen into repetitive operations performed by a number of workers. For example, in the automotive industry there are 34 job designations given work previously called the work of one craft. This production technique in quantity and mass production industries requires new kinds of skill and new group bases for organization of the workers into unions. In practically none of these industries are the workers organized. During the past few years has come the development of the automobile industry, aeroplane, mechanical refrigeration, vacuum cleaners, many electrical appliances, radios, etc., in some of which mass production methods are used. Mass production methods have been introduced in other industries. Unless there is definite responsibility for watching for such developments, the industries are organized and operating before the union begins to consider organization plans. It would be much more desirable to have industries initiated with union contracts and under union conditions. If each central labor union had a special committee to be on the watch for new industries, to make reports both to the local body and to the American Federation of Labor, the movement would be in a much better position to make the necessary organization plans. It is obvious we need to have more systematic observation and study to direct organization activity. New industries are constantly developing and it would be well if we had agencies on watch for these new opportunities for organization.

It would be well if at least once a year each central labor union reviewed the census of industries for its jurisdiction and checked the number of organized in each industry against the total number of men and women employed. This would be a definite test of progress. The problem of organizing them presents two aspects: What shall be the basis of union organization and what agency shall be responsible for organizing them.

The work organization in mass production industries is such that there must be a new basis of appeal. The industry or the plant must be studied in order to find a basis which would introduce elements of unity and joint interests. The responsibility must lie with a federated body—locally the central labor union and nationally the Federation. All unions would gain from such planning and foresight.

There is need for study of the mass production industries in order that we may know the probability of industrial development in this direction.

Marine Hospital Services, Restoration Requested

(1952, pp. 26, 462) Res. 13: Whereas, The first Congress of the United States recognized the need for the establishment of hospitals for sick seamen, and

Whereas, Congress passed a law on July 17, 1798, providing for the establishment of marine hospitals, and

Whereas, The Federal government ever since passage of the law establishing marine hospitals has consistently realized the need for hospital service for seamen and has provided this service, expanding it as the merchant marine operations of the U. S., and

Whereas, These marine hospitals now under the administration of the U. S. Public Health Service are located at appropriate points throughout the country, and

Whereas, These marine hospitals are essential to the maintenance of a healthy merchant marine personnel valuable for this nation's maritime needs, and

Whereas, The U. S. Public Health Service has found it necessary to close facilities because of the lack of necessary funds in its budget, and

Whereas, This curtailment of operations will immediately work undue hardship on merchant seamen requiring the services of these institutions which have provided seamen with the best possible medical service in a manner that properly takes into account the industry's problems, and

Whereas, The Seafarers International Union of North America, A. F. of L., has registered individual and collective protests against this curtailment of medical service as being against the best interests of a healthy merchant marine personnel to serve the nation, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the American Federation of Labor go on record as being vigorously opposed to this retrenchment of marine hospital services and vigorously opposed to any possible future curtailment, and be it further

Resolved, That the American Federation of Labor inform the Federal Security Agency, Bureau of Budget, Congress and the President of the United States in this regard and urge them to affect restoration of the curtailed facilities immediately, as being in the best interests of this nation and of the working people directly involved.

Marine, Merchant (Ship Subsidy)

(1924, p. 295) Favored new law that would maintain the American Merchant Marine to the end that American commerce shall be carried in American ships under the American flag. This support will not under any circumstances mean support for a ship subsidy.

(1925, p. 52) A ship subsidy in a new dress is proposed by the chairman of the U. S. Shipping Board. He suggested that the government pay what he termed a retainer of $20 a month to seamen employed on U. S. ships. The seamen were to become members of the merchant marine reserve.

Protest was made against this method of bringing about subsidy legislation in the interest of American ship owners. It was contended that if the ship owners lived up to the Seamen's Act in the employment of skilled seamen and its other provisions there would be no need of the subsidy. There can be no doubt that if such a subsidy were granted the ship owners would get it and not the seamen, as the ship owners would simply reduce the wages of seamen so that with the added $20 a month the wages would be the same as now. (P. 319) We are opposed to any ship subsidy of whatever nature being granted.

(1927, p. 345) We will do our best to sustain Congress in any effort to build up a real merchant marine and a real sea power for our country whenever such effort shall be seriously made, whether such merchant marine is to consist wholly of vessels owned and operated by private capital or is to consist in part of vessels owned and operated by the government and in part of vessels owned and operated by private owners.

(1935, p. 576) The A. F. of L. urges the continuance of Federal aid to our American merchant marine and shipping in order that this most necessary adjunct to the National defense may be available at all times; provided That ships receiving any Federal assistance be required to employ only American-born seamen or seamen who are completely naturalized citizens of the U. S.; and provided further, That the officers and crews of all commercial ships flying the American flag be thoroughly trained and disciplined aboard American merchant ships.

(1938, pp. 160, 550) Congress enacted many amendments to the Merchant Marine Act of 1936. These amendments authorized the purchase of ships, merchant marine training, maritime service, differentials between the foreign and domestic construction of ships, subsidies to offset foreign subsidies, directing the Maritime Commission to hold hearings with respect to changes in manning scales, wage scales and minimum working conditions, and the 8-hour work day for Great Lakes tugboat men.

The new Title "X" was added to the Merchant Marine Act of 1936 providing for the creation of a Maritime Labor Board which is authorized in regard to maritime labor matters to insist on the maintaining of agreements and the interpretation of agreements in existence.

It is also to use its good offices in the mediation of maritime labor disputes except unfair labor practices and questions of employee representation, which will remain under the jurisdiction of the National Labor Relations Board.

It provides that maritime employers and employees shall exert every reasonable effort to make and maintain agreements and to settle their differences in conferences, but no penalties are prescribed. The mediation machinery provided is of a purely voluntary character.

The E. C. unsuccessfully sponsored an amendment to the National Labor Relations Act which aimed to create a special board of three members to whom should be given exclusive authority to administer the provisions of the National Labor Relations Act in the shipping industry, including seamen, longshoremen and other maritime workers. It would take from the National Labor Relations Board the supervision of labor relations in the maritime industry. Bills providing for an extension of social securities laws to seamen could not be moved from the House Ways and Means Committee notwithstanding approval by the Secretary of Labor and the Social Security Board.

S. 2580 was introduced to give effect to the terms of the treaty for promoting safety of life at sea. It provided greatly improved quarters and sanitary accommodations for crews on American ships. The bill passed the Senate but could not be pried out of the House Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

An amendment to have all ships constructed by the Maritime Commission come under the Walsh-Healey Act passed the Senate, but was eliminated in conference.

(1939, pp. 135, 416) One of the five treaties (No. 53) adopted by the International Labor Conference at Geneva in 1936, and ratified by the U. S. Senate on June 13, 1938, provides for certain minimum requirements with respect to the professional capacity of officers. The treaty also provides that vessels under 200 tons may be exempted by supplementary legislation. The National Organization of Masters, Mates and Pilots submitted an amendment to lower the exemption to 15 tons "for all vessels propelled by machinery, but not including pleasure craft and fishing vessels under 200 tons." The Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries rejected this amendment and the bill (H. R. 950), providing for a 200-ton general exemption, was enacted into law. This treaty provides certain additional rights to sick and injured seamen. It does not take away any rights, remedies, etc., to which a seaman was entitled prior to ratification of the treaty. The new right provides that if a sick or injured seaman has dependents, the ship owner must "pay his wages in whole or in part as prescribed by national laws or regulations from the time when he is landed until he has been cured of the sickness or incapacity has been declared of a permanent character." The treaty also provides that such payments may be limited to not less than sixteen weeks.

The House Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries reported a bill (H.R. 6881) defining the word "dependents" and limiting the amount payable to such incapacitated seamen to $10 per month for a period of sixteen weeks only, from the time when he is landed. The bill passed the House and was then referred to the Senate Commerce Committee where it was held over because of numerous protests against the penurious $10 per month allowance approved by the House. This treaty will take effect on October 29, 1939, and in the absence of any permissible modifying legislation, it being assumed that the treaty is self-executing, ship-owners will be required to pay full wages to any incapacitated seaman who has dependents, after he is landed. This treaty (No 58) provides that minors under 15 years of age shall not be employed on vessels. American Federal law does not contain such minimum age requirements (except for apprentices). As a matter of fact, however, the generally prevailing minimum age for employment on American ships is 18 years. Therefore, it would seem desirable to eliminate the employment of minors under fifteen years of age from the vessels of our competitors. The treaty will be effective on October 29, 1939, but no action was taken by Congress to pass any implementing legislation. Two days before adjournment the President sent a Message to Congress submitting the draft of an implementing bill prepared by an interdepartmental committee and stated that "it is a matter of great importance that legislation be enacted at this session of Congress." Since only two days of the session remained, no action was taken by Congress. It is not generally known that the laws relating to the inspection of steamships do not apply to the ever increasing Diesel and motor-driven vessels. To remedy this anomalous situation the A. F. of L. supported H. R. 3837, sponsored by the National Organization of Masters, Mates and Pilots. A hearing on H. R. 3837 and related bills was held on April 11 by the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. Although the only issue involved was safety, the various organizations of engine and boat manufacturers, river and harbor contractors, yacht and power boat owners objected most strenuously to any such regulation. Because of this protest the Committee took no action on the bill.

However, the committee reported favorably on H. R. 6039 which amends the Motorboat Act of 1910 in several respects. The most important change is in the issuance of licenses for persons operating motorboats carrying passengers for hire. At the present time licenses are issued upon application without examination. The bill as passed by the House, provides: "Whenever any person applies to be licensed as operator of any motorboat carrying passengers for hire, the inspectors shall make diligent inquiry as to his character, and shall carefully examine the applicant orally as well as the proofs which he presents in support of his claim, and if they are satisfied that his capacity, experience, habits of life, and character are such as to warrant the belief that he can safely be entrusted with the duties and responsibilities of the station for which he makes application, they shall grant him a license authorizing him to discharge such duties on any such motorboat carrying passengers for hire for the term of five years". The bill remained on the Senate Calendar the day of adjournment. Three minor sea safety measures were enacted at this session: S. 1583 (Public No. 92), amends the Load Line Act of March 2, 1929, to bring it in line with the International Load Line Treaty, ratified in 1933, by requiring a load line on foreign going merchant vessels of 150 tons, or over. H. R. 7090 (Public No. 371) relates to the Governmental supervision over the disengaging apparatus and the character of lifeboats, floats, etc. H. R. 7091 (Public No. 372) relates to the use of hand worked fire pumps. H. R. 199 (Public No. 99)

amends the Act relating to allotments of seamen's wages to certain relatives by requiring the shipowner (when requested by the seaman) to deposit in a savings bank or in a U. S. postal saving depository, as designated by the seaman, such portion of wages earned as may be stipulated in the shipping articles. No allotment is valid unless in writing and signed and approved by the Shipping Commissioner. H. R. 4592 and 4593, and H. J. Res. 344 and 347 were introduced at the instance of two whaling companies using foreign-built killer boats under foreign flags. The objective was to permit these foreign-built killer boats to be documented as vessels of the United States. With this accomplished the two companies could introduce whale oil into the United States free of the tax of $67.50 per long ton. The legislation was opposed by the Metal Trades Department of the A. F. of L. as discriminatory against American shipbuilders. If such special privileges were granted to the whaling industry it would serve as a precedent to grant it also to the other branches of the American fishery such as salmon, tuna, cod, halibut, and other fisheries, since all American fishing vessels are now required to be American built. It may be noted that there is no requirement under Federal law for the employment of American citizens in such an enterprise, except that the master of the vessel, and in the case of a steam vessel, the licensed officers be American citizens. It developed during the hearing that only five per cent of the crews of these vessels are American citizens, that a Norwegian Seamen's Union contract governs wages, hours and working conditions, and that the Norwegian language is spoken exclusively. There has been no action upon either of these bills or resolutions. As is well known, one of the most serious problems confronting the American Merchant Marine in the off-shore trade is the fact that some of our competitors man their ships with the cheapest available labor. For instance, many British ships in direct competition with American ships, trading regularly to American ports, are manned almost wholly by Lascar crews with a monthly wage of $9.40 for able seamen as against $72.50 for able seamen on our ships in the same trade. With a view of ascertaining the facts in this connection at the request of the A. F. of L., H.J.Res. 194 was introduced. In accord with the usual custom the resolution was referred to various Departments of the Government which are concerned with the subject. A public hearing on the resolution was held on June 16, 1939, and it then developed that the Secretary of the Department of Labor had recommended favorable action on the resolution, that other branches of the Government were non-committal, and that the Department of Commerce alone opposed the adoption of H. J. Res. 194. There was no opposition whatever from any private source. Upon our President's representation to the Secretary of Commerce, that Department finally withdrew its opposition but it was then too late in the session and the Resolution could not be moved from the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. S. 1454 and S. 2305 were introduced at our request to make applicable to inland water craft the provisions for an eight-hour working day already in effect on ocean-going ships. In reporting on S. 1454 the Department of Commerce stated that this bill, if enacted, would require the appointment of forty-eight additional assistant inspectors at the various ports requiring an appropriation of $170,000 per annum to cover the salaries of these additional assistant inspectors, and to provide the funds for the necessary traveling expenses in connection with this work. Hearings on these bills have been postponed until next session.

(Training Schools)

(1942, p. 682) Res. 128 related to the operation of Merchant Marine Training Schools through the following "resolves":

Resolved: That the American Federation of Labor go on record as being opposed to the duplication of maritime academies by the States, and be it further

Resolved, That we favor permanent U.S. Merchant Marine Academies under the sole control of the Federal Government, and the incorporation of the present state academies under the supervision of the U.S. Government-operated training schools, and be it further

Resolved, That we petition and request the War Shipping Administration to the effect that the education and training of officers and personnel of the Merchant Marine of the United States, both publicly and privately owned, and under the control of the Federal Government, be exclusively in the hands of those who have gained their knowledge and practical experience in the U. S. Merchant Marine on either public or privately owned vessels, and who have proved by their experience that they are the only ones able and qualified to understand the problems that are peculiar and exclusive problems of the U. S. Merchant Marine.

The following convention committee recommendation was unanimously approved: Since the Committee did not have sufficient information upon which to render an intelligent judgment of the subject matter of the resolution and since none of the delegates appeared in defense of the resolution the Committee recommends that this resolution be referred to the Permanent Committee on Education for further study and disposition.

(1942, p. 588) Resolution No. 81:

Whereas, The personnel of the United States Merchant Marine did its part for this country in World War I, and

Whereas, The A. F. of L. seamen who are now taking most of Victory Merchant Fleet to sea and delivering goods to our armed forces and our Allied armed forces all over the globe, and

Whereas, Many have given the supreme sacrifice in performing these duties for their country, and

Whereas, The merchant seamen are fighting our fight as strongly as are the armed forces and are as vital to this effort as if they were on the direct firing line, and

Whereas, The federal government now owns and/or operates all the United States Merchant Marine vessels through the War Shipping Administration, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the American Federation of Labor go on record to have introduced as soon as possible in Congress suitable legislation to the effect that any seaman who has made a voyage to sea on the United States merchant vessel during this war, and whose character and loyalty warrant it, be given an honorary discharge from the United States Government after this war, and be it further

Resolved, That this discharge shall have the same recognition as the one given to persons serving in our armed forces, and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, to the senators and congressmen from the State of California, to the Administrator of the War Shipping Administration, to the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of War.

Your committee in recommending the adoption of the resolution calls attention to the initiative taken by the Seafarers International Union of North America in securing for seamen now employed on United States merchant marine vessels, a discharge at the end of the war, equivalent to the honorable discharge given to the armed forces when they are mustered out.

1944—pp. 61, 436 (Res. 69):

Resolved—That the American Federation of Labor, in convention assembled, urge upon the Congress of the United States of America that any and all rights accorded to the men and women in the armed services of the United States be extended with equal American justice and generosity to the men in the Merchant Marine for their valiant conduct throughout the war, in the face of serious submarine warfare waged by the enemy for many months and for the Merchant Marine's subsequent heroism under fire, and be it further

Resolved—That all present legislation be amended so that equal rights shall be provided for all members of the Merchant Marine on the same basis as that accorded to all members of the armed services, and be it further

Resolved—That in the future all legislation include rights and benefits, in equal share, for all members of the said Merchant Marine.

This resolution requests support by the American Federation of Labor of legislation to provide that men in the Merchant Marine service shall be granted benefits equivalent to those provided for those in the armed services for service during the present war.

Your committee recommends that the resolution be referred to the Executive Council with instructions to confer with the Maritime Unions in reference to it.

(Continuation Urged)

(1944, p. 539) The following resolution No. 131 was unanimously adopted:

Whereas—The American Merchant Marine has always played a definite part in the nation's economic and industrial welfare, therefore, be it

Resolved—That this 64th annual convention of the American Federation of Labor declare, without qualification, that it is the duty of the American workers and manufacturers and American shippers in protecting the future safety of our Republic, to build and maintain an American Merchant Marine sufficient in size to meet all of the nation's needs and requirements, and that this Merchant Marine must be owned and maintained so that all ships of the American Merchant Marine shall be built in American shipyards under American standards and be operated by American seamen.

(Hospitalization)

(1946, pp. 474, 475) Resolutions 61 and 62 both requested the A. F. of L. to have introduced in Congress legislation which will restore to American merchant seamen separate hospital and medical facilities which were originally established for them. Res. 61 requested support of legislation making merchant seamen eligible for hospitalization under certain prescribed conditions. Both resolutions were unanimously concurred in.

(Reemployment Rights)

(1946, pp. 229, 608) The convention unanimously approved A. F. of L. support for legislation which was enacted by the 79th Congress, providing reemployment rights for members of the Merchant Marine, similar to those accorded members of the other armed services.

(1947, p. 550) The A. F. of L., through adoption of Res. 89, went on record in opposition to a proposal in Congress providing for the chartering of government owned war built ships to foreign operators. Res. 96, covering the same subject matter, did not require separate action. The following was adopted:

Whereas—A serious threat to the American Merchant Marine, and one which will seriously aggravate the growing unemployment of American seamen, is embodied in Senate Bill 1619, introduced, upon request, in the United States Senate, and

Whereas—This Bill would authorize the President to charter government-owned, war-built ships to "any foreign operator," and

Whereas—The chartering of these American ships to non-citizens would not constitute any saving, and would not, in any manner, improve the efficiency in the providing of relief cargos to the countries in Europe in need of them, and

Whereas—A number of countries which have bought many of our ships, such as Norway, for example, supposedly for its own transportation and economic requirements, which ships are now owned and manned by Norwegian personnel and are in competition in non-Norway trades with our ships from the Pacific Coast to the East Coast of South America and the Pacific Coast to the Far East, and

Whereas—Norwegian interests have offered to charter ships to American operators in New York, at rates below which they could be operated by Americans, establishing that Norway was not in need of these ships as badly as it was claimed, and

Whereas—Should this Bill be enacted, the American Merchant seamen will be forced to compete with foreign seamen whose wages are incomparably lower, while American shipyard and metal trades workers will be deprived of employment, thereby placing in jeopardy the whole concept of maintaining the American standard of living, and

Whereas—This does not in any way involve the question of helping the relief needs of the world, in which objective the maritime unions are second to none in their support, and

Whereas—Should this measure be adopted, it would be in flat contradiction to the declaration of policy in the Merchant Ship Sales Act of 1946, which provides that the United States have an efficient and adequate American-owned Merchant Marine, sufficient to carry its water-borne commerce, capable of serving as a naval and military auxiliary, owned and operated under the United States flag, by citizens of the United States, therefore, be it

Resolved—That the 66th convention of the American Federation of Labor go on record as being opposed to S-1619, and do all in its power to defeat this Bill.

(Reserve)

(1949, pp. 211, 383) "... (legislation proposed) to provide for the creation, organization, administration and maintenance of a Merchant Marine Reserve ... vigorously opposed. It is our belief that there is no need to authorize the U. S. Maritime Service to develop and maintain a Merchant Marine Service for training for service in war, and that the underlying purpose of the Merchant Marine Reserve would be that of a strike-breaking agency—the phrase "national emergency" has become familiar to us in the various proposals to limit workers' right to strike. It is our firm belief that H. R. 4448 is not needed. The Navy already has authority to maintain services of both licensed and unlicensed personnel which has been exercised for licensed personnel, but not for the unlicensed. We opposed the proposal because of the vast unemployment that now exists among trained unlicensed personnel and the potential danger of the use of the Reserve in strikes designated as national emergencies. If there should be a legitimate need for non-licensed personnel reserve for other than strike-breaking purposes, the Navy would have exercised the authority delegated to it.

The American Federation of Labor will continue its efforts to defeat this legislation.

(Retirement Credits for War Service)

(1949, pp. 51, 388) Res. 44 approved of legislation to allow employees who resigned from employment with the U. S. Government, for the purpose of entering the U. S. Maritime Commission, to be eligible to purchase credits for the lapsed time, toward retirement.

(Drafting of Personnel)

(1950, p. 411) The Maritime Trades Department is at the moment confronted with great and grave problems. It must help preserve the integrity of its member unions; subversive groups are eager to take over this key industry. It must protect the economic security of its members against unscrupulous employers who, putting aside all loyalty to our government have transferred ships to foreign flags—just to help them make more money from the blood and brawn of our men.

It must help recruit and maintain personnel of a quality and capacity to serve us as well as our seamen of yesteryear served us in keeping a mighty merchant marine ready for service in any emergency as well as for the usual continuing day by day needs.

Elsewhere in this convention will come detailed reports on specific pending legislation through which to protect our Merchant Marine. We would here, however, call attention to a specific shortsighted policy. Our government is drafting young men away from this vital line of defense. How foolhardy!

During the American Revolution and during the War of 1812 seamen were kept on ships they had been trained to man, for there it was felt they could do the best job. Today they are drafted away from the skilled and essential jobs for which they have been especially trained.

We recommend that the American Federation of Labor give full and active support to the program of the Maritime Trades Department and to its affiliated unions in their effort to keep trained seamen on their jobs.

(Reactivation Program)

(1950, p. 331) Whereas—Labor has always advocated an adequate United States Merchant Marine and Shipbuilding program second to none, adequate to sustain this country in time of peace, and to support a program of national defense, and

Whereas—Following World War I, American ships were scrapped in unlimited numbers, competent shipbuilding mechanics were idled and shipbuilding facilities were scrapped or abandoned, resulting in the United States Merchant Marine practically being no factor in world trade, and

Whereas—World War II found the Merchant Marine practically nonexistent and with tonnage of shipbuilding in this country at rock bottom, with the result that available shipbuilding facilities were very limited, as were competent shipbuilding mechanics for the immediate needs of an expanding shipbuilding defense program, and

Whereas—There were practically 30,000 mechanics engaged in shipbuilding previous to World War II on the west coast, and this figure going to 365,000 in peak war years, but today on the Pacific Coast from Bellingham, Washington, to San Diego, California, there are less than 5,000 shipbuilding mechanics engaged in shipbuilding and ship repair by private employers, and most ship construction facilities are either scrapped or deteriorated to a point of much needed repair, which in the present international crisis endangers the security of the country and its citizens, therefore, be it

Resolved—That we condemn the actions of those public officials that have allowed the merchant ships of this country to be scrapped, and in allowing a number of remaining ships to be put in foreign registry to evade hiring American crews, support a program of 10,000 foreign shipbuilders being kept busy in one town of a country that remained neutral in recent hostilities which is practically at the doorstep of a potential enemy nation, and yet these same officials do not see fit to institute and support a program that would continue shipbuilding on the west coast and maintain facilities in an area that has set records in ship construction and repair and which area by all present and past international trends and events will be called upon to again engage in a full speed ship reactivation program, and be it further

Resolved—That American money be used to launch a shipbuilding program in the United States and not in foreign countries, and that any reactivation of ships now deactivated to be done by private employers in private shipyards, and be it further

Resolved—That the Merchant Marine be rebuilt second to none, that Congress and agencies of government cease to support foreign shipbuilding programs, which are all detrimental to the economy of American shipbuilding workers, and those engaged in the shipping trade, but mostly to the safety of the country, and be it further

Resolved—That a copy of this resolution be sent to all members of the Senate and the Congress of the United States.

(p. 461) The Council reports the effective organizing campaign of the Department and the economic gains of the workers after being organized.

The report calls particular attention to the urgent need for developing a U. S. Merchant Marine which is vitally essential to our national welfare, both for national defense and for peacetime economic security. It is to the nation's discredit that we have neglected the development of a large U. S. Merchant Marine. It must be developed and maintained.

Your Committee recommends that the American Federation of Labor take a leading part in bringing to the attention of the President, the Congress, and the American public the urgent need for the development and maintenance of a large and strong U. S. Merchant Marine for our peacetime economic program and for use in any emergency that may arise.

(1951, p. 97) The American Federation of Labor and its affiliated maritime unions have a vital stake and interest in the maintenance of a strong and adequate first-class American Merchant Marine. This, we believe, is essential for both defense and economic purposes. Its importance at this time cannot be over-emphasized.

During World War II, and for a short time after, our country had the largest Merchant Marine in the world. It had all types of ships, fitted for any trade and any route—in fact, the American Merchant Marine was so capable that it carried a major part of supplies, troops, etc., to the various military fronts of the world. Today, however, this situation has materially changed. The American Merchant Marine is rapidly dwindling and it is safe to say there are less ships sailing the American flag than there were prior to the War.

Since the war, the transfer of American ships to foreign registry, to evade taxes and escape paying decent wages, has caused thousands of our seamen to become unemployed. This growing evil is a serious threat to the American Merchant Marine and is endangering the safety of our country.

Up to this time, Congress has not seen fit to do anything about it, and the U. S. Maritime Commission has sadly neglected its duties and totally disregarded the need of American-flag ships in this country. This indifferent attitude is causing the American Federation of Labor and its affiliated maritime unions grave concern.

On the other hand, we are able to report that Congress has continued to make it a public policy by enacting into law a provision that at least 50% of all foreign-aid cargoes must be carried by American-flag ships. This act by Congress has given some relief and security for the present, to the American seamen in the maritime industry.

In addition, the study and investigation of the maritime industry that was made by the Senate in the 81st Congress has brought about favorable results. Both the House and Senate Merchant Marine Committees are now considering legislation to correct some of the problems in this industry. . . .

(Page 101) The Executive Council recommends that the American Federation of Labor continue to work closely with our Maritime Unions and extend to them full assistance on matters affecting this Industry.

(Page 443) The American Federation of Labor has taken a leading role in legislative efforts to obtain satisfactory relief for American seamen and shipyard workers in the maritime industry and to re-establish the American merchant marine under American standards of maritime employment.

The Committee on Legislation recommends that the convention concur in the recommendation of the Executive Council, which is as follows: "The Executive Council recommends that the American Federation of Labor continue to work closely with our maritime unions and extend to them full assistance on matters affecting this industry."

(Smuggling of Alien Crewmen)

(1951, pp. 108, 526) The E. C. reported on efforts made to pass legislation providing heavy penalty for smuggling alien merchant crewmen into the U.S. The convention commended these efforts and directed their continuance.

(Pp. 309, 565) Res. 90 directed attention to the importance of having an adequate merchant marine as follows:

Whereas—The Metal Trades Department, and its affiliated unions, has stressed, time and time again, the necessity of maintaining our shipbuilding industry in a condition which will make rapid expansion possible in time of emergency or war, and

Whereas—Representations to this effect have been made repeatedly to the Congress, the old Maritime Commission, the new Maritime Administration, and to the President, and

Whereas—The present Korean crisis as well as our decision to send troops to Europe and other areas has focused attention upon the grave deficiencies of our American merchant fleet, and vividly portrays our national indifference to the lessons we should have learned as a result of both World Wars I and II, and

Whereas—There has not been planned, even at this crucial date, any substantial privately owned and operated merchant fleet expansion in order to guarantee our nation merchant ships of sufficient speed for modern war, and a fleet sufficiently well balanced to assume a vital role as a military auxiliary in event of global conflict, and

Whereas—This nation is now seriously, even desperately, deficient in fast passenger carrying vessels quickly convertible to carry military personnel, and needs additional fast, large ore-carrying ships and tankers to serve our remobilization and military preparedness, as well as an expanded economy, therefore, be it

Resolved—That this convention of the American Federation of Labor again protests vigorously, and with all the force at their command, the repeated delay and national neglect in this matter, and be it further

Resolved—That we condemn as shortsighted any policy that would have the United States place its reliance upon the shipping, shipbuilding or ship repair of other nations in time of danger and peril, and be it further recognized that there can be no dependency placed upon other nations to protect the United States in time of crisis, and further that we must be self-sufficient in the carrying of our commerce, and be it further

Resolved—That the American Federation of Labor reaffirm its consistent policy, and urge the Congress of the United States, and such other agencies of government responsible, to implement our merchant marine; and further that the declared policy of building, operating and maintaining a strong American Merchant Marine by private enterprise be encouraged and aided by the Government, to the extent necessary to guarantee a merchant fleet sufficient in numbers, tonnage and speed to adequately serve the needs of our domestic and foreign commerce and national security.

(Medical Care)

(1953, pp. 443, 656) Res. 124 called attention to order issued by the Director of the Budget excluding the public health service formerly provided for merchant seamen and

Resolved—That the American Federation of Labor, assembled at its Seventy-second Convention in the City of St. Louis in September 1953, does hereby instruct its President, Executive and Legislative Committee, to take all appropriate steps necessary to have this order of the Director of the Budget rescinded, and to obtain necessary assurance that the Public Health Service Program for American Seamen shall be continued.

(Expansion)

(1953, pp. 448, 609) Whereas—The American Merchant Marine comprises an important peace time industry, employing 80,000 men in seagoing capacities, plus thousands more in shoreside capacities, and

Whereas—Both of these industries furnish employment directly and indirectly to hundreds of thousands of workers all over the United States, and

Whereas—Both of these industries are as vital as the Army, Navy, Air Force to national defense and indispensable to the maintenance of American freedom in a world half enslaved and half free, therefore, be it

Resolved — By the 72nd annual convention of the American Federation of Labor

(a) That the United States Government assist the privately owned shipping industry by construction assistance and other means to build new passenger and cargo vessels, and keep the merchant fleet up-to-date by replacing war built tonnage with new ships;

(b) That a fleet of cargo ships capable of carrying at least half of the nation's foreign trade and sufficient to provide an adequate auxiliary to the armed forces in time of war be kept on the seas as an essential part of national shipping policy;

(c) That the policy be continued of American ships carrying at least 50 percent of all foreign aid cargoes as a means of affording employment to our merchant ships when "gift" cargoes replace normal freight;

(d) That the Government begin planning and constructing as soon as possible a nuclear-powered prototype merchant ship and that it consult with the Maritime industry on this project so as to keep American shipbuilders, marine machinery manufacturers and ship operators abreast of technical developments in this field, and competitive with foreign maritime nations who are now planning for nuclear powered merchant ships;

(e) That any national shipping policy formulated as a result of maritime hearings now being held by a Committee of the U. S. Senate be based upon provisions of the 1936 Merchant Marine Act, which is the cornerstone for a progressive shipbuilding and ship operating program under the American Flag;

(f) That first reliance by the United States Government for the transport of persons or material be placed on ships of the privately-owned and operated American Merchant Marine insofar as these ships are available at fair and reasonable rates for American ships;

(g) That all supplies purchased overseas by and for the military be transported on privately-owned and operated U. S. Flag ships; and be it further

Resolved—That this convention of the American Federation of Labor protest to the President of the United States, to the several Departments and Bureaus of the Federal Government, and to all members of both Houses of Congress, over the practice of appropriating taxpayers' dollars to build ships and other seagoing equipment in the shipyards of foreign countries which are to be given away under the Mutual Security program or any other program; it is our confirmed opinion that the dissipating of the taxpayers' dollars in this manner is an offense to the private shipbuilding industry of the United States and to the workers employed therein; there cannot be a healthy privately owned shipbuilding industry in this country nor can the skills of the experienced workers be preserved by this unfair subsidizing competition; and be it further

Resolved—That this convention of the American Federation of Labor reaffirm its support of the American Merchant Marine and endorse this program aimed at guaranteeing a maritime industry which will be a healthy, productive part of our national economy in peace time, and which will serve the demands of national security in time of war.

(Hospitalization Program)—(1953, p. 641) Included in the report of the convention committee under the title of "Health" was the following statement:

The Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare has announced that she has under active consideration, following instructions of the Budget Director, the abandonment of the entire marine hospital program under which, since the year 1798, medical services have been rendered to merchant seamen by the Public Health Service. This is a truly shocking announcement. The abandonment of a program inaugurated over one hundred and fifty years ago by the founding fathers of this republic would spell Reaction with a capital "R". The welfare of thousands of members of the American Federation of Labor unions in the maritime industry is directly at stake. We must prevent any move to abolish this program, and insist that the marine hospital program be maintained intact.

(1954, p. 98) Several bills designed to improve the maritime situation were reported by the EC in its annual report which also stressed the plight of the American merchant marine as follows:

The plight of the Nation's shipbuilding industry has been a matter of increasing concern to the American Federation of Labor. Our nation's ability to mobilize quickly in the event of a national crisis is a matter of utmost importance to all of us.

United States shipbuilding is an industry subject to extreme ups and downs. In wartime, it has always been greatly expanded, but in peace has been allowed to languish. During World War I, for example, ship output was boosted from 24 vessels to several hundred. In the 1920's and 1930's production fell almost to zero.

During World War II, United States Shipyards were reactivated, with the result that between 1940 and 1945, this country turned out about 5,000 vessels, more than any other nation. But by this spring, with only 35 ships on order, America has fallen to seventh place among the world's shipbuilding countries.

The current maritime crisis presents several dangers to this nation. One is economic. Thousands of shipyard workers are now either unemployed or facing dismissal. The most recent available figures of the Department of Labor show that private yards employed in March 1954, a total of 115,000 workers, in contrast to 1,400,000 at the height of World War II. Today's employment, therefore, represents only 8 per cent of the peak reached late in 1943.

Another danger is that lack of a modern Merchant Marine may have serious effects on foreign trade. At present only about one-fourth of America's trade moves in U. S. ships.

Perhaps the greatest threat of all is that, in the event of war, the United States will be caught with an obsolete Merchant Marine Fleet, incapable of discharging its maritime defense needs. The shipbuilding facilities of the nation are part and parcel of our nation's defense program. The success of any overseas operation depends directly on the availability of speedy modern vessels to transport both men and equipment.

Considerations of national defense require that sufficient shipbuilding facilities be maintained in operation, together with the employment of the necessary skills to constitute a nucleus of facilities and manpower adequate for rapid expansion in the event of full mobilization.

It is clear that under today's conditions, this requirement is not being fulfilled. In fact, this is the specific conclusion which has been reached by a most careful and thorough study of the entire maritime industry made by the Department of Commerce and the Maritime Administration. This report, which reviews the nation's policies regarding both the shipping and shipbuilding industries, is very emphatic about the conditions which have recently developed in the shipbuilding industry.

The report recognizes that the most critical factor with regard to shipbuilding facilities is a lack of skilled and trained manpower. The report analyzes the manpower requirements necessary in the event of full mobilization and concludes that a total of approximately 479,000 workers will be required for merchant ship construction in the event of another emergency.

(Page 529) The report of the Executive Council and the several resolutions which have been introduced on the general subject of our maritime policy as a free nation, presents the highlights of the deplorable destruction of

- (1) Our Merchant Marine.
- (2) Our shipyards.
- (3) The dissipation of a substantial army of skilled and competent workers.

It is inconceivable that our Nation has permitted these vast resources to disintegrate to the degree that they have.

For centuries the rallying cry of the British Empire was "Britannia Rules the Waves."

She not only ruled the waves with combat vessels, but with a far-flung array of merchant ships.

The above slogan was an inspiration to every citizen of Great Britain.

In the light of these facts and supporting history of other maritime nations, how can we expect to continue to command the respect of the free world when the Stars and Stripes are so infrequently seen in foreign ports?

Moreover, a capable merchant marine is the second arm of our military strength in the event of any emergency.

Furthermore, we have had two costly experiences in both World Wars, when hundreds of thousands of people were called into shipbuilding without any previous knowledge, and in many cases, without any mechanical skills of any kind, which resulted in the expenditure of billions of dollars which was virtually wasted, and could have been avoided if a far-sighted and long range program had been in effect.

This vast sum of money is now being dissipated because of the virtual abandonment of ship construction and the forces of management and the skills of experienced labor are being diverted into other channels, with the result that if an emergency should again occur, we would have to go through the delaying and expensive period of recruiting and training personnel to construct, maintain and repair ships.

No other subject is of greater concern to our Nation than the maintenance of facilities and skilled workmen in sufficient numbers to fill key positions in the event of a national emergency and also to keep our Flag flying in every maritime port of the world.

Marine Association, Merchant (U.S.)

—(1940, p. 410) Res. 143 before the 1940 Convention called for an investigation of the anti-union activities of the U. S. Merchant Marine Association, among the sponsors of which are high-ranking Navy officers as well as men holding high positions in both financial and industrial institutions.

Marshall Plan (Mutual Security Agency) (also see: E.C.A. and Economic Aid, International)

(1947, p. 464) It is to the self-interest of every American worker that the rehabilitation of war-torn Western Europe be successfully accomplished. Economic disintegration, privation and hunger are the generators of totalitarianism whether of the right or the left. The preservation of world peace and the bolstering of free governments in Western Europe are directly dependent upon immediate American economic aid as envisaged in the proposal of Secretary of State Marshall.

The cost to the American people in assisting the sixteen nations of Western Europe to rehabilitate their economies will be small as compared to the alternative of an unaided Europe falling under totalitarian domination with the ultimate possibility of war.

We recognize that the sharing of our domestic production with other nations involves some personal sacrifice. But, as in war, so in this great program for peace, such sacrifices as must be borne by the American people should be borne equally. Speculation and profiteering in relief materials have no place in this humanitarian project. American Business as well as American Labor must sacrifice. Serious inflation will not only cause grave suffering to the American wage earner, but will place popular support of the program in jeopardy.

The responsibility is placed directly upon free labor and free management to demonstrate by concerted effort and voluntary self-restraint that we are able to aid the rest of the world and satisfy our own demands without disruption of our domestic economy. Not only must we produce the things needed for the relief and reconstruction of Europe, but every individual must help increase total supplies by his self-discipline in his personal uses.

At present it is only in the export of grain that the drain on American resources is sufficient to cause serious inflation. Disastrous weather in Europe last winter and summer lowered crop yields to starvation levels. Western Europe has always been a heavy importer of grain. With the traditional source of supply cut off behind the "Iron Curtain," starvation and political upheaval are certain this winter unless America ships the 570,000,000 bushels of grain recommended by the President's Committee on Foreign Aid. The plan to ship this amount, which constitutes 40 per cent of our total grain crop this year, has already proven a serious incentive to speculation and price inflation. However, because of our all-time record wheat crop this year, shipment of this amount will cause no serious domestic hardships if there are proper safeguards and restraints.

Because of the urgency of the food situation in Europe large purchases and shipments must be made now. Without specific authorization from Congress the administration has no power to impose governmental safeguards against price inflation and speculation in relief materials. Upon the voluntary organizations of our nation rests responsibility for mobilizing public support to make this plan effective. These groups should be consulted in working out detailed co-operation.

The American Federation of Labor gives complete endorsement and support to our Government's appeal to the American consumer, producer, dealer, and processor of foodstuffs to conserve grain by voluntary self-restraint.

In giving our complete support to a program of economic assistance to Europe, the American Federation of Labor advocates the exploitation of every type of voluntary action to prevent domestic economic disruption that may be threatened by extensive exports to Europe.

However, if serious shortages develop in grain or other commodities, or if groups refuse to abide by voluntary regulations necessary to the success of this undertaking, our Government must be prepared to act to conserve our resources and check speculation and inflation.

(1947, p. 474) Res. 2 was endorsed by the convention and referred to the Comm. on International Labor Relations with instructions that the committee survey thoroughly the situation with a view of learning the possibility and the time for holding such a conference and then placing its findings before the E.C. for final decision and appropriate action.

Whereas—The reconstruction of Europe is of profoundest importance to the American people and to all mankind, and

Whereas—In order to speed the reconstruction of Europe and build a sound economic foundation for lasting peace, our government has, through the Marshall Plan, offered to aid all nations of the continent of Europe in a joint endeavor to rebuild their countries, and

Whereas—Sixteen European nations have agreed to cooperate on a continental basis for the purpose of rebuilding their economies with the aid of the Marshall Plan, and

Whereas—This reconstruction involves many social, economic, and human problems vitally affecting the welfare and future of the working people not only of Europe but of our own country as well, therefore, be it

Resolved—That this convention

herewith endorse the idea of the American Federation of Labor taking the initiative in calling a conference of the free trade union organizations in all the cooperating countries with a view of:

(1) taking the necessary steps for insuring the active role of labor in helping economic reconstruction.

(2) protecting the rights of labor to genuine collective bargaining and the basic human rights of all workers; and

(3) promoting the improvement of their living standards, wages, and conditions of employment, and be it further

Resolved—That the convention authorize the Executive Council to take the required steps toward convoking such a conference when, in their judgment, they find it feasible.

Your Committee has given the most careful consideration to Resolution No. 2, introduced by the delegation of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union.

Your Committee fully approves the spirit and aims of this Resolution and draws attention to its putting into sharp focus some of the heavy responsibilities now facing the A. F. of L. as the strongest body of free trade unions in the world.

This Resolution calls for A. F. of L. initiative and leadership in mobilizing the trade unions of Western Europe for the protection of labor's rights and freedoms, for the improvement of the working conditions and standards, and for the workers taking their rightful place in advancing the reconstruction of Europe on a firm and just foundation.

Loans for Education (E.R.P.)—(1950, pp. 41, 482) Res. 57 directed attention to the exchange differentials which will be felt when Marshall Plan funds are refunded. The resolution provided:

Whereas—Billions of dollars in

Marshall Plan funds and other European recovery funds are being made available to the Marshall Plan countries of Europe to assist in the program for European recovery, and

Whereas—These funds are sent as American dollars to the countries which are benefiting from the program, but are expended by the governments of these countries in such a way that they will eventually be returned as counterpart funds in native currency, and

Whereas—The Marshall Plan funds and other European recovery funds have been made available in such a way that the major portion of these funds which accumulate in native currency will not be returned to the United States in dollars but will be used for certain services within the countries to which they have been granted, and

Whereas—There is a dire need for additional educational services, including school buildings and technical assistance, as the foundation for democratic government in the countries which are benefiting under the plan, and

Whereas—The American Federation of Labor throughout its entire history has taken the position that democratic government cannot succeed without adequate public education, therefore, be it

Resolved—That the American Federation of Labor in Convention assembled in Houston, Texas, in September 1950, strongly urges the governments of the United States and of the countries benefiting under the European recovery program, to make available for educational purposes whatever part of the counterpart funds may be necessary for financing adequate democratic school systems in the European countries which are receiving economic assistance, and be it further to study this problem and to attempt to secure for educational purposes whatever portion of the counterpart funds may be necessary for building a democratic program of education in the countries which benefit under the plan.

Mutual Security Agency and Point Four Program—(1953, p. 269) From the beginning of the Marshall Plan, the A. F. of L. has given its full support to the program of rebuilding the war-torn countries and, in later years, toward the task of welding together a community of interest among democratic nations of the world to defend their freedom. The past year has been characterized by hesitation and delay in pressing toward the established goal of mutual security and economic reconstruction. To a certain degree, this was unavoidable, as our allies were waiting to see whether a change of administration in Washington would bring about a change in the future policy objectives in the United States. It was reassuring to us and to our allies to note that President Eisenhower called upon Congress to affirm our purpose to carry on the mutual security effort.

We have reached a crucial point in the task of welding together a community of free nations to resist Communist aggression. The aims of the Kremlin to drive a wedge between the United States and Great Britain, to split off France and other associated nations, and to break the bond of unity among them continues undeterred by the death of Stalin. However, the change in the Kremlin rule has brought about internal conflict and weakening in the political controls indispensable to dictatorship which offer us at this juncture a unique opportunity. Meeting this challenge calls for no half-hearted leadership or "economy sized" assistance programs. It calls for positive, aggressive assumption of the full responsibility of world leadership on the part of the United States, extended in a friendly and cooperative manner to all the free nations of the world.

It is for this reason that the American Federation of Labor has given its full support to the President's request for $5,250,000,000 for defense and defense-supported assistance, and for $550,000,000 for technical and economic aid and assistance to economic development, and has opposed all efforts to reduce this minimum amount.

When urging the Congress to meet the President's request in full, we have further proposed that funds be made available for two-year, rather than one-year, programs. Defense build-up sufficiently effective to deter aggression calls for a sustained effort over an extended period of time. Experience has shown that programming for only one year ahead is an expensive and in some ways wasteful procedure. . . .

(Page 272) The American Federation of Labor desires to cooperate in every way possible in the important program of building the mutual defense of the free nations of the world. We are convinced that no secure or lasting defense can be built within the democratic nations without the full and enthusiastic participation of the free trade union movements within those nations, and it is our conviction, born out of experience, that men having experience within the trade union movement are best equipped to secure this understanding and cooperation from among their fellow trade unionists within the other free nations. We will stand ready to provide experienced personnel for effective trade union participation, but cooperation cannot be forced by one party.

(P. 659) In recommending your acceptance of this section, we welcome particularly its call for "positive," aggressive assumption of the full responsibility of world leadership on the part of the United States, extended in a friendly and cooperative manner to all the free nations of the world.

Your Committee notes with regret that the plan proposed in October, 1952, by the A. F. of L and C. I. O. for the reorganization of the M.S.A. labor offices in Washington, Paris, and in the various country missions have not been acted upon by the Mutual Security Director. Since February, 1953, when it was presented directly to him, nothing has been done to deal with this problem.

In connection with the Point Four Program, we call for making available more capital funds and for a policy which encourages the development of free trade unions as the most effective instruments of raising living standards and promoting democratic rights and institutions.

In the light of the aggravated world situation, we propose:

1. Increased contributions by our government to the Technical Cooperation Administration and to the U.N. Technical Assistance Program.

2. The Mutual Security Aid Program should be continued but more and more through indirect assistance instead of direct outright grants. Such assistance should increasingly be given on the basis that the country thus benefited will reciprocate with help to our country or to NATO through services, supplies, various off-shore projects or mutual security arrangements.

3. In rendering such aid to specific projects rather than to general economic revival or expansion, our government should, in advance, secure an agreement with the nations concerned that this American help will be so utilized as to assure that the broadest sections of the people rather than small privileged groups will be the principal beneficiaries.

4. In this spirit, we heartily approve the humanitarian course of our government in granting to the rising progressive democracy of Pakistan one million bushels of wheat to help overcome the threat of famine. At the same time, we underscore the advisability of our government calling for the free trade unions and farm organizations being represented on the Pakistan Government Board administering the distribution of the American wheat relief program with a view of assuring that the proceeds from the sale of American wheat, at a reasonable price, will be set aside as a fund for promoting education, health, and housing.

(P. 272) The Executive Council included in its regular report, a special section on Point Four, including a brief description of activities under this Program. The conclusion of this section of the E.C. Report stated:

The American Federation of Labor, having been among the first to demand that the free world offer the backward nations a constructive alternative to Communism has consistently and strongly supported the Point Four program, and the United Nations Technical Assistance program. The monumental task which economic development presents cannot be accomplished without the help of the free trade union movement. Nor can its objectives, of elevating living standards and strengthening freedom and democracy, be gained without the encouragement of the development of strong free trade unions in the nations we seek to aid. We have insisted, therefore, that trade union training, workers' education, and the promotion of fair labor standards and full worker participation must be accepted as an essential feature of technical assistance programs.

Capital funds must be made available in greater volume for the purposes of the development program. Private foreign investment, accompanied by strict political and social safeguards against the abuse of power by outside interests, must of course be stimulated and encouraged. But private capital alone cannot do the job, for there are many necessary projects which are inappropriate for private investment and which private capital would not undertake. For these purposes, an International Development Fund, financed by the economically-advanced countries, is needed as a source of capital.

In the final analysis, however, the success or failure of economic development will depend upon the readiness of the nations involved to help themselves, by doing their utmost to increase their own capital funds through progressive tax and other policies, and to take the steps necessary to make the most of their own resources and opportunities in conjunction with outside aid.

We deplore the inadequacy of the funds made available to date for aid to underdeveloped countries. Both TCA and the United States contribution to the multi-lateral United Nations Technical Assistance program should be greatly expanded.

The UN Technical Assistance program has been meeting serious financial difficulties in recent months. Not only have the financial resources of the program not reached the expected size, which was said by U.S. representatives to be about $100 million a year when the program was begun three years ago, but it has never gone beyond $21 million a year. Yet the U.S. contribution very narrowly escaped a further drastic reduction—which would have wrecked the program if allowed to stand—in the last session of Congress. Only the most vigorous protests, by the American Federation of Labor and other interested groups, succeeded in preventing such a ruinous cut.

(Pp. 409, 668) Res. 43:

Whereas—The Point Four program, now officially the Technical Cooperation Administration, which has carried

"know-how" to the underdeveloped peoples, has not only helped the aforementioned peoples to help themselves, against hunger, poverty and disease, but also is a fine testament of the vision and moral strength of American democracy, a lesson the Asian and African masses cannot miss or forget when the agents of Moscow swoop down upon them to capture their minds, therefore, be it

Resolved—That this Seventy-second Annual Convention of the American Federation of Labor, assembled in St. Louis, Missouri, September, 1953, go on record as reaffirming its endorsement and support of the Point Four Program, and call upon the President and the Congress to expand it—both because it is a sound gesture of humanity toward peoples in dire need of economic aid and technical knowledge and also as a sound phase of the psychological warfare against Communist imperialism.

Your Committee has considered this resolution and recommends its adoption as fully in accord with the policy of the A. F. of L.

We especially commend this resolution for its emphasis on the objective of Point 4 being to help the people of the industrially underdeveloped countries to help themselves, thereby providing "a fine testament of the moral strength of American democracy."

(Pp. 104, 633) Although unduly severe cuts in the appropriations necessary to carry on the Mutual Security Program and the aid to underdeveloped areas of the world under the Point IV Program have sharply and prematurely curtailed our country's great effort to build the free world and its defenses, continuation of these modified programs was authorized for the coming year. The Thye Amendment to the Mutual Security Act, enacted with the support of the American Federation of Labor, helped to overcome the ill-advised and short-sighted attempt in Congress to wipe out entirely all phases of the labor program under the Foreign Overseas Administration. We should make every effort to insist on the retention of the labor program in the foreign aid legislation in the coming year and to assure better understanding by the general public and by the Congress of the vital role of free labor unions in the world struggle against Communism.

Whereas—The American Federation of Labor was the first labor organization in our country to indorse and actively support the Marshall Plan, and

Whereas—Upon the adoption of the Marshall Plan and the subsequent Mutual Security Administration, the A. F. of L provided these agencies with personnel for responsible posts in order to help rally world free labor to the support of the program for post-war economic reconstruction, the improvement of the conditions and standards of the great mass of people, and the national security especially of the countries of free Europe, and

Whereas—The plan proposed by the A. F. of L. and C.I.O. in October 1952 for the reorganization of the M.S.A. labor offices at home and overseas has to date not been acted upon by the Mutual Security Director, and

Whereas—The Labor Advisers in both Washington and Paris have resigned, therefore, be it

Resolved—That the Convention declares that henceforth all A. F. of L. members still on the staff or in various country missions of the M.S.A. are not to be considered as representing in any way whatsoever the A. F. of L. and, furthermore, that the A. F. of L. is in no way to be considered responsible for their activities in executing the policies of this federal agency.

Referred to the Executive Council for implementation.

Materials Policy Commission—(1952, pp. 177, 405) The President's Materials Policy Commission recently completed and made public the results of a comprehensive two-year study and evaluation of the nation's long-term requirements of materials needed to sustain expansion and growth. As our country becomes more dependent on the supply of raw materials from abroad, such a survey of the potential supply of materials at home and their prospective need is of special timeliness and importance.

A study of this kind, however, is only the first step. The task is a continuing one and should be carried on by the National Security Resources Board and other appropriate agencies of the government. Resources of our nation are not turned into real wealth until they have been put to productive use. The question of what use we make of materials we have thus becomes even more important. While the urgent problems today are those of national security, long-term considerations are those of national welfare.

The guiding objectives in what we do with our fuels, power, our forests, our metals and other raw materials, are the objectives of full employment and steady growth in the standard of living of our people. How we meet these objectives as a free nation is a challenge that must be successfully met. Labor is ready to assume its share in meeting this challenge. We ask therefore that the officers of our Federation seek effective labor participation in the work of agencies dealing with materials resources and their use.

McCarran Amendment (also see: Canal Zone)—(1954, pp. 405, 541) Res. 88 proposed that the A. F. of L. seek the repeal of the McCarran Act on the grounds that it has created difficulties and hardships on millions of foreign-born; and that its provisions have also created difficulties in issuing passports as well as admitting people from other countries into the United States. It was pointed out that the labor movement of the U. S. had opposed this legislation, and that its repeal had been recommended by a special committee appointed to study this Act; and that President Eisenhower had recommended changes in the law.

The resolution was referred to the E. C. for such action as may be warranted in view of convention action on the general subject of Immigration.

McCarthy, Jos. R.—(1954, p. 580) Res. 15 as originally submitted was not acted upon by the convention which adopted in its stead the following:

Whereas—Only on rare occasions does the American Federation of Labor single out any individual for specific mention for any convention action, and

Whereas—One individual U. S. Senator has, by his own actions, drawn such public attention that he has become a public issue, and

Whereas—This individual, the junior Senator from Wisconsin, Joseph R. McCarthy, has drawn this public attention by his reckless disregard of traditional democratic procedures and his contempt for individual liberties, and

Whereas—Communism is able to grow by exploiting substandard conditions produced by low wages, insufficient education, slum housing, denial of civil rights, including denial and abuse of fair judicial processes, and

Whereas—Since his first election in 1946, Senator McCarthy has been recorded by Labor's League for Political Education as having voted against the interests of working men and women on every single major issue including questions of minimum wages, social security, public housing, the Taft-Hartley law, control of inflation, education, taxes, and civil rights, and

Whereas—He has voted to cut military and economic aid to free countries fighting Communism, and

Whereas—This voting record is sufficient evidence that the Senator's self-appointed role as America's champion fighter against Communism is not confirmed by the voting record, therefore be it

Resolved—That the American Federation of Labor in convention assembled hereby condemns the conduct of Senator Joseph R. McCarthy as unworthy of the American tradition.

McGuire Memorial Proposed—(1948, p. 248) Res. 49 proposed support to campaign being conducted to raise funds for a suitable memorial to P. J. McGuire:

Whereas—The Central Labor Union of Camden County (New Jersey) and vicinity is, through its Peter J. McGuire Memorial Committee, endeavoring to raise a fund of $100,000 to erect a permanent and fitting memorial on the grave of that great pioneer leader of labor, father of Labor Day, and co-founder of the American Federation of Labor, and

Whereas—Such a cause is a worthy one, meriting the support of all working men and women since it is designed both to pay appropriate tribute to an outstanding contributor to the labor movement and to provide a shrine which labor people from all over the world can visit and gain inspiration and renewed courage for the unceasing fight which he espoused, therefore, be it

Resolved—By the American Federation of Labor in convention assembled that this organization of men and women who have benefited from the far-sighted vision, aggressive leadership and fearless courage of Peter J. McGuire expresses its endorsement of the aims of the Peter J. McGuire Memorial Committee and pledges its support toward the successful realization of its goal, and be it further

Resolved—That all locals affiliated with this organization be and they are hereby urged to lend their financial aid to the campaign to raise $100,000 necessary to create the memorial shrine.

McMahon, Brien, Nobel Prize Nomination to—(1952, pp. 52, 470) Res. 83 proposed that the A. F. of L. submit the name of the late Brien McMahon, as candidate for the Nobel Peace Prize for 1952.

Means Test—(1935, p. 801) The federal government, and the agencies which administer relief, have placed in operation, a means test, which test forces the applicant for relief to prove, in order to obtain relief, that he is absolutely destitute, and further to prove that no member of his family is earning anything, and that neither he nor any member of his family holds a job, not even a casual one for a day or more per week. This practice is anti-social in principle and in practice, for it forces a worker to a statement that he has become a pauper, and further results in a worker's hesitating to accept work which is not permanent, lest he, therefore, be denied needed relief. The moral degradation which this test forces upon the workers and their families is extremely harmful. The free trade unions of other countries have found that this so-called means test results in tragic consequences, and they have therefore vigorously and successfully opposed the continuance of it. The A. F. of L. condemns this so-called means test (actually a destitution test) and directs the E.C. to use every means at its command to bring about its elimination.

Medical Care of War Workers—(1942, p. 592) The convention considered two related resolutions, Nos. 97 and 99, both calling attention to the need for adequate medical care and hospitalization for war workers. The convention approved the purpose of the resolutions and referred them to the Committee on Social Security of the A. F. of L.

Membership Transfer—(1942, p. 593) Res. 110 requested the convention to take action reducing the initiation fee at present being charged and facilitating the transfer of membership of one international to another, particularly during the period of the war. The report of the convention committee was referred to the E.C. with the request that it take all steps within its authority to facilitate the transfer of membership. The committee report follows:

Your committee concurs with the view that every possible assistance should be given to facilitate entrance into the trade union movement or transfer of membership.

Your committee, however, is aware that many International Unions pay substantial sick, death and other benefits, and a large portion of initiation fees is transferred to the maintenance of these funds.

Your committee is further aware that this convention has no authority, neither should it attempt in any way to regulate or supervise the initiation fee charges by International Unions, for to do so would violate the definite guarantee of autonomy given to every International Union affiliated with the American Federation of Labor.

Whereas—The 1946 convention of the Oregon State Federation of Labor adopted a resolution favoring the interchange of union cards by all American Federation of Labor unions, and

Whereas—The practice of international unions of requiring an applicant for membership in local unions to pay an initiation fee into each union, even if such applicant is a member of a union of another craft, is a hindrance to organization effort and may, in many cases, place an undue and difficult burden upon members of American Federation of Labor unions who desire to change from one craft to another, therefore, be it

Resolved—That the American Federation of Labor appeals to the international unions to voluntarily consent to receiving, without exaction of an additional initiation fee, the application of any one who presents evidence of his membership in good standing of another union affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, and, be it further

Resolved—That no union under such circumstances shall be required to accept the application of a person unless he be qualified in the craft in which he seeks membership, and that in case a member of one craft seeks membership in a union of a craft having a higher initiation fee, and commanding a higher wage scale, the applicant may be required to pay as an initiation fee the difference between the higher fee of the union to which he seeks membership and the lower fee of the union in which he holds membership.

Your committee discussed Resolution No. 47 carefully and after due consideration recommends non-concurrence in the resolution.

Memorial Property Employees (National) (see: Civil Service Extension Proposed).

Menninger Foundation—(1954, pp. 377, 464) Res. 14:

Whereas—Mental Health is the Number One Health Problem in America, with 700,000 persons now hospitalized for mental illness, 250,000 persons being admitted to mental hospitals each year and 250,000 persons being treated in out-patient clinics and by private physicians each year, at a total cost of $3 billion in public expenditures and loss of earnings, and

Whereas—More than one-half of all the hospital beds in the nation are occupied by mental patients, and one out of every 12 persons sometime in his life will suffer mental illness severe enough to require hospitalization, and

Whereas—98% of those hospitalized with mental illness are hospitalized in public mental hospitals, and

Whereas—There is an extreme shortage of psychiatric and allied personnel in public mental hospitals and out-patient clinics upon which the working people of America depend to restore and maintain the mental health of themselves and their families, when they become ill, and

Whereas—Less than two cents is spent for research into mental illness for every dollar spent to hospitalize and treat mental patients, and

Whereas—The working class of people bears the brunt of this lack of psychiatric treatment and research, and

Whereas—The Menninger Foundation of Topeka, Kansas, has achieved world renown for its outstanding contributions to mental health by (1) training more psychiatrists than any other single institution, (2) expending more funds for research than any other private psychiatric institution, and (3) consulting with public mental hospitals in Kansas which has made them models for other public mental hospitals, and

Whereas—All of these contributions significantly enhance the health and welfare of the American working man, and

Whereas—The Menninger Foundation is a non-profit psychiatric treatment, training and research center supported by public subscription, therefore, be it

Resolved—That the delegates attending the convention of the American Federation of Labor endorse and support the Menninger Foundation, financially and otherwise, and to recommend concurrence by the affiliated bodies which they represent.

Merchant Marine (see: Maritime).

Mergenthaler, Ottmar — (1954, pp. 450, 491) Res. 138 paid tribute to the genius of Ottmar Mergenthaler on the hundredth anniversary of his birth. A. F. of L. joined with American Printing Trades Unions in marking the occasion.

Metal Polishers, War Production— (1942, p. 598) The following resolution, No. 139, was unanimously adopted by the convention, together with the recommendations of the convention committee:

Whereas — Restrictive orders on metal work and bright work, issued by the Office of Production Management and its successor, the War Production Board, have created extensive unemployment affecting many thousands of members of the Metal Polishers, Platers and Helpers International Union, and

Whereas—These restrictive orders, in addition to throwing thousands of these skilled mechanics out of employment, has forced the closing down of the polishing and plating department in many hundreds of companies in the polishing and plating business, and

Whereas—Both private capital and Government financing has led to the construction of many new plants, and the expanding of established plants, and during this building and expansion program there has been installed new polishing and plating equipment, while at the same time an enormous amount of such equipment in plants formerly operated by members of the Metal Polishers and Platers Union remains idle because their doors were closed due to the above mentioned restrictive orders by Government agencies, and

Whereas—To manufacture and install new machinery for polishing and plating is requiring tons upon tons of metal vitally essential to war production, and

Whereas—Where this new machinery is being installed it is the common practice of the employers not to use the skilled workmen who were idle because of restrictive orders, but invariably to attempt to employ unskilled help and train this class of labor to do the skilled work, a condition which materially impairs efficiency, and results in curtailing production and spoiling valuable castings and valuable metals because of the inefficient operation of these insufficiently skilled and untrained employees, and

Whereas—Since October 1941, the officers of the Metal Polishers, Platers and Helpers International Union, with the assistance of the Metal Trades Department, A. F. of L., have brought this serious condition to the attention of many of the Government agencies in Washington, D. C., and have presented volumes of factual data to substantiate the statements being made in regard to the above unjustified conditions affecting metal polishers and platers, and although the Government agencies visited agreed that the practice of installing new equipment, and attempting to train new employees while adequate equipment is already installed in metal polishing and plating establishments throughout the country, and their former skilled employees are idle, was a most impractical situation and should be immediately corrected, yet none of the Federal agencies have as yet taken steps to prevent the installation of new plating and polishing equipment, therefore be it

Resolved—That the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor be, and are hereby, requested to give every possible assistance to the Metal Polishers, Platers and Helpers International Union in securing an early adjustment of the problem presented in this resolution.

Your committee in recommending approval of this resolution calls attention to the economic waste caused by the closing down of metal polishing plants, the disuse of their mechanical equipment while new plants and new machinery are being installed in other places for metal polishing and plating.

It is evident that the Metal Polishers and Platers have been unable to secure adequate consideration of their situation by some Federal agencies.

Your committee believes that the full influence of the Executive Council should be asserted without delay, so that this unsound as well as unjust economic condition will be corrected.

Metal Trades Councils (FLU Membership in)—(1943, p. 463) Res. 22. Resolution referred to the Executive Council:

Whereas—As now constituted under the American Federation of Labor Metal Trades Department by-laws, federal labor unions and local trade unions, even though engaged in metal trades work, cannot obtain full-fledged membership in the American Federation of Labor metals trades councils, and

Whereas—This means that while they may be permitted to affiliate with a local council they cannot vote nor hold office in the council, and are only permitted to pay per capita tax and give cooperation, and

Whereas—This old rule of the Metal Trades Department not specifically adopted to bar federal labor unions and local trade unions, nevertheless affects them adversely and keeps out the potential backbone or nucleus for any metal trades council, and

Whereas—The skilled trades in the metal industry are more or less now organized in their own particular district councils, and

Whereas—A similar resolution had been introduced at the Sixty-second Annual Convention of the American Federation of Labor held in Toronto in 1942 as Resolution No. 20 and was referred to the Committee on Resolutions and the Committee recommended the resolution be referred to the Metal Trades Department which recommendation was unanimously adopted and although the Metal Trades Department has had a year to act on this resolution without any known action having been taken on this resolution, therefore, be it

Resolved—That the American Federation of Labor in convention assembled in Boston, Massachusetts, goes on record urging the Metal Trades Department to amend its constitution and by-laws so as to permit full-fledged membership in metal trades councils to those federal labor unions and local trade unions engaged in the metal industry, and be it further

Resolved—That the international unions now affiliated or eligible to full-fledged membership in metal trades councils be requested to extend their aid and influence to the end that federal labor unions and local trade unions be granted full-fledged and bona fide membership in all metal trades councils, and be it further

Resolved—That the Metal Trades Department be called upon to immediately make known to the state federations of labor and city central bodies their action on this resolution.

Mexico (Proposed Treaty Protested)
—(1944, p. 537) Res. 127:

Whereas—There is pending before the Foreign Relations Committee of the United States Senate a treaty between the United States and the Republic of Mexico, relating to the waters of the Rio Grande, the Colorado River and the Tijuana River; and

Whereas—Said treaty authorizes an international boundary and water commission, and the American section thereof, without adequate congressional controls, to plan and construct vast works on the main stream and on all tributaries of said rivers, and to control all labor on such construction work, and expressly permits the free passage of labor into the United States for use upon such works "without any immigration restrictions, passports or labor requirements," and further expressly permits the free passage into the United States of "materials, implements, equipment and repair parts" fabricated by foreign labor for the construction, operation and maintenance of such work; and

Whereas—Under the method of performing such work authorized and permitted by the said treaty, low-cost Mexican labor may be used upon any job done in the United States along the International border, to the exclusion of American labor; and

Whereas—The pending treaty guarantees a minimum of 1,500,000 acre feet of water per year to Mexico from the Colorado River, which guaranteed minimum exceeds by 750,000 acre feet per year the quantity of water which Mexico could use from the unregulated river, and such additional water is available for use solely by reason of the expenditure of American money and the use of American labor on American soil in the construction of the Boulder Project, and such guarantee of water to Mexico would deprive the southwestern part of the United States of water required for its growth and expansion, both industrially and agriculturally, and would curtail the opportunities of American labor in such development; and

Whereas—The application of such water to agricultural use in Mexico, where cheap labor is available, would enable Mexican farmers to undersell

American farmers using American labor, and would tend to reduce American standards of living; and

Whereas—The United States has entered into solemn contracts for the use of all of the waters of the Colorado River stored by the Boulder Project, in consideration of which public and private organizations within the United States have agreed to repay to the United States the entire cost of such Boulder Project, and have expended hundreds of millions of dollars in the construction of works to utilize such water, and such contracts cannot be fully performed by the United States in the event of ratification of the pending treaty, and breach of such contracts on the part of the United States would be contrary to American principles and sound business practice and would deprive American agencies of water supplies upon which they have relied, and which have been made available at their expense; therefore, be it

Resolved—That this 64th annual convention of the American Federation of Labor vigorously protest the ratification of this said treaty.

Mexican Federation of Labor—(1924, p. 221) A resolution adopted by the Mexican Federation of Labor (CROM) was submitted to the convention by a representative as follows:

Whereas—The A. F. of L. has given unequivocal proofs of solidarity to the Mexican labor movement and has defended energetically the Mexican Federation of Labor from all the attacks from which we have been victims in the U. S., reciprocating loyally to this noble attitude; be it Resolved—That the Mexican Federation of Labor will oppose all attacks which the enemies of the A. F. of L. will attempt to undertake against it in any part whatsoever of the Mexican Republic.

(1925, p. 83) The Fourth Congress of the Pan-American Federation of Labor was held in Mexico City, Mexico, December 3-9, 1924, inclusive. The Mexican Federation of Labor invited the A. F. of L. convention, held in El Paso, Texas, to visit Mexico and hundreds of delegates with their wives and friends went to Mexico to take part in the ceremonies of the inauguration of President Elias Calles. The American delegates and visitors received the most generous hospitality from the Mexican government and the Mexican Federation of Labor. The inauguration of President Calles immediately followed the Congress. Calles, the choice of Mexican labor for the presidency, was the first president for decades to reach that office by constitutional procedure. He represented a national movement in Mexico and was the exponent of constructive reform of the government and social institutions. The labor movement he held necessary to that end. More than any previous Congress, this one marked the Pan-American Federation of Labor as an established organization, indispensable to the progress of the workers of the American Republics and to good relations between the American peoples. This convention established the fact that Pan-American labor has carried its international movement beyond the stage of experiment. The Mexico City convention always will be memorable for its work and for the fact that it was the last gathering of organized labor over which Samuel Gompers presided. The great leader of American labor gave his last effort to the workers of Pan-America, his last concern was for the solidarity, stability and constructiveness of their movement. His last public appearance and public work was in occupancy of the presiding officer's chair on the rostrum of their convention. This convention laid down one of the clearest statements of trade union policy ever written as its declaration of purpose and principle and this declaration was adopted by unanimous vote. The Pan-American labor movement is committed to a policy of constructive trade unionism of unmistakable clarity and logic. There are evidences among many of the groups of people in a number of Latin-American countries of a feeling of apprehension regarding the attitude of the U. S. toward them. Certain commercial undertakings have not always been guided by high ethical standards, and their acts have been interpreted as indicative of the attitude of our whole nation by politicians and others whose personal interests would be served by such perversions. Our A. F. of L. seeks to bring to Latin America the idealism and the humanism of our nation. Through the Pan-American Federation of Labor we hope to achieve this purpose. The one hope of release for oppressed peoples is through the growth of the labor movement. The labor movement offers the one opportunity for bringing to these oppressed and frequently almost benighted peoples the freedom that will permit education and free expression of opinion. The history of European peoples is repeating itself in Latin America to a considerable degree. The trade union movement is and must be basically economic or industrial, but there can be no free functioning economic movement in Latin America until political despotism has been removed. In more than one Latin-American country the arm of the state is used to prevent organization of the workers. Venezuela is a notable example of this condition. It is a sad commentary on the state of affairs in that country when it must be reported that the seat of the Venezuelan labor movement is New York City. On the other hand, Mexico, having achieved political freedom through the overthrow of political autocracy, has developed a labor movement that might well be the pride of any country. Until the political despotism was dethroned in Mexico there was no open, free labor movement. There were only secret, fearful groups. There must be opportunity for freedom of expression, through speech and the press before there can be a real trade union movement in any country. The development of freedom in Mexico and the building of a great trade union movement has so changed the thought of the people of that country that it would be today impossible to provoke misunderstanding between the two peoples through the misrepresentation of any group. The two labor movements, representing the backbone of both populations, understand each other and have every confidence in each other. It is that condition that the Pan-American Federation of Labor aims to create throughout all Latin America, bringing the peoples together in understanding from the frozen northern boundaries of Canada to the last outpost of civilization at the southern tip of South America. The Pan-American Federation of Labor conceives it to be its duty to promote freedom and democracy on these two united continents and in that freedom to erect a trade union movement that will guarantee freedom and democracy. The labor movements of the United States, Mexico, Nicaragua, Panama, Santo Domingo, Guatemala, Colombia and Puerto Rico were represented by a total of twenty-six representatives. Important decisions of the Congress occurred upon resolutions. Of primary importance was the declaration dealing with the nature and activities of the trade union movement. This declaration will serve as a guide to many of the workers in Latin-American countries where the movement is just taking shape and direction. The Congress approved the principle that Labor ought to be represented in connection with the consular service of all countries. The Congress endorsed the principle underlying the Pan-American Union as of importance in developing effective world organization and urged upon the labor movements of Latin-American countries to promote the best development of the Pan-American Union and recommended to national labor organizations that they endeavor to secure representation on their national delegations participating in the Latin-American financial conferences. The Congress placed itself on record as opposed to secret treaties. The Congress recommended that an effort be made to help the trade unionists of Pan-America develop constructive policies for dealing with the immigrants from Jamaica and Barbadoes, brought to Panama for the construction of the Panama Canal. It was decided to hold the next Congress in Washington in 1925 in deference to the late Samuel Gompers, but his death following this Congress, as related elsewhere, made necessary the selection of another chairman of the Pan-American Federation of Labor. Accordingly, a meeting was held in the A. F. of L. Building on February 20, 1925, in which the labor movements of the United States, Santo Domingo, Cuba, Venezuela and Puerto Rico were represented by delegates. The President of the A. F. of L. was duly elected chairman of the Pan-American Federation of Labor by unanimous vote, upon nomination made by the Mexico Federation of Labor. On the second meeting held on February 23, 1925, he was duly installed as chairman of the Pan-American Federation of Labor. Canuto Vargas, Spanish-speaking secretary of the Pan-American Federation of Labor, having been appointed as Labor Attaché to the Mexican Embassy at Washington by the President of the Mexican Republic, resigned his position as secretary. The Mexican Federation of Labor was requested to nominate a successor and proposed the name of Santiago Iglesias, President of the Puerto Rican Federation of Labor, for Spanish-speaking secretary of the Federation. He was appointed and arrived in Washington July 21, 1925, to take charge of the office. Following the conference between the Mexican Federation of Labor and the A. F. of L. on Immigration a meeting of the E.C. was held in Washington, D. C., August 28, at which all officers were present. As the meeting was the first held since the death of the first president of the Pan-American Federation of Labor, Samuel Gompers, the first action was to authorize the secretaries to draft memorial resolutions. The meeting considered the possibility of developing plans to organize the workers of all Pan-American countries and directed that everything possible be done within the resources of the Pan-American Federation. So far as the resources of the Federation will permit and so far as its influence can be made felt through correspondence every effort will be made to carry out the declarations of the Mexico City Convention. The E.C. discussed fully the financial resources of the movement. It was decided that the question of deciding the date of the next convention of the Pan-American Federation of Labor should be postponed until after the Atlantic City Convention of the A. F. of L. In addition to the activity reported under the section on Pan-American Federation of Labor the following international records are of historical importance as disclosing American Labor's concern for international justice and peace. When the Secretary of State issued a public declaration which seemed likely to jeopardize the amicable relations and good will existing between the peoples of Mexico and the U. S., the President of the A. F. of L. sent the following letter of inquiry to the Secretary of State: June 15, 1925. "Sir: It is with the gravest concern I have followed the statements issued by you on behalf of the American government and by President Calles on behalf of the Mexican Republic. Your statement came with most startling surprise because of the friendly relations of mutual faith and good will existing between the people of this country and the people of Mexico and the economic rehabilitation of Mexico which has been in progress in Mexico under Presidents Obregon and Calles. As you know, no other group of American citizens has done more to make possible a situation in Mexico under which constructive development is possible than the American labor movement. Because of the sense of very grave responsibility that I feel as the official representative of the A. F. of L., I wish to be in a position to decide wisely policies concerning not only the millions that constitute the labor movement of the U. S., but our fellow workers in the labor movement of Mexico. At the earliest opportunity that it has been possible for me to do so I am seeking from you such additional facts and information as will make it possible for me to interpret your public statement on relations with Mexico. If it is not incompatible with the best interests of our country, I should appreciate it very much if you will let me have specific instances of cases of failure to secure proper indemnification of property losses in Mexico and especially would I like to have the details of the specific instance cited in which the Mexican government at the request of Labor took over property for which no compensation has been made. Of course, I know there are exigencies of state which make it impossible at times for an official to disclose information but as the matters of complaint to which your statement makes reference are concerned wholly with adjustment of property claims there seems to be no impropriety in the request hereby submitted. I am seriously concerned that there should be even the implication that our government would lend aid and support to a movement against the constitutional government of Mexico. It is unthinkable that our government should contribute to the development of a situation that might lead to military intervention in Mexico and I hasten to seek information that may clarify the situation." The President of the A. F. of L. held conferences with Secretary Kellogg in which the whole international situation with Mexico was fully discussed. Because American Labor deems it essential that understanding and good will be maintained between the peoples of Mexico and the United States, a conference between representatives of organized labor seemed expedient to prevent misunderstanding attending the declaration of Secretary Kellogg. In addition to this purpose, there was need to discuss another problem in which labor interests were vitally concerned, a greatly increased Mexican immigration into the United States stimulated by the operation of the selective immigration law, which gives exemption to native born Mexicans from quota restrictions. President Green felt that constructive results would be forthcoming through discussion of resulting immigration problems by the organized labor movements of Mexico and the United States. He proposed to the Confederacion Regional Obrera Mexicana a conference on immigration, suggesting that if an agreement could be reached between the two labor movements much could be done by advising workers as to how to protect their own best interests through voluntary cooperation and pursuance of any policy agreed upon and also that the labor movements could recommend to their respective governmental authorities whatever policies Labor might determine were for the best interests of their respective nations. The Mexican Federation of Labor accepted the conference suggestion and a conference was held in Washington, August 27, 1925. The conference lasted through two days and adopted the following recommendations:

Time and experience have demonstrated that the progress of mankind, ethically, spiritually and economically, is best achieved under the great principles of freedom, democracy and the right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. History shows the constant tendency of man to congregate in groups and the beneficial results of such groupings are clearly discernible throughout the ages. Groups everywhere strive to create their own cultures, to cultivate their own lands, to create their own institutions and establish their own customs. Always they seek means of protecting their group integrity and the integrity of their boundaries. We hold that the ultimate condition of mankind should be such that all men should enjoy the greatest possible right to travel freely to every part of the world in pursuit of happiness and well-being. But we assert that there is an obligation, universal in character, which makes it obligatory upon every person to refrain from so ordering his movements or his conduct as to endanger the standards and conditions of life and the progress achieved on the part of any group which he may seek to enter. And groups have the right to protect themselves against such intrusion. There is, we maintain, a further obligation upon every individual which makes it a duty to work within his own group for the safeguarding of the standards and conditions built up elsewhere; and instead of seeking improvement elsewhere at the expense of others it is his duty to work for improvement within his own group. The duty of his group is but an enlargement of his individual duty, identical in principle. Nationhood is but another term for group. Thus we have presented to us what we know as the problem of immigration and emigration, complex and difficult, but resting in its entirety upon the principles which we have just stated. Our conference considered both of these problems as joint phases of a single problem. Furthermore, the problem was considered in its relation to the economic organizations of the workers with their voluntary character and methods and in its relation to the state with its machinery for action in the political sphere. On the subject of immigration we feel deeply the necessity for careful consideration by every nation of the effect of incoming peoples on moral, physical, political and economic integrity. Hitherto nations throughout the world, including our own nations, have sought only to exclude other peoples, either partially or wholly, wisely or unwisely. Nations have acted solely on the defensive. They have failed to recognize their own obligations to restrain their own people from moving across boundaries in such a way as to menace the conditions of life and the institutions of other peoples. We believe we can now set up at least in the Western Hemisphere this great principle of self-restraint and we recommend to this conference the establishment of that principle. In this way there is brought into being an abandonment of the principle of compulsion and the adoption of the principle of voluntary action which underlies our labor movements and governs our action as trade unionists. We call upon the A. F. of L. and the Confederacion Regional Obrera Mexicana to press their respective governments for adoption and enforcement of this new principle of voluntary restraint. While we recognize clearly that at all times each nation must be the final judge of what constitutes a menace to its standards and its institutions, we are confident that the labor movements of our two nations, working in cooperation and with a common ideal in mind, can arrive at conclusions and agree upon measures that will meet the requirements of the time. Human progress is always best safeguarded by agreement and cooperation and we believe this field is a proper one for the exercise of those qualities. We appreciate fully the instructions which impose upon us the duty to prepare specific recommendations as a basis for legislative or executive action on the part of our respective nations. We are, however, of the opinion that definite recommendations cannot be set forth at this time. There are various reasons for this, chief among them being our lack of sufficient detailed information. We find another road to our goal and we ask for its consideration. We recommend, therefore, the creation of a joint commission to represent the Confederacion Regional Obrera Mexicana and the A. F. of L. for the continuous study of immigration and emigration, and problems arising therefrom, to work through the Pan-American Federation of Labor, for the continuous study of the question and for the preparation of satisfactory detailed recommendations or measures for submission to the governments of the respective countries by the respective labor unions. As an immediate means of safeguarding and improving the moral, material and civil conditions, of the workers of both countries we urge and recommend that workers crossing international boundaries immediately join the union of their trade in the country to which they go and abide faithfully by the laws and rules of the movement to which they go and we pledge our efforts to the full to bring about observance of this principle by our respective affiliated memberships. In that manner we can give a large measure of protection to the economic, social, civil and political institutions of both countries and assist in the development and advancement of our respective peoples in accordance with their own requirements and ideals. We shall by this means also promote mutual good will, respect, understanding and confidence. In conclusion we believe it appropriate to include in this report a renewal of our long-standing pledge of brotherhood, mutual good will and confid-dence and lasting friendship. As the years have passed we have witnessed the great mutual advantage of our faith in each other. We have learned to place in each other implicit faith and confidence and we have seen the great practical results which have had their genesis in this fraternal relation, as well as the great spiritual satisfaction which it has given to us. Upon each succeeding occasion we come together in better understanding and with fuller knowledge and we look to the future with confidence and supreme faith. It is with pride that we face the world in this harmony of understanding and idealism, calling upon the workers of all countries to know each other and to give their energies to the promotion of human progress through a common idealism and mutual understanding and good will. The above agreement was unanimously approved." After adopting this declaration the conference instructed the chairman of the Pan-American Federation to appoint a commission of four to carry out its purpose. It was agreed that the president of the A. F. of L. take up with the Confederacion Regional Obrera Mexicana by correspondence designation of two representatives of Mexico and upon receipt of that information announce the commission.

Mexican Nationals, Exploitation Opposed

(1948, pp. 244, 462) Res. 40: Resolved, That the 67th convention of the American Federation of Labor go on record as being opposed to the violation of our immigration laws and the use of Mexican nationals who have been so exploited, and be it further

Resolved, That the American Federation of Labor use all available resources and take whatever action may be necessary with our State Department, or any other proper government or state agency, to discontinue further exploitation and use of Mexican nationals as described herein.

Mexican Railroad Workers—(1924, p. 181) Resolution adopted urging that the sixth annual convention of the Mexican Federation of Labor in session at Juarez, Mexico, pass a resolution calling upon their countrymen working upon the railroads in the United States to affiliate with the United Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way Employes, for their protection as well as for the protection of the other employes working in this and other departments of the railroads in which they may be employed.

Mexican Revolution and Labor — (1927, p. 264) The Executive Council made a report of an investigation requested by the 1926 convention of the relations existing between the Mexican Federation of Labor and the Mexican government.

Mexican Trade Unions, Cooperation Between U. S. Organizations and

(1951, pp. 285, 560) Res. 28 directed attention to the problem of migration of workers across the international boundary and proposed as a solution: That this seventieth convention of the American Federation of Labor, assembled in San Francisco, instruct the president of the American Federation of Labor to initiate such procedures as may be necessary to develop the program outlined herein, and to improve the relationship with the approved Mexican labor movement and the American Federation of Labor, and to conduct such meetings and conferences as may be necessary to improve and protect the best interests of wage earners in both the United States and Mexico.

(1951, pp. 294, 425) Res. 49 and 50 called attention to problems caused U. S. workers by migratory workers from Mexico and called upon officers of A. F. of L. to assist in working out and enforcing agreements between border state federations and Mexican unions to protect the interests of both the Mexican workers and union members in the United States.

Your committee moves that Resolutions Nos. 49 and 50 be referred to the Executive Council, with the recommendation that all necessary action be taken to achieve their objectives in cooperation with the Latin-American Department of the American Federation of Labor, the Inter-American Regional Organizations of the ICFTU and the Free Trade Union Organization of Mexico, particularly the two organizations affiliated with the ICFTU—the National Confederation of Labor and the National Proletarian Confederation.

Mexican Nationals, Illegal Entry

(1952, pp. 27, 463) Res. 18. Resolved, That the 71st Convention of the American Federation of Labor express its horror that the processes of democratic government have been so perverted by selfish interests as to prevent the enforcement of our laws and the Convention go on record as demanding the enforcement of our immigration laws and call upon the next Congress to appropriate necessary funds to prevent the illegal entry of Mexican wetbacks.

(Wetback Problems)

(1953, pp. 152, 499) The problems facing American migratory farm workers incidental to competition of Mexican workers, and those illegally entering the country to enter farm work, was presented briefly by the Executive Council. The convention in turn adopted the following committee report on the subject (p. 499):

The major condition handicapping America's migratory farm workers has been increasing competition from imported Mexican workers. This competition is of two types: Mexican workers legally entering this country under contract authorized by law and so-called "wetback" Mexicans who illegally cross the border, evade the border patrol, and obtain farm employment.

During the past year, Congress has extended through 1955 the authority for the program of contracting Mexican nationals, but it failed to adopt the recommendations urged by the A. F. of L. to safeguard the program against abuse.

Even more important are the steps this country must take to cut off the flow of Mexicans illegally entering our country, which has reached the alarming figure of 100,000 a month.

The Department of Justice is now reviewing its enforcement program in an effort to reduce the flow of wetbacks across the border. In so doing, the Department has been subject to intense pressure from Texas and California corporation farmers who have been eager to exploit the illegally entering Mexican workers as a source of cheap farm labor. We urge the Justice Department resist this pressure and formulate an effective program to enforce our immigration laws against "wetbacks." Additional funds are needed to reinforce the border patrol and must be provided by Congress. In addition your Committee recommends legislation be introduced into the next session of Congress penalizing employers who employ illegal entrants.

Conference—(1953, pp. 415, 651) Res. 56 called for active participation of A. F. of L. affiliates in conference called to work out problems of Mexican wetbacks in competition with American workers.

Mexico (Joint U. S.-) Trade Union Committee

(1955, p. 289) The American Federation of Labor took part in the Third Conference of the Joint U. S.-Mexico Trade Union Committee, held in San Diego, California, August 23-25. . . .

The conference approved the principle of an International Agreement for the use of Mexican contract workers in the United States, called for legislation to penalize persons who hire or transport illegal workers, asked an increase in compliance staff of the U. S. Labor Department to one compliance officer for each 2,000 braceros, and asked consultative status for labor at future negotiations between the two governments on the International Labor Agreement.

The conference endorsed the principles of the Rio Grande Pact and recommended that all labor organizations of both countries having common problems along the border unite under such pacts to assist each other in eliminating the differential in wages and working conditions that exists between the two countries, and in the accomplishment of all other purposes of trade unionism.

The Rio Grande Pact covers the Brownsville and San Antonio Building Trades Councils and the appropriate Building Trades Councils across the border, belonging to the Mexican Confederation of Workers (CTM). It provides for the setting up of a commission with an equal number of representatives from each side. The joint commission itself negotiates and bargains with any employers, who are normally contractors. The first project to be covered by the Pact is expected to be the construction of a bridge at Laredo.

The success of the Pact as applied to the Lower Rio Grande Valley has prompted the Texas State Federation to meet with the Mexican CTM State Federations bordering Texas and work out a comprehensive program for mutual cooperation not only in the building trades but in all fields. Subsequently, negotiations have been concluded on a pact between the Teamsters and the Freight Handlers in Laredo and Nuevo Laredo, setting up a commission also. However, this commission does not set bargaining rights but supervises problems on international traffic. These pacts have been approved by the local negotiators and are in the process of being ratified finally by the CTM and the Teamsters' International Union. Plans are under way to extend these pacts to other fields—Garment and Textile Workers, Hotel and Restaurant, Retail Clerks and any other industry which normally hires workers living on the Mexican side of the border.

After the adjournment of the San Diego conference, meetings were arranged between a number of Mexican delegates and representatives of the San Diego Central Labor Council, with the view of formulating plans to try out the same method of cooperation with Mexican unions of Lower California, just across the border, particularly in the building and fishing industries where disturbing conflicts of interests have been recorded in the past. These preliminary meetings were followed by joint conferences between the San Diego Central Labor Council and the Lower California CTM, one in Tijuana, and the other in San Diego, with the possibility that a formal pact of cooperation will be signed in the near future.

Michigan (Workers) Educational Service

(1948, pp. 376, 508) Protest against the arbitrary suspension of the workers education service in the State of Michigan was called for by Res. 138 adopted as follows:

Whereas, The American Federation of Labor has promoted and urged the establishment of workers education services both federally and state supported, and

Whereas, The Workers Educational Service in the State of Michigan has been carrying on a program with the advice and cooperation of the labor movement in that state, and

Whereas, This program was arbitrarily suspended on July 1, 1948, and subsequently definitely terminated by the Board of Regents of the University of Michigan contrary to the advice of President Ruthven and the administrative officers of the university, and

Whereas, This action in terminating the program by the Board of Regents was clearly at the instance and under pressure from Governor Sigler and the General Motors Corporation as evidenced by testimony given by a representative of that corporation before the House Sub-Committee on Education in Washington, therefore, be it

Resolved, The American Federation of Labor in convention assembled register a protest at the manner in which the summary action was taken, constituting as it does a violation of academic freedom, and a denial to the workers of Michigan of services which the universities are freely giving to other groups in society, and be it further

Resolved, That the American Federation of Labor urge the immediate restoration of the Workers Educational Service program in Michigan as it had been carried on prior to its suspension on July 1, 1948.

Migratory Labor

(1940, pp. 74, 390) A. F. of L. actively supported authorization for much needed investigation into the interstate migration of destitute citizens, to study, survey and investigate the social and economic needs, and the movement of indigent persons across state lines to obtain all facts possible in relation thereto which would not only be of public interest but which would aid the House in enacting remedial legislation.

The Executive Council successfully urged adequate appropriations for a continuance of the migratory labor camp program of the Farm Security Administration. Available records show that at least 350,000 American families—more than a million men, women and children—are wandering from state to state in a desperate effort to earn a living as migrant farm laborers. These families probably have the lowest living standards of any group in the United States. Their incomes usually range between $200 and $450 a year. The camp program, inaugurated by the Farm Security Administration, is the very least the Government should do to alleviate the suffering of these migratory farm families.

The Federation strongly opposed the proposed curtailment of the farm tenant purchase program. This program is of immediate interest to organized labor because it constitutes one of the most promising methods of halting the drift of surplus labor from the farms to the cities. During the last decade many thousands of displaced tenants and sharecroppers have moved to the cities in search of jobs or in hope of relief. These job hunters have, of course, thrown a depressing burden on the labor market, which is growing heavier year by year. The tenant loans under the Bankhead-Jones Act have proved highly effective in checking this trend by anchoring farm families on their own land. In addition, the tenant-purchase loans have increased actively in the rural-housing field and furnished considerable employment for building trades workers. Tenant-purchase loans are made large enough to cover not only the cost of the farm land, but also the cost of placing the farm buildings in good repair. In many instances this has required all new construction.

(1940, p. 490) Res. 8. The convention recognized the problems of migratory and transient workers both as it concerns them, and in relation to the effect of their increasing numbers and sub-standard conditions on other workers. The Executive Council was instructed to study the problem presented by the migratory and transient workers, and to take such steps as will safeguard and protect the social and civic rights of these workers.

(Defense)

(1942, p. 162) During the past year the special committee has continued pursuant to H. Res. 63 (76th Congress) and H. Res. 16 (77th Congress) to investigate problems of national defense migration. In response to an invitation from the committee, President Green in February, 1942, presented a statement on the question of the labor market policy of the United States, as part of a symposium published by the committee in Part 28 of its hearings. The statement by President Green anticipates many of the steps subsequently taken by the President's Executive Order establishing the War Manpower Commission, and proposes certain additional measures which the Tolan Committee has also endorsed and urged upon the Administration. In his statement President Green declared that the Federal Government must take responsibility for planning for the fullest use of production facilities and workers to assure adequate material equipment for our armed forces when and where needed. He pointed out that in order to plan effective transfer of workers to war work, two kinds of information are needed by plants, localities, and regions: (1) a continuous inventory of plant facilities and their potential war production, and (2) a paralleling inventory of work skills available and the work experiences of all employees. He advocated setting up an adequate national system of unemployment compensation to tide workers across the period between jobs if they are not placed immediately in war jobs when civilian work is stopped. Among other proposals, in his statement, was one calling for widespread placing of war contracts so that workers may be effectively used on jobs in their home communities. As to training he pointed out that confusion arose through failure to use existing agencies to the fullest extent, and that practically 90 per cent of all training must be done on the job. To effectuate a national labor market policy he called for locating responsibility in some one person or agency and giving representation to those concerned in the formulation of guiding principles — employers and workers. President Green indicated that he regarded the Employment Service as the primary agency for planning labor supply, working in close coordination with the Selective Service. He stated that for purposes of policy making the agency responsible for mobilizing labor supply should be independent of the agency mobilizing for the material side of production. Such an agency, he held, should be directed by a civilian and that personnel and procedure should be civilian. Finally he called for advisory policy committees of employers and employees not only at the Federal level, but at each level of operation.

(1950, pp. 32, 479) Whereas, The best authorities agree there are some two million people existing as migrant workers, and

Whereas, These workers are denied most of the protections of other workers and their families, a decent wage, schools, medical service, decent housing, workmen's compensation, unemployment compensation, etc., and

Whereas, This problem is increasing each year, therefore, be it

Resolved, The American Federation of Labor in convention assembled, instruct the incoming officers to use every effort to have the Secretary of Labor revive the Inter-agency Committee on Migrant Labor, and further be it

Resolved, The American Federation of Labor registers its protest against these deplorable conditions by endorsing the Report of the National Inter-agency Committee, together with the Model Federal and State Bills included in the report of this Committee. Referred to president of A. F. of L. for proper consideration and action.

(1952, p. 275) In reporting on the efforts made to secure the passage of an adequate migratory labor bill, the Executive Council Report said in part:

We gave our wholehearted support to this legislation in the hope that worthwhile results could be achieved. Testimony before the Subcommittee was preponderantly in favor of results. We maintained that an over supply of labor increased by the importation of alien labor in direct competition with our own farm organization's membership could only serve to continue low wage rates.

(p. 494) Convention action. The difficulties involved in the protection of wage standards and other conditions for migratory workers was the subject of considerable activity by Committees of the House and Senate. Representatives of the American Federation of Labor and its constituent organizations were successful in preventing harmful legislation, but were unable to secure enactment of satisfactory measures. It is pointed out, however, that through the airing of conditions in hearings some improvements were made in administration of existing laws. It is recommended that these activities be continued.

(Migratory Labor, Federal Committee On)

(1952, pp. 52, 494) Res. 81: Whereas, The President's Commission on Migratory Labor in American Agriculture in its report made public early in 1951 made certain recommendations both for legislative and administrative action to improve the conditions of agricultural workers, and

Whereas, The U. S. Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee early in 1952 held exhaustive hearings before which workers, employers and other persons interested in the welfare of migratory agricultural workers appeared, and

Whereas, The Senate Committee unanimously reported a bill to establish a Federal Committee on Migratory Labor for the purpose of coordinating work of the various agencies of government which should be concerned in this grave social and economic problem but this legislation was not considered in the final session of the 82nd Congress, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the American Federation of Labor in Convention assembled, call upon the incoming Congress to enact legislation providing for the inclusion of agricultural workers under all types of appropriate legislation accorded other American workers, and be it further

Resolved, That the American Federation of Labor call upon the new Administration to sponsor such needed legislation and to carry out other recommendations made by the Commission of Migratory Labor in American agriculture.

(1954, p. 111) The Executive Council reported on continued efforts to secure the establishment of a Federal Committee on Migratory Labor during 1954. The Executive Council report stated: The need for such a commission (Federal Committee on Migratory Labor) as a central coordinating body of agencies dealing with the problems of migrant farm workers has been further emphasized since the last report (1953) of the Executive Council was presented. The report continued:

Thousands of families have again been struck by drought in the Dust Bowl embracing portions of the States of Texas, Colorado, Oklahoma, and Kansas. Many of them have been forced to seek a livelihood elsewhere, principally on the Pacific Coast, where they joined the ranks of migrants who are facing unemployment and the lowest wage and living standards in the national economy.

The urgent necessity for establishing such a Committee has also been underscored by the backwash of unemployment in some areas of the Southwest resulting from decreased production in industry. Again it has been shown that industrial workers have a vital stake in raising the wage levels and working conditions in agriculture, to which thousands of them must return from time to time during periods of readjustment in industry. The proposed Committee could render invaluable service in correlating information from various sources that would lay the foundation for a constructive national policy on seasonal and migratory labor. The American Federation of Labor will continue to press for early consideration and action on this proposal.

(p. 542) This section of the Executive Council's Report reviews the efforts by the A. F. of L. to obtain enactment of legislation establishing a Federal Committee on Migratory Labor. Such a Committee, with a Chairman appointed by the President, would stimulate more energetic action by the Federal Government to aid America's migrant workers. The necessity for government action is urgent, since the special employment, health and educational needs of these workers have been almost completely neglected by state and federal legislation.

After Congress adjourned without taking action on this legislation, the President did appoint an Interdepartmental Committee on Migratory Labor composed of representatives from six federal agencies with the Secretary of Labor as Chairman. While this constitutes a constructive forward step, this Committee would operate with greater effectiveness if its authority were established by congressional action. We should continue to seek enactment of state and federal legislation to achieve this purpose.

Militarism (Civil Affairs)

(1924, p. 74) A bill introduced in the Senate provided that officers of the United States, civil and military, including retired officers, may at any time be specially assigned by the head of any department to duty with or in any branch, agency, or political division of the government whenever authorized by the President of the United States. The A. F. of L. opposed the measure, it being recognized as an attempt to militarize the civil service. No action has been taken. (p. 265) While we justly and rightfully condemn and resent all efforts and tendencies toward pacifism, we likewise condemn and resent all efforts and tendencies toward militarism. The veiled attempt being made to militarize the civilian service of our national government requires our constant and persistent opposition.

(1926, p. 214) Under the present laws of the U. S. of America, active service men of the armed forces of the U. S. of America are not permitted to compete with American citizens in private life under the Act of June 3, 1916 (39th Stat. 188), which provides as follows: "Hereafter no enlisted men in the active service of the United States army, navy and marine corps, respectively, whether a non-commissioned officer, musician or private, shall be detailed, ordered or permitted to leave his post to engage in any pursuit, business or performance in civil life, for emolument, hire or otherwise, when the same shall interfere with the customary employment and regular engagement of local civilians in the respective arts, trades or professions." The Executive Council is instructed to have legislation introduced in Congress whereby the quoted law be amended by inserting after the word "permitted" the words "or shall volunteer."

(1939, p. 455) The federal laws contain a provision that army and navy officers shall be limited in their supervision and control of civilian labor, particularly in the naval and marine establishments, such as navy yards and arsenals. There has been a definite tendency in recent years on the part of the naval and military officers in control of arsenals and navy yards, to ignore this law, and to place commissioned officers in charge of labor direction and control which should properly, and under the law, be confined to civilians. There is a steady tendency for this supervision and control of labor by army and naval officers to extend itself to civilian labor outside of navy yards and arsenals. We note that in connection with public works and the administration of labor legislation that more and more commissioned officers of the army and navy are being appointed to executive and supervisory positions, bringing the atmosphere of military discipline, military orders and military control where civilian control alone should exist. The Executive Council is directed to take such steps as are necessary to prevent any development of supervision and direction of civilian labor other than by civilians.

Military and Civilian Strategy (Board) Proposed

(1942, p. 548) Centralization of military procurement is basic for planning for contract allocation, the most efficient use of production resources, for providing raw materials, planning manpower, and for the necessary planning and scheduling that alone can give adequate military supplies and meet the basic civilian needs. Civilians are ready and willing to make the utmost sacrifices provided they thereby make contributions that are utilized with the care and efficiency that befit the sacrifice.

We therefore further recommend an over-all Board of Military and Civilian Strategy to decide as between military and civilian uses, upon procurement policies which affect the fundamental structure of our economy, and similar over-all policies which concern prosecution of the war, our foreign and domestic policies, and the policies to be followed by all operating agencies.

This strategy board should be created by the President of the United States with the Vice President as chairman and should consist of key persons in the war administration such as the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Director of Economic Stabilization, the Food Administrator, the Director of War Transportation, and have as civilian members two representatives each of labor, employers, and agriculture.

Military Encroachment on Civilian Jobs

(Navy Yards and Arsenals)—1927, p. 72) At a conference held December 2, 1926, of representatives of international unions, it was decided to present a bill in Congress to provide that American citizens shall be employed exclusively on government work whether done by the government or private contract. It was impossible to secure the legislation but another attempt will be made in the seventieth Congress.

(1928, p. 81) When the navy bill was before the House an amendment was adopted at the request of the Metal Trades Department of the A. F. of L. to construct eight of the fifteen cruisers provided for in the navy yards and arsenals. After the bill reached the Senate an amendment was made val Affairs Committee which excepted to the House amendment by the Navy "such material or parts thereof as the Secretary of the Navy may find procurable by contract or purchase at an appreciable saving in cost to the government." This practically nullifies the House amendment as the greater part of the eight cruisers to be built in the navy yards would be constructed by private contractors. The bill did not come to a vote but will be considered at the next session of the Senate. Efforts will be made to have the Senate amendment stricken out. An effort was first made to have $4,000,000 appropriated in the navy appropriation bill for immediate use in reconditioning destroyers. This failed. (P. 273) We declare as a matter of principle that private profit should be eliminated from the production of munitions and vessels for national defense, that as a matter of policy we favor the construction of cruisers in the government navy yards and indorse the provision that eight of the fifteen cruisers now provided for in the naval construction program should be constructed in the government's navy yards; that we endorse the amendment to the Fifteen Cruiser Bill that provides that eight of these cruisers shall be constructed in navy yards and that the Executive Council is hereby instructed to use its influence in connection with the naval construction bill so that all material going into the construction of these eight cruisers, which can be manufactured in our navy yards and arsenals, shall not be let out to private industry.

(1929, p. 247) Convention adopted resolution objecting to sailors on naval vessels doing repair work on them while in home ports; that this work should be done by civilians.

(1930, p. 374) We believe our national navy yards and arsenals are a vitally important element of our national defense and therefore should be maintained in an efficient and effective condition. This can only be done by employing a full force of skilled mechanics. We therefore urge that not less than 50 per cent of all government work, both new construction and repairs, be done in government shops.

(1932, p. 388) The Executive Council is directed to give its active support to prevent any action by Congress as the result of the submission of the Shannon Committee's report, which would permit private industry to construct or fabricate vessels and materials for national defense which can be produced in the nation's navy yards and arsenals. This Convention endorses the principle that private profit must be eliminated from the production of material for national defense before the sinister activities of the war mongers and patriots for profit can be abated and eliminated.

(Employment)

(1937, p. 329) Legislation for the purpose of allowing retired military officers to assume desirable positions, including those of supervision, was introduced in the last session of Congress. A. F. of L. emphatically opposes such an unwarranted invasion of the rights of civilian workers in government service and therefore endorses this resolution.

(1949, pp. 53, 389) Res. 53 protested the use of military personnel in government positions.

(1950, p. 326) Res. 105: Whereas, There is considerable concern about the general encroachment upon the rights of civilians by those charged with the administration of the military branch of our government, and

Whereas, The gradual usurping by the military of functions which are essentially civilian does not augur well for the future of our nation, and

Whereas, In the formation of our government it was never supposed that the military branches should be a law or body unto themselves, and that the Constitution of the United States provides for a civilian Commander-In-Chief of the military in the person of the President of the United States, and

Whereas, This principle has been further carried out by the selection of civilians to be heads of the various departments of defense, and

Whereas, Americans must never forget that our government is one of laws, one of representatives chosen by the people of the nation in free elections, and as such is a government responsive to the wish of the majority, or as has been expressed, "of, for and by the people." The Metal Trades Department views with alarm the departure on the part of the military from this traditional policy in the form of enlisted personnel performing the work normally considered as coming within the scope of work to be performed by civilians, and further departures from a normal civilian operation, and

Whereas, If this practice is permitted to continue it will eventually result in complete domination by the military of all work being performed by civilians in both the military establishments and those where military contracts may be let, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the American Federation of Labor and the Executive Council give this subject of vital interest to the people of our nation, their profound consideration and conduct a thorough examination into the activities of the Department of Defense or any other federal agency which is departing from the traditional practices, as envisioned by the founders of our nation; and, where these practices are found to exist, that they be objected to with all the force at the command of the American Federation of Labor to the President of the United States or if necessary to the Congress.

(1950, pp. 327, 486) Res. 108; Whereas, In naval shipyards, including those at Portsmouth, N. H., Boston, Mass., New York, N. Y., Philadelphia, Pa., Norfolk, Va., and Charleston, S. C., approximately one-third of the work involved in the repair, overhaul, and modification of naval vessels in active service is being done by the Navy Department's enlisted men, and

Whereas, The enlisted men doing this work must be regarded as a military labor force rather than employees, since they live under a complete military authority and receive food, clothing, shelter, family allowances, medical care, and other emoluments and subsidies which are not received by the civilian employees of the Navy Department, and

Whereas, The men comprising this military labor force are necessarily beyond the reach of the beneficent laws and customs established by American organized labor, since they have no voice in fixing their pay, hours of work, or other conditions of their service and, above all, lack that ability to accept or reject employment which is the basis of the freedom of the American workman, and

Whereas, The Navy Department, being free to assign work to either civilian or military labor, has adopted a policy which results in giving to the civilian only that work which cannot be done by the enlisted man, and

Whereas, This policy has been deliberately sanctioned and perpetuated by the Secretary of Defense in a statement of personnel policy dated December 14, 1949, which says, in part, that "... whenever military personnel are available because, temporarily they are not required for primarily military duties, they shall be utilized, in the interests of economy, to perform necessary repair and maintenance operations on military equipment and facilities," and

Whereas, This policy makes it impossible to maintain a clear and safe distinction between the proper functions of civilian employees and those of military personnel, and

Whereas, The lack of this distinction results in competition for work between civilian labor and military labor, and

Whereas, This competition is inevitably destructive of the standards of pay and conditions of employment established by American organized labor, and

Whereas, This destructive competition sharply limits the ability of the civilian employees of naval shipyards and other naval activities doing industrial work to improve their working conditions, better their wages, and make their proper contribution to the continued growth and development of American organized labor, and

Whereas, In view of the unprecedented size of our peace-time military establishment and its increasing influence on the life of the nation, this growing inability of the Department of Defense to distinguish between civilian and military functions is a potentially serious threat to civil liberties and the American way of life, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the 1950 convention of the American Federation of Labor, assembled in Houston, Texas, September 18, 1950, go on record as being opposed in general to competition between private citizens and military labor, and, in particular, to the present practices of the Navy Department in this respect.

(1951, pp. 308, 565) Res. 87 called upon the A. F. of L. to endorse proposal to investigate if jobs are military or civilian in the Department of Defense and cited instances where navy yard employees are affected by navy repair ships doing the work normally coming under civilian employment.

(1953, pp. 452, 657) Res. 142: Resolved, That the American Federation of Labor, in convention assembled, condemn the practice of using military labor in competition with union labor as uneconomic and unjust, and that the Secretaries of the Army, Navy and Air Force be so advised with a request that appropriate action be taken.

(1954, pp. 414, 593) Res. 116 protested against the practice being followed by the Navy Department of assigning more and more work to sailors under the guise of training, resulting in a reduction in the civilian force at military establishments all over the country; and called for the enactment of a law prohibiting repair work being done by military personnel in government establishments while the U. S. Bureau of Employment Security reports critical employment conditions in any labor area.

(1954, pp. 409, 489) Res. 101: Whereas, The use of enlisted military personnel on work regularly performed by craftsmen of all branches of labor has created an untenable situation, and

Whereas, The Secretary of the Navy has promised in speeches before International Conventions of organized labor (and was so quoted by Admiral Holderness at the International Convention of the Metal Trades Department at St. Louis) that military personnel will not be used to replace civilian personnel, and

Whereas, The Navy Department is assigning more and more work to sailors under the guise of training and the civilian work force is being reduced at military establishments all over the country, therefore, be it

Resolved, That a law be passed in Congress prohibiting overhaul and repair work being done by military personnel in Government establishments while the United States Bureau of Employment Security reports critical employment conditions in any labor area, and be it further Resolved, That this resolution, upon approval of the delegates to this 73rd annual convention of the American Federation of Labor, be presented to the International Conventions of the Metal Trades Department and all affiliated International Unions.

(Forces As Strikebreakers)

(1954, pp. 375, 462) Res. II: Whereas, Members of the Air Force personnel of the Hamilton Air Force Base, Hamilton, California, have acted as strikebreakers for H. Koch and Sons of Corte Madera, California, and our local affiliate. Leather and Novelty Workers' Union, Local 31, has made representations to the Group Commander to order withdrawal of the men who are giving aid and comfort to an anti-union employer bent upon running a non-union shop, and

Whereas, The Group Commander of the 566th Air Defense Group, Hamilton Air Force Base, went on record in a letter to our Leather and Novelty Workers' Union, Local 31, dated August 10, 1954, as follows:

a. "Air Force Regulation 24-1, Paragraph 9. (10 U. S. Code, Section 609) prohibits off-duty employment of enlisted men on active duty where it shall 'interfere with the employment of local civilians.' There are nowhere that we can find any regulations or laws of the United States specifically prohibiting military persons working in a plant where a labor dispute is in progress or which is being picketed, or prohibiting military persons crossing a picket line."

b. "As we interpret it Air Force Regulation 24-1, Paragraph 3, does not imply such prohibitions."

c. "While we may have sympathy with the merits of your case it is beyond the scope of my authority to order these airmen not to work in the H. Koch Luggage Company."

d. "I would personally prefer that no airman be required by force of financial circumstances to engage in any outside employment. Most of these airmen have wives and children and are forced to supplement their inadequate military pay in order that their families may live in a degree of decent comfort," and

Whereas, Said interpretations and conclusions of the Group Commander allow not only coddling strike-breakers but in giving full approval to members of the Air Force personnel, off-duty, to work as strike-breakers in order that they may "supplement their inadequate military pay in order that their families may live in a degree of decent comfort," and

Whereas, Such coddling of strike-breakers and approval of members of military establishments, off-duty, acting as strike-breakers poses a grave problem for all union labor who may find themselves at one time or another in open combat with anti-union employers, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the 73rd Convention of the American Federation of Labor, assembled in Los Angeles, go on record that we disapprove the interpretation placed by the Group Commander of the 566th Air Defense Group, Hamilton Air Force Base, on Air Force Regulation 24-1, Paragraph 9, (10 U. S. Code, Section 609), and that we urge that the officers and Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor take all necessary measures with the higher authorities to make sure that there is a clear-cut definition of said Regulation prohibiting members of the military establishments, off-duty, to engage in strike-breaking and in replacing civilian strikers on strike and crossing the picket line for union standards and conditions.

(Page 462) The convention committee report was approved, substantially as follows: The strike referred to in the Resolution is settled, but to prevent recurrence of anti-labor interpretations of military regulations, your Committee recommends that the A. F. of L. officers insist through proper governmental authorities that the practice should not be allowed to happen again.

Military Governments, Labor Representation in U. S. A.

(1947, p. 184) Consequent to our victory in the war against fascist aggression our nation in the interim shares with our fighting allies responsibility for military government in those countries which are denied self-government. The United States flag flies over part of Austria, Germany, Korea, and Japan. In Germany and Japan a representative of the American Federation of Labor is on the staff of the head of our military government in order to advise on labor services and legislation needed for orderly progress of wage earners in those countries. In addition these representatives are available for consultation with local labor representatives to put the experience of United States trade unionists at their service. Their work will be influential in shaping future labor policies in those countries and developing understanding between the workers of the United States and the workers of these former enemy countries.

However, unless production can get under way in these occupied countries so that workers have employment to earn a livelihood and make available the things they need, our flag will continue to wave over starving, helpless people. The level of production must be raised so that civilized life is again possible. Protection against future rearming will be less expensive through inspection of key industries. All countries should be self-sustaining.

Military Personnel (Retired) in Private Industry

(1952, pp. 59, 474) Res. 104: Whereas, There has been a great expansion in military forces in the United States during the past decade, and

Whereas, This expansion results in the retirement of an increasing number of higher ranking officers of the armed services, many of these officers, who upon their retirement, enter into private industry, and

Whereas, There is grave danger that the influx of high military officers into private industry may have a tendency to develop military expansion of our economy, far beyond discernible need, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the American Federation of Labor take cognizance of this problem, and through its executive officers and Executive Council conduct such investigation, and report to the 1953 convention of the American Federation of Labor the effect upon the welfare of our nation of this growing military force within private industry.

Military Prisoners

(1953, pp. 420, 652) Res. 66 protested against practice being followed at Ft. Benning, Georgia, whereby military prisoners are being used to do work formerly done by civilians. The practice is described as very distressing to the morale of other civilian employees.

Military Supervision and Control of Civilian Workers Protested

(1939, pp. 242, 455) Res. 18 was unanimously adopted as follows: Whereas, Ours is a civilian government and all other agencies of government are subordinate to this civil authority; and

Whereas, The trend at the present time is to appoint in administrative positions officers of the armed forces of the United States, in control of purely civil activities of our government; and

Whereas, This is contrary to all principles of government by the people, as we understand it; and

Whereas, It is common knowledge that these officials by their very training, have little sympathy for the rights of the workers; and

Whereas, Such officials have been guaranteed high salaries for life, too often have been used by big business and the politicians to throttle the liberties and the rights of the workers, and their being placed now in control and supervision of civilian activity is detrimental to the rights and continued liberties of the organized, as well as the unorganized workers; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, the Massachusetts State Federation of Labor, in convention assembled, call upon the Senators and each of the Congressmen from our commonwealth too seek legislation which will prevent any army or naval official being placed in control of civilian activities; and be it further

Resolved, That our delegate to the American Federation of Labor Convention be instructed to present to that convention a resolution requesting that the American Federation of Labor seek legislation which will prevent army or navy officials being placed in control or supervision of any governmental activity performed by civilian workers.

Your committee is advised that there is upon the statute books a provision that Army and Navy officers shall be limited in their supervision and control of civilian labor, particularly in the naval and marine establishments, such as navy yards and arsenals.

Your committee is further informed that there has been a definite tendency in recent years on the part of the naval and military officers in control of arsenals and navy yards, to ignore this law, and to place commissioned officers in charge of labor direction and control which should properly, and under the law, be confined to civilians.

Your committee further finds from information brought to it that there is a steady tendency for this supervision and control of labor by Army and Navy officers to extend itself to civilian labor outside of navy yards and arsenals.

Your committee notes that in connection with public works and the administration of labor legislation that more and more commissioned officers of the Army and Navy are being appointed to executive and supervisory positions, bringing the atmosphere of military discipline, military orders and military control where civilian control alone should exist.

So that this growingly serious situation may be adequately handled, your committee recommends that the resolution be referred to the Executive Council with instructions to make such a study and take such steps as are necessary to prevent any development of supervision and direction of civilian labor other than by civilians. Your committee approves of the purpose and principle of the resolution and therefore recommends adoption of the committee's report.

Military Training, Compulsory (also see: Military Reserve Program, Draft of Nurses).

Military Service, Compulsory (also see: Defense, Armed Forces and Manpower).

Training (Compulsory)

proposal. It is in agreement with the purpose of amply and fully safeguarding our nation and its people and democratic institutions against any and all invasions. It, too, believes that every effort should be made and every opportunity should be availed of that will develop the physical and mental well-being and stimulate the patriotic spirit of the youth of our land. It is the conviction of your committee that however meritorious the purposes embraced may be that it is of first importance that we assure ourselves that these military training camps are operated in practice for the up-building of the mind and body of our young men and that these camps are not so conducted as to inculcate the spirit of militarism or tend toward the exaltation or glorification of war.

(1925, p. 304) While the A. F. of L. is emphatically opposed to militarism, it is likewise opposed to that pacifism that believes that never under any circumstances should we prepare for our national defense. Many pacifists are honest, sincere believers in the doctrine they preach. Others, who call themselves pacifists, constantly preach the overthrow of our government by force and violence and do all in their power to create a state of civil war. Then, too, these latter pacifists never utter a word of condemnation against the army of Soviet Russia, 1,750,000 strong. Nothing is more provocative or tends more toward militarism than the pacifism which parades under the insidious, pernicious and treacherous doctrine of Communism that would destroy the democracies of the world by destructive discontent and force, violence and by bloodshed if needs be.

(1926, p. 56) The El Paso convention referred to the Executive Council the subject of Citizens' Military Training Camps that were established by the government. Conferences were held with the Secretary of War with reference to working out the spirit and intent of Resolution No. 75 introduced at the El Paso convention. Members of the Executive Council had an opportunity to visit the Citizens' Military Training Camp at Plattsburgh, New York. They were accorded every opportunity by the officers in charge of this camp to come into contact and to understand every feature of the training of the boys. Our investigation disclosed the fact that the boys who were taking advantage of this military training were all interested in the work of the camp and were enthusiastic in their praise of the benefit they derived from this training. We found that the military part of the training occupied the smallest part of the day. Most of the waking hours of the boys were spent in athletic sports of all kinds and were thoroughly enjoyed and participated in by all of the boys. This kind of training is building up the mind and body of the American youth. It stimulates the patriotic spirit of the youth. He is taught citizenship. The Citizens' Military Training Camp has no compulsory features. It is voluntary, as the boys themselves elect to participate in this training. They benefit by the discipline of the camp. It is remarkable the benefits that accrue to a boy after spending one month in this camp. In the judgment of the A. F. of L. we believe it would be advantageous to all of the boys of our country to take advantage of the opportunity afforded to them in these camps. (p. 320) The A. F. of L. directs the greatest vigilance to prevent the passage of legislation providing for compulsory military training. Labor is unalterably opposed to both the principle of compulsion and to militarism.

(High Schools)

(1931, p. 129) Where military training exists in public high schools, it is not because of any activity of the War Department in promoting it but because of the individual action and decision of the local school authorities, who have introduced military training for two purposes: First, to adjust growing youth to discipline and habits of orderliness and tidiness; and second, to improve his carriage and his physical condition in general. Neither does military training in high schools imply connection with the War Department, except to the extent of assigning an instructor and military trainer when the War Department is formally requested to do so. Such high school then becomes part of the Reserve Officers Training Corps. Official records of the War Department disclose that there are fifty-seven units comprising 151 high schools, with an annual average of 32,778 students now taking up military training under the direction of the Department. A unit is comparable to a city, so that it will be observed that there are only fifty-seven cities in the U. S. where the War Department is cooperating with high schools in military training. Naturally, the efforts of the War Department in this direction are to secure proper personnel for commissioned and non-commissioned officers in time of war. The schools are used as feeders for Citizens' Military Training Camps. Credit is given to those taking up military training. The completion of a three or four year course in high schools together with the training received in the Citizens' Military Training Camps, insures eligibility for a commission in the officers reserve. In considering Res. No. 90, it was deemed wise, at first, to investigate as far as possible the situation as it exists today in the various states. A communication was addressed to all State Federations of Labor, requesting them to advise us how many high schools in the states have military training, the number of students affected thereby, whether military training is voluntary or compulsory, and if compulsory, what exemptions are allowed.

Seventy-six high schools in the country have military training with an approximate enrollment of 10,000 students. In every instance, except the two high schools in Wyoming, this military training is optional. Of the seventy-six schools noted, forty-eight are affiliated with the War Department through Reserve Officers Training Corps activities. (P. 406) The A. F. of L. opposes the introduction of military training in the public schools and the establishment of compulsory military service or training as unnecessary, undesirable and un-American.

(1940, pp. 68, 550) A conscription law was enacted providing for compulsory military service for all males from 21 to 36 years of age. After the bill was introduced, the American Federation of Labor suggested that before applying conscription in the United States a voluntary enlistment plan be applied. It was felt that this was the American way, particularly during peace-time periods. When it became obvious that Congress intended to enact a compulsory conscription bill our cooperation was promptly forthcoming for patriotic reasons. We endeavored to protect, as best we could, the interests of those who were to be inducted into armed forces. The bill originally provided for the registration of all men from the ages of 18 to 64, but these ages were reduced to 21 to 36 with selections from this group not to exceed 900,000 in time of peace for one year's training. Monthly pay was also increased to $30 per month. Public officials, persons in agriculture, industries or public employment necessary to national health, safety or interest were exempted, as were students entered in a recognized college or university for the 1940-41 academic year, ministers, divinity students and conscientious objectors due to religious training or belief.

Another provision dealt with recalcitrant, non-cooperating employers as it permitted the taking over of plants on a rental basis.

After much consideration there was also written into the law a clause guaranteeing to United States Government employees the return to their positions after completion of their military service. The following subsections aim to give like protection to those in private employment and to employees of any state or political subdivision thereof:

"If such position was in the employ of a private employer, such employer shall restore such person to such position or to a position of like seniority, status, and pay unless the employer's circumstances have so changed as to make it impossible or unreasonable to do so;

"If such position was in the employ of any state or political subdivision thereof, it is hereby declared to be the sense of the Congress that such person should be restored to such position or to a position of like seniority, status, and pay."

Seniority rights, insurance and other benefits were protected for both government and private employees with appeal to the United States District Court provided against non-complying employers in private industry.

Provisions were also made "that no men shall be inducted for training and service until adequate provisions shall have been made for housing, sanitary facilities, water supplies, heating and lighting arrangements, medical care, and hospital accommodations."

(1940, p. 550) The convention concurred in statements of Executive Council and added the following: The existing conscription law covers a five-year period. It is the sincere hope of your committee that conditions abroad as they affect the defense of our continent, will be such that there will be no continuation of a conscription system when the present law expires.

(Reemployment Rights)

(1940, p. 533) A. F. of L. policy provided that any man called for military service by the government should be assured of reemployment at his old position upon return to civilian life. A resolution unanimously adopted by the convention reaffirmed the above and further provided "That we call upon the International Unions and local unions of the American Federation of Labor to give assurance to any of their employees and officers that should they be called to military service during the present emergency that they will be returned to their old positions upon return to private life."

(1944, p. 532) Res. 36: Resolved, That the American Federation of Labor convention go on record as opposed to permanent compulsory military service through conscription.

Because of the uncertainty of the future, your committee recommends that the American Federation of Labor should wait the results of the Peace Treaty and of the international commitments which may be included before making any positive declaration upon the subject of compulsory military training.

(1946, pp. 197, 607) Unanimous approval was given to the report of the Executive Council relating the successful opposition of the A. F. of L. to the enactment of the proposed "work-or-jail" bill. The formal action of the convention on this subject follows: Your Committee notes with gratification this portion of the Executive Council's report on the infamous "Work or Jail Bill" H.R. 1752, passed by both Houses of Congress. The House adopted the Conference Report. However, despite the support given to this bill by the President of the United States and every high government executive officer, the American Federation of Labor was successful in preventing its approval by the Senate. Your Committee voices the same appreciation as the Executive Council for the outstanding support in defeating this infamous bill given by the affiliated international unions, state federations of labor, city central bodies and local unions.

(Forced Labor)

(1946, p. 487) Res. I, referred to the Executive Council for investigation and action: Whereas, The Selective Service Act provides that conscientious objectors shall be either retained in work essential to the war effort, or sent to internment camps known as Civilian Public Service Camps, where they are compelled to work at whatever the Selective Service Directors order, without receiving any remuneration for their labor, and must either supply their own bedding, food, clothing, fuel for cooking and heating the camps, or have some friends supply these necessities of life, or starve to death, and

Whereas, Interned men working in the Civilian Public Service Camps are not covered by Workmen's Compensation, therefore, if injured must pay for their own medical attention, or have friends take care of them while incapacitated. If killed while at work in the camp and leave dependents, the latter may become a burden on the common taxpayer, and

Whereas, If these men were sentenced to prison for violating a law, they would be fed, clothed, housed, and receive medical attention at the expense of the state, and

Whereas, These men are compelled to work in open competition with free labor, working as carpenters and joiners, driving trucks, operating power shovels and doing other manual labor—skilled and unskilled, and

Whereas, The Federal Government and most states do not use convict labor in competition with free labor, as the conscientious objectors are forced to do in Civilian Public Service Camps, and

Whereas, Forcing conscientious objectors or any other person to work for nothing and in competition with free labor is involuntary servitude and in violation of the Thirteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and

Whereas, The Selective Service Act has been amended to draft men up to forty-five years of age, which with the existence of the Civilian Public Service Camp will make it easy to further amend the Selective Service Act to draft workers, while on strike, therefore, be it

Resolved, By this convention that we condemn this practice of forced labor in Civilian Service Camps as a practice worthy only of Fascism and Nazism, as violative of every principle of democracy and Americanism, in direct violation of the 13th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and a violation of the very principles of liberty and freedom which thousands of American soldiers have given their lives to preserve, and be it further

Resolved, That the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor call upon our Senators and Representatives in Congress to amend the Selective Service Act to eliminate this violation of the Constitution of the United States, so that all Americans may again look humanity proudly in the face with the certain knowledge that the rights and liberties so grandiosely claimed by our American declarations are not being violated by our own government.

(Peacetime)

(1946, p. 196) In the section of the Executive Council Report under this title, the established policy of the A. F. of L. in opposition to compulsory military training was set forth as follows:

The Executive Council took the following action at the February 1945, meeting:

We are opposed to compulsory military training service, and that in no event should the matter be given consideration until demobilization of the armed forces. In the meantime, the American Federation of Labor advocated a comprehensive program of improved education and health service for the youth of the nation.

(1947, p. 656) Res. 50 and 51, both opposing compulsory military service during peacetime, were referred to the Executive Council for investigation and study, and such action as seems appropriate:

Res. 50: Whereas, In violation of our American ideals and principles that have stood against militarization of our democratic institutions, and since the forces of reaction are now seeking to harness our American institutions and youth with peace-time conscription laws, and because the peace-time conscription army may be used by the forces of reaction to disrupt and destroy our trade union movement, and since peace-time conscription constitutes a form of involuntary servitude in violation of our Federal Constitution, therefore, be it

Resolved, That this sixty-sixth convention of the American Federation of Labor, assembled in San Francisco, go on record as opposing all forms of peace-time conscription and delegate its officials to employ every lawful means of organization, education, and agitation to defeat legislation now pending in Congress or which may be presented to Congress for peace-time conscription.

Res. 51: Whereas, American democracy has grown in a climate free from compulsory military training in peacetime and the nations who adopted compulsory service were constantly militarized (as in the case of Germany), and

Whereas, A twelve months general military training period and the large mass army it would create is no aid to military protection against attack (as was proved by France), and

Whereas, The size and equipment of our armed forces today and until demobilized are and will be sufficient protection, so that this decision need not be rushed through now merely because certain army officers, whose power it would increase, desire it now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the delegates to the sixty-sixth convention of the American Federation of Labor, assembled in San Francisco, California, October, 1947, commend the American Federation of Labor Executive Council for declaring its opposition to compulsory military training.

(1950, p. 160) Our traditional position opposing peacetime conscription and universal military training was maintained during the Eighty-first Congress. We pointed out to both Houses of Congress that now, even more than previously, the proponents of peace-time draft had weakened arguments for enactment of such law. Immediately upon the Korean crisis arising, the Congress passed a one-year extension of the draft law which was promptly approved by the President.

Agitation on the part of the Defense Secretary to bring about enactment of Universal Military Training was begun in the Congress. We have traditionally opposed Universal Military Training.

(1947, p. 237) Hearings were held in the House on the subject of military training over a period of weeks and a bill was finally introduced known as H.R. 4278 which was reported to the House, but no further action was taken.

In the Senate, two bills were introduced, S. 651 and S. 652, but no hearings were held on these bills.

On July 24, 1947, the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments unanimously approved and submitted a report to the House with respect to publicity and propaganda of Federal officials of the War Department relating to universal military training (House Report 1073—80th Congress). The gist of the report was that "the evidence submitted to the Committee shows that the War Department is using government funds in an improper manner for propaganda activities supporting compulsory military training: That the use of federal funds for the purpose of influencing legislation before Congress is unlawful under Section 201, title 18 of the U. S. Code. We, therefore, brought these matters to the attention of the Department of Justice with the request that the Attorney General, at once, initiate proceedings to stop this unauthorized and illegal expenditure of public moneys." The report further shows that not only was personnel of the United States Army engaged in these activities, but civilians employed by the Department, which the report names, received a per diem of $25 with a $6 per day expense allowance and with payment for travel. Much of the travel of these persons was done by military plane.

We recommend that our opposition be continued to compulsory peacetime military training.

Whereas, Previous experiences in legislation providing for job and seniority protection, for these people inducted into military service from industry under selective service laws as well as the assimilation into industry after their term of military service of those inducted from outside industry, have been, to say the least, unpleasant, confused, unrealistic, impractical and many times unfair to the returning servicemen and the worker in the shop, and

Whereas, Many of these same complex problems will again arise as a result of the newly enacted Selective Service Act, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the 67th convention of the American Federation of Labor go on record requesting the President of the United States and the Congress to immediately establish a tri-partite committee composed of equal numbers representing organized labor, industry, and the public to make a thorough and complete study of the questions involved and who would also be authorized to make recommendations to the President of the United States, the Congress, and the Director of the Selective Service Act as to rules and regulations to govern the return of men to jobs in industry and the assimilation into industry of returned servicemen inducted from the outside of industry.

Your committee is in concurrence with the purpose of the resolution, but finds that the question of returning men to the jobs they formerly held in industry presents some difficulties which your committee is unprepared to pass upon at the moment.

Your committee, therefore, recommends that this resolution be referred to the Executive Council so that a study can be made of the problems involved in returning men to their jobs after their services with the armed forces have terminated.

(1948, p. 161) In its report on the subject, the Executive Council referred to the A. F. of L. position taken by President Green before the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments in March, 1948, as follows:

"We do not believe that peacetime conscription is consistent with the American way of life, nor do we believe that it should be accepted as a permanent part of our national policy." "Rather," he stated, "the American Federation of Labor would favor the application of selective service on a limited and temporary basis solely because of the present emergency with which we are confronted. We would favor authorization of selective service only as a means of enabling the American Government to make effective its work for an enduring peace and effective prevention of military aggression from any source. If we are to support our commitments abroad and if our foreign-policy decisions are to carry any weight, it is paramount that we maintain our armed forces at authorized strength."

The Congress did not enact any legislation providing for universal military training but did enact the Selective Service Act of 1948 (Public No. 759—80th Congress), which was approved by the President on June 24, 1948 and which provides for a limited draft. As originally introduced, the bill contained a super-seniority clause guaranteeing reemployment rights to those drafted under it, not only reinstating draftees to their old jobs with rights unimpaired, but giving them the added privilege of "bumping" veterans of World War II as well as other workers even though these draftees had less seniority.

This clause would have wrecked seniority rights on railroads and in industries. We stood firmly with the railroad brotherhoods in opposing this clause and it was stricken from the bill when it was under consideration on the floor of the House.

We recommend that our opposition to universal training be continued.

(1948, p. 450) Convention approved report of the Executive Council and committee recommendation that our policy of opposition to universal military training be continued.

(1949, p. 38) A proposal to endorse the institution of a system of compulsory military training was presented to the convention through Res. 9 as follows:

Whereas, The tension in international relations, which developed immediately after the war ended, was largely a result of the unilateral disbanding of its armies all over the world by the United States of America, in its attempt at cooperation and conciliation in the face of an aggressive, expanding, imperialist Soviet Russian regime, and fortunately, strong, positive action by the United States, in reaction to Soviet conquest and terror, has reduced somewhat this tension through the creation of a growing structure of security via the Truman program, the Marshall Plan, the North Atlantic Pact and the Military Aid Program, and

Whereas, Judging from its past behavior, Soviet Russia will soon move ahead again, after reconsolidation of its position, and this is, therefore, the time for us to push ahead with positive action for American and World security, and

Whereas, An important gap in our national security program has been the failure to create a system of universal military training for all young men in the United States, despite the fact that all experts on military defense, the President's Commission on Universal Military Training and all former Secretaries of State, have agreed that there is no other way to assure ourselves of the manpower required to fulfill all the necessary services of a nation at war, and the United States today is the only major power without any system of universal military training for its citizens, therefore, be it

Resolved, That Congress recognize the importance of this gap in our structure of defense and create such a system without further delay.

(1949, p. 480) The convention refused to approve this resolution and reaffirmed traditional position in opposition to measures providing for compulsory military training and its acceptance of selective service on a limited and temporary basis. Established policy to be continued.

(1951, pp. 102, 443) The Committee on Legislation recommends that the convention concur in the recommendation made by the Executive Council in January 1951, which reads as follows: "In view of the present war emergency, the Executive Council favors limited universal military training, however, that it shall end with the emergency, that it shall not become part of our educational system and that it shall in no way transgress upon or become part of our civilian system of service, production and distribution, or be used in any way to limit, restrict or interfere with the rights of Labor individually and/or collectively.

Today, the threat from Communist activities is very grave. We are willing and ready to meet that threat. We believe that in a period of war or when a war threat is imminent, as it is today, every able-bodied man should be subject to call to serve his country in the armed forces, and that all who answer that call should be assigned where it is believed he may best serve his country.

No man should be exempted or excused from such a call because he is rich enough to enjoy certain benefits or because a certain set of social-economic circumstances have made it possible for him to be placed in a particular group. Yet, today the Selective Service Act of the United States is administered under a plan which gives special consideration to the young man who is able to go to college, either because his parents are rich enough to help him, or because he can arrange his personal affairs in such a way that he can go to college. Unfortunately, however, all young men cannot be helped by these special advantages. The farm boy who cannot leave his farm for a part-time university course, perhaps because there is no university located near enough to his farm, the city boy who has no free college near him, and who after he has made his contribution to the low family budget can not afford to pay college tuition at this time, the mechanic who at the end of the hard work day is too tired to take up college work, right now, the skilled young learner whose apprenticeship will equip him to render specially important service to our country—are all, under the program now used by our government, classed as “not good enough for deferment.”

College youth is deferred—because it is college youth, and, therefore, presumably mentally superior.

We subscribe wholeheartedly to the premise that the best young minds, the best young leaders, the best trained youth should be saved for the nation. But we do not agree that attendance at college is a fair or accurate means of making the broad basic selection as to who shall be tested for deferment. We hold that some of our best young men are today not in college, and are therefore being discriminated against by the administration of the Selective Service Act.

We therefore recommend that immediate steps be taken to modify the present administrative policy of the Selective Service, either by the Director of Selective Service, by Executive Order, or by Act of Congress.

A democratic, fair and comprehensive administration of the Selective Service Law which will give all youth similar opportunities is absolutely essential.

(1951, pp. 397-8) . . . Under the heading of “Undemocratic Administration of Selective Service Law,” the Executive Council condemns the practice of deferring military service purely on the basis of the economic ability of a student to attend college. The Executive Council contends that mere attendance at college should not, in itself, serve as a basis for deferment and that many young men who are not in college deserve deferment more than many who are in college because of special qualifications other than financial ability to attend college.

The committee agrees with this position and recommends that the Standing Committee on Education attempt to secure a more equitable program of deferment under the Selective Service Law.

In view of the present war emergency, the Executive Council favors limited universal military training; however, that it shall end with the emergency, that it shall not become part of our educational system and that it shall in no way transgress upon or become part of our civilian system of service, production and distribution, or be used in any way to limit, restrict or interfere with the rights of labor individually and/or collectively.

(1953, p. 170) The Executive Council, in its annual Report, called attention to the recurring subject of universal compulsory military training. The previous position of the A. F. of L. on the subject* was quoted:

truce, with the creation of the National Security Training Commission and his direction that a study be made of the feasibility of inaugurating compulsory training, prompted the suggestion by the E.C. that "we anticipate revival of this legislation and that we re-examine our position on the subject of UMT in the line of the Korean Truce, but in view of the still unsettled condition world wide." The E.C. pointed to the evidence of a changed Administration policy as follows:

Although the President had been a supporter of UMT, during the 1952 campaign, he opposed the program so long as selective service continues and heavy calls were being made to meet the demands for the Korean Campaign.

In his speech at Decatur, Illinois, he said:

"We have the select service—let us not have anything else pile on top of that until we solve this problem. Then, let us all sit down together, mothers, fathers, and young men.

"Let us sit down together and decide what we must do because in the combined genius in America, ladies and gentlemen, there is all the promise for the future that we need if we will just give our people fair play and their decisions a right to control instead of listening to too many bureaucrats in Washington."

As the congressional session closed, the Secretary of State announced that the President had approved the use of American troops for labor battalions to rebuild war-ravaged Korea. He went into considerable detail to describe what he said the President had endorsed in the direction of Korean highway, hospital and school construction. He said the President was "enthusiastic" for this program and the deploying of American soldiers to this task.*

This forced labor idea has been the basis for our resistance to UMT. We have called for guarantees against such plans. We have told the Congress just why we have been unable to give unequivocal endorsement of UMT until such limitations are written into the law against the draft-labor plan as explained in detail by the Secretary of State.

(Page 633) Recent action by President Eisenhower reconstituting the National Security Training Commission, once again brings to the fore the issue of universal military training. The membership of the new Commission includes a number of those who in the past consistently favored adoption of a universal military training system.

It is therefore likely that the Commission's report will strongly favor universal military training and thus add to the pressure on Congress to enact UMT into law. This makes it especially urgent for us to express the position of the American Federation of Labor on this issue in clear and unmistakable terms.

The American Federation of Labor has repeatedly expressed paramount concern with the preservation of America's freedom and full protection of her national security. We have spoken out boldly for the continuation of an effective defense program. We see no evidence that the Kremlin has abandoned its aggressive designs and believe that the fullest measure of military preparedness is the wisest course, offering the greatest promise for the preservation of peace.

We gravely doubt, however, that universal military training would contribute to the nation's defense strength. At the same time we are most apprehensive of the threat to our free institutions and to our whole American system of education, based on free choice, contained in a system of compulsory training of our youth.

These doubts and apprehensions on our part are not new. We have always opposed any move in the direction of conscripting labor. We have also been mindful of the instances where the armed forces and the national guard have been used against unions in industrial disputes in time of war.

In considering similar proposals in the past, we have insisted that compulsory universal military training "shall not become part of our educational system and that it shall in no way transgress upon or become part of our civilian system of service, production and distribution, or be used in any way to limit, restrict or interfere with the rights of labor individually and/or collectively."

In World War II, our system of Selective Service has proved workable and effective. Further experience with the Selective Service System since Korea indicates clearly that the country can safely rely on Selective Service to maintain the needed effective strength of its armed forces.

Under these circumstances, a system of UMT would only create an unnecessary burden upon the availability of civilian manpower supply, wrench the lives of our nation's youth and submit our young people to compulsion, without making a positive contribution to our military preparedness. We, therefore, express opposition to the adoption of Universal Military Training legislation.

(1954, p. 261) Another current manpower issue of particular concern to American workers is the developing controversy over a system of Universal Military Training. Defense Department officials have long conducted a campaign for Universal Military Training under which every young man reaching the age of 18 would become subject to military training and service. In recent years, a number of special commissions have formally recommended the adoption of UMT, but Congress and the country as a whole has always opposed this type of compulsory service. Instead this country has relied on the Selective Service System to maintain required strength of our armed forces.

The American Federation of Labor has always favored the maintenance of the armed forces at whatever strength is necessary to assure our national security. Reliance upon the Selective Service program has proven generally to be an equitable and effective method of achieving this objective.

Any system of compulsory training for our nation's youth poses a threat to our American system of education and to our free institutions. Any new proposal will receive our thorough consideration. We doubt, however, that a UMT program in any form is likely to make a positive contribution to the nation's security.

(Page 523) The American Federation of Labor has opposed enactment of any system of universal military training, while upholding the present operation of the Selective Service System. Congress has also rejected the various proposals which have been made for a U.M.T. system.

In recent months, reports in the press indicate that the Administration is currently discussing various proposals to strengthen the military reserves of the nation. At a press conference the former Assistant Secretary of Defense, stated that the Administration has endorsed a proposal that in effect would constitute a system of universal military training. While the Administration was quick to deny this implication in his remarks, no clear-cut statement has been issued giving the details of the proposal which the Administration is now considering.

The American Federation of Labor will naturally cooperate in any genuine effort to improve the quality and standards of the nation's reserve forces. Any new proposal in this direction will be examined very closely. It is clear, however, that any proposal for U.M.T. could not be an effective instrument for improving the nation's security.

(1955, p. 113) We continue to withhold endorsement of UMT and so stated in both houses. At the same time, we said we have examined all phases of the reserve program and have failed to find any resemblance or any likelihood of its leading into UMT despite the wishes of the Pentagon.

We did offer ideas for improvements and stated certain technical objections. These were accepted largely.

We stated that this Nation pays many billions for defense, but still lacks a manpower reservoir so sorely required even in a machine war age. The need for riflemen today proportionately is as acute now as in the days of the forerunners of infantry—the broadswordsmen, archers, mace-men, spearsmen and all the others.

In the House, opposition developed in the form of the Powell antisegregation amendment affecting the National Guard. The amendment drew the votes of all who oppose a strong reserve.

After weeks of delay, the legislation was revived and passed 315-78.

The Senate passed its version, 80-1. The bill became Public Law 305.

It imposes upon all draftees or enlistees who enter the Army hereafter a total of five years of active and reserve duty and three years inactive reserve. There are several incentives to speed up the program and to shorten the obligation.

We are mindful of the tremendous changes ahead for all young men, their jobs, education, families and the economy nationally. We told Congress we expect a policy to result which will not deprive the new generations of fair-dealing by employees-military leave, summer training leave without prejudice to earned vacations, etc.

Organized employers have been quick to catch the significance of our position. Already they are planning to recognize the gradual, but assured changes just ahead. To each proposed change in the new law, we will give our continued attention. We may offer some ideas ourselves for changes as experience suggests. . . .

As expiration of the Selective Service Act neared June 30, 1955, we endorsed extension of the Act for another two years. This was the first time we backed the draft in peacetime, though we did not oppose the draft at the time the Korean war burst forth.

At the same time, we supported the draft of doctors for another two years. Many young men have received their medical training at Government expense. Yet, though the demand for medical men continues high and $100 a month is added to their military pay, the Congress decided the draft is the only method for getting a sufficient number. The new act is Public Law 118.

(1955, p. 179) As reported in the section on National Legislation, Congress this year adopted a new program for the military reserves.

In essence, the program establishes a system of compulsory reserve training for all individuals entering the military service after August 9, 1955, the date the bill became law. For individuals inducted through Selective Service or enlisting for two or more years, Congress has established a six-year period of military service, with compulsory reserve training once the individual has been discharged from active duty. In addition, a new program has been approved under which no more than 250,000 young men a year can volunteer for active duty of from 3 to 6 months, which in turn would be followed by compulsory reserve training of 7½ years.

The adoption of this program, therefore, gives each young man a choice as he reaches maturity. If he volunteers for any of the services or is drafted, he will have at least two years' active duty and a total obligation of 6 years' service. If he volunteers for the new type training, his active duty period is reduced to 3 to 6 months, but he must then serve a longer period in the reserves to make up a total of 8 years' military obligation.

The compulsory feature in reserve training does not apply to any individual already in the service as of August 9, 1955. For those to whom it does apply, it means 48 training periods a year (2 hours each) together with 17 days' active duty service at some time during the year.

For some branches of the armed forces, week-end training is substituted for night training periods. Another alternative permitted by law is to substitute a period of 30 days' active duty each year for the 48 training periods and the 17 days' active duty.

The compulsory feature of reserve training raises new questions for both management and labor. Up to the present time, few problems have arisen because for the individual reservist training has been on a voluntary, rather than compulsory basis. Those undertaking reserve training, have worked out individual arrangements for taking military leave from their employer. However, with compulsory training, an individual might be obligated to engage in reserve training at times that conflict with his employment status.

Among the types of problems that may arise are the following: (1) individuals who work at night who might be required to engage in reserve training at times they are scheduled to be at work, and (2) questions will arise concerning the individual's employment status while he is away from his job from 2 to 4 weeks for reserve training.

The American Federation of Labor was well aware of these problems at the time this legislation was being considered. In our testimony we specifically asked Congress to make clear the employer's obligation to grant leave of absence with pay to individual workers participating in reserve training. We also asked that the individual reservist not be penalized by being forced to utilize his vacation leave for reserve training.

Congress, however, did not deal with these questions in detail. It merely included in the bill a provision similar to the requirement in the Selective Service law that an individual absent from work on reserve training is entitled to full reemployment rights.

However, this leaves many questions unresolved relating to the individual's pay and employment status during reserve training. These issues will have to be worked out through collective bargaining. In a number of cases, collective bargaining agreements already contain military leave clauses that can be adapted to meet the new situation. In any case, however, we urge all our affiliates to review their contractual arrangements and, if necessary, institute new ones so that individual workers will not be penalized by having to fulfill their reserve obligation under the new law.

Milk Industry—(1938, p. 430) The fluid milk distribution business in the United States employs approximately 200,000 workers, ranking it among the nation's leading industries. Therefore, the President of the U. S. and Congress be petitioned to the effect that any proposed change in legislation, or voluntary marketing agreements contain no provisions which would be inimical to the welfare of the workers engaged in this vast industry which would lower wages or lengthen hours, or which would disturb the stability of conditions existing through trade union agreements.

Mine Workers, United—(1924, p. 204) The miners of West Virginia were engaged in a life-and-death struggle to obtain renewals of wage agreements during which they were evicted from their homes and were subjected to want and suffering. The convention called upon all national and international unions, state federations of labor, city central bodies, and local unions to collect clothing, shoes and funds, to aid the strikers in their struggle.

(Page 291) The convention extended its full and complete endorsement and sympathy to the 158,000 members of the United Mine Workers of America now engaged in the strike in the anthracite industry. The A. F. of L. extends to these mine workers its commendation for their great spirit of self-sacrifice and determination in resisting the efforts of the anthracite operators to break down their working conditions and effect wage reductions. We approve the efforts of the mine workers in their demands for increased wages, improved working conditions and complete recognition of the union. In the name of the millions of organized workers in America, we approve their policies and extend to them the hand of fellowship and mutual cooperation. The E.C. of the A. F. of L. is hereby directed to cooperate in every possible and practical way to the end that the anthracite mine workers achieve complete success in their efforts.

(1928, pp. 73, 237) The record shows that for the period ending August 31, 1928, $488,524.48 was contributed. While we do not have accurate information as to the value of the food, clothing and supplies which were collected and distributed we are certain that it amounted to hundreds of thousands of dollars. In addition to the collection of this money and this food, clothing and supplies which were sent directly for the use of the United Mine Workers of America we know that money, supplies, food and clothing were sent by city central bodies and state federations of labor and local unions which were not included in the reports made to the A. F. of L. Committees were organized, in many towns and cities, made up of representatives of public-spirited organizations and trade unions. The funds raised by these committees were not sent through the A. F. of L. but were sent directly to the authorized representatives of the United Mine Workers of America and districts for distribution. Representatives of the United Mine Workers were given credentials to solicit money, food and clothing and in this way additional money and supplies were collected. All the subordinate organizations of the A. F. of L. were urged, through official communications, letters and circulars, to render all assistance possible to the solicitors of the United Mine Workers and to the striking miners and their families. The A. F. of L. assigned organizers to assist in every possible way and national and international unions, affiliated with the A. F. of L., were called upon to assign representatives to render all assistance possible.

In addition to the amount of money which the A. F. of L. received in response to the appeal for help the record shows that during the early months of 1926 the sum of $200,710.76 was raised and distributed by the A. F. of L. to assist the anthracite mine workers in the struggle in which they were engaged. Thus, within the space of two years the A. F. of L. received, through appeals for relief to aid the United Mine Workers of America who were on strike, the sum of $689,235.15.

(1931, p. 135) Although the nation as a whole has been in the throes of economic depression for the past two years, few of our political and industrial leaders appreciate the duration and extent of the merciless revolutionary changes which have taken place in bituminous coal during the past ten years. Three and one-half pounds of coal were required in 1920 to produce a kilowatt hour of electricity, while the railroads consumed 170 pounds of coal to move one thousand gross tons of freight a car mile. Today one and a half pounds of coal produce a kilowatt hour while the railroads have reduced consumption to 125 pounds of coal to move one thousand gross tons of freight a car mile. These averages are for the country as a whole. The objective for electricity is one pound per kilowatt hour and for the railroads between 70 to 80 pounds per thousand gross tons of freight per car mile. Introduction of stokers is registering from fifteen to twenty-five per cent savings in commercial and domestic consumption. In the face of this diminishing market demand the manday production of coal as a result of mechanized and strip mines has increased from fifty to seventy-five per cent while that of hand loading mines has increased fifteen per cent. Protected utilities such as railroads, gas and electric companies consume two-fifths of the total bituminous coal output. With the great overdevelopment of the industry and through the joining of purchasing power, utilities and railroads are enabled to secure their coal in a buyers market. This condition has prevailed since 1924. The result has been profitless operation for the coal companies and pauperization of the majority of the mining communities. The bituminous coal industry has shown by its sordid performance, and of late, some managements within the industry have confessed, its own inability to rescue itself through its own leadership from the mire and distress of cut-throat competition. Investigation by state and federal commission, as well as the United States Senate, has proven over and over again the American standards of work and wages can only be brought about through the organization of the mine workers, collective wage agreements and through the medium of federal regulation. The United Mine Workers of America has prepared a bill, which eminent counsel has passed upon as meeting every constitutional requirement, which classifies coal as a public utility and creates a Federal Coal Commission to regulate the industry on the basis of its interstate commerce characteristics. This measure has been introduced in two sessions of Congress and on each occasion was opposed by professional lobbyists, some orthodox economists and representatives of the National Coal and Manufacturers' Associations. The opposition plea since 1928 has been that the industry was rapidly setting its house in order. Today the plight of the industry is worse than at any period of our industrial history. During the past year the officials of the United Mine Workers of America have made repeated attempts to have President Hoover convene a joint conference of operators and miners and assume the lead as President of the nation in commanding the leaders of the industry to reconstruct the wage and price structure of the industry so as to gear bituminous coal to American standards. Thus far the President has declined to act. With the railroads and utilities consuming two-fifths of the total production, with the captive tonnage of steel and other manufacturers averaging around eighty million tons a year and exports of fifteen million tons, less than one-half of the coal produced is consumed by domestic and commercial consumers. The United Mine Workers of America is planning an aggressive fight at the forthcoming session of Congress to enact federal regulatory legislation. The Mine Workers are proceeding upon the theory that coal constitutes the basic natural resource public utility. Under the bill drafted by the United Mine Workers of America the federal government will not be called upon to make any financial outlay other than the maintenance of the coal commission. The United Mine Workers of America is not asking a government subsidiary to stimulate either home or foreign consumption. Regulation of bituminous coal will not put the government in business in competition with private enterprise. The whole scheme of the bill is designed to end ruthless, cut-throat competition, the wasting of our natural resources, and the wanton depletion of our special purpose coals, which, when exhausted by unnecessary and unwarranted use, for steam power production, will seriously cripple our future by-product, steel, foundry, dye and various other manufacturing enterprises. The benefits to be derived by the miners after the bill's passage will still be a matter of conference and bargaining through the various provisions of the measure which nullify the yellow dog contract and remove the coal companies from their buttressed positions behind the protective provisions of federal and state injunctions. Its enactment will enable the mine workers to exercise their constitutional rights of free speech and assembly and their inherent right to affiliate with a trade union for the mutual betterment of all employed in bituminous coal mining. The E.C. has kept closely in touch with all the developments which have taken place in the bituminous coal industry, and has given profound consideration to its difficult problems and to the numerous remedies which have been proposed, looking to a solution. We are convinced that the primary requirement necessary to the stabilization of the bituminous coal industry are a thorough and complete organization of the men employed in the industry, the establishment of contractual relations between employers and employes through the process of collective bargaining, and the adoption of a just, equitable and fair wage scale which will in operation provide for a universal labor cost in coal production. The A. F. of L. will give to the officers and members of the United Mine Workers of America full cooperation and a full measure of support in the development of the plans and policies proposed by the International Union United Mine Workers of America as partial remedies at least for the industrial ills which affect the coal industry. This includes both the economic and legislative plans originated and supported by the International Union, United Mine Workers of America. The A. F. of L. expresses its great disappointment over the failure of the President of the United States to call a conference of representative miners and operators for the purpose of giving national consideration to the economic, social and industrial problems which affect the bituminous coal industry.

(1932, pp. 100, 372) The bituminous coal industry is experiencing very great difficulties because of competition caused through the enlarged use of crude oil, and particularly imported foreign oil. This is a serious problem and one which must be dealt with and acted upon in a constructive way. The A. F. of L. desires to extend to the International Union, United Mine Workers of America such assistance as it may be able to give in its efforts to secure legislation which would tend more adequately to protect the bituminous coal industry from the evil effects of unfair and unjust fuel substitutions. We pledge the officers and members of the United Mine Workers of America full and complete support in the efforts which they are putting forth to secure the enactment of the Davis-Kelly Bill. We renew the endorsement we have heretofore extended to this character of legislation. It is the purpose and the intention of the A. F. of L. to exercise all efforts at its command to secure the enactment of the Davis-Kelly Bill into law at the earliest possible date.

(The United Mine Workers were among those organizations that withheld per capita tax to the A. F. of L. following the formation of the Committee for Industrial Organization, and which were subsequently suspended for non-payment of such tax.) (See: Labor Unity, CIO.)

(1943, p. 41) At the meeting of the Executive Council held in Washington beginning May 17, 1943, a communication was received from President John L. Lewis, of the International Union, United Mine Workers of America, which read as follows:

Washington, D. C., May 17, 1943.

To the Officers and Members of the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor.

Gentlemen:

The question of greater unification in the ranks of organized labor in our country is one of profound concern to every thoughtful member. The membership of the United Mine Workers of America are conscious of their own obligation to make a contribution toward the attainment of this objective.

The United Mine Workers of America accordingly hereby request reaffiliation with the American Federation of Labor as an international union. Please note attached check, drawn to the order of the Secretary of the American Federation of Labor, in the amount of sixty thousand dollars ($60,000.00), to be applied on the tax account of the United Mine Workers of America with the American Federation of Labor for the current fiscal period.

It will be appreciated if the members of the Executive Council can give consideration to this request at the earliest possible moment and advise of their action.

Fraternally yours,
(Signed) John L. Lewis.

Upon receipt of this communication the Executive Council gave it careful consideration and decided that a committee representing the Executive Council be authorized and instructed to meet with President Lewis and his associates of the United Mine Workers of America for the purpose of arriving at an understanding as to the basis upon which the United Mine Workers of America might return to the American Federation of Labor.

This committee appointed by the Executive Council was composed of Vice-Presidents Daniel J. Tobin, George M. Harrison and Matthew Woll.

The committee representing the Executive Council met with President Lewis and his associates at Washington, D. C., on July 20, 1943, and reported upon the conference held with President Lewis and his associates at a meeting of the Executive Council held in Chicago, Illinois, beginning August 9th. It reported that President Lewis submitted a statement in behalf of the United Mine Workers of America as the basis for the re-affiliation of the United Mine Workers of America with the American Federation of Labor. The statement reads as follows:

From the United Mine Workers of America,

United Mine Workers' Building,
Washington, D. C.

Washington, D. C., July 20, 1943.

Statement of U.M.W.A. Conferees to A.F.L. Conferees:

The United Mine Workers of America is a going concern. Its membership and policies are of public knowledge. For forty-six years it was an affiliate of the American Federation of Labor.

In the interest of unifying the policies of organized labor, it has proposed reaffiliation with the A. F. of L. In doing so, it accepts the American Federation of Labor as it now exists, and expects the American Federation of Labor to accept the United Mine Workers of America as it now exists. The United Mine Workers of America under present conditions has no interest in questions of hypothetical jurisdiction. After the fact of reaffiliation, any and all questions of jurisdiction having a factual or realistic premise can be considered procedurally by the American Federation of Labor.

After an extended discussion of the subject matter herein referred to, on the part of all who participated in the conference, the committee representing the Executive Council decided to make a factual report to the Executive Council, without recommendation. This course was followed.

The Executive Council received and considered most carefully and analytically the report which was made, and decided to submit this report and the facts contained therein to the Sixty-third Annual Convention of the American Federation of Labor, without recommendation, for its consideration and action.

(1943, p. 473) (Several resolutions looking toward reaffiliation of the U.M.W. were presented to the convention and referred to appropriate committee which, in turn, submitted the following report to the delegates. Lengthy debate was had in the convention, which resulted in final adoption of the committee report as follows:)

The Executive Council in its report on this subject refers the application of the United Mine Workers of America for reaffiliation to this convention without comment or recommendation. We can readily appreciate the difficulties experienced by the Executive Council in reaching this decision; nevertheless, we cordially welcome this application of the United Mine Workers for reaffiliation. We interpret this as a favorable response to the invitation so often extended by the Federation for the return of those formerly associated with us. We sincerely hope that this application for reaffiliation, and the action to be taken upon it, will lead others unaffiliated to follow a like procedure.

While your committee experienced the like difficulties encountered by the Executive Council in finding it impossible to recommend acceptance of the tender of reaffiliation under conditions proposed or submitted by the United Mine Workers of America, and as set forth in the Executive Council's report, nevertheless, we are of the opinion that the progress thus far made presents the possibility and opportunity for the early reaffiliation of the United Mine Workers of America and under terms and conditions compatible with our laws and requirements and in keeping with the spirit of equity and fairness to all concerned.

We are fully aware of difficulties yet to be overcome, nevertheless, we are confident that obstacles encountered can be overcome by the process of further conference and negotiations.

Your committee therefore recommends that the Executive Council be authorized and directed to continue negotiations with the United Mine Workers of America and in so doing be guided by the suggestion and direction that affiliated national and international unions having experienced a disregard of or transgression upon their recognized jurisdiction by the United Mine Workers of America, file with the officers of the Federation a statement of their complaint without delay and not later than thirty days following the adjournment of this convention, together with supporting evidence of the complaint filed; that as soon as possible thereafter the Executive Council arrange for conferences between the officers or representatives of complaining national or international unions and the United Mine Workers of America, or take up such questions through the committee of the Federation, for the purpose of adjusting such complaints and righting such infractions as may be alleged and found to be valid by the Executive Council; that arrangements be made for like procedure, conference or negotiation between the United Mine Workers of America and the Progressive Miners and for similar purposes, and that above all else, that the Executive Council be empowered with full and complete authority vested in the convention itself, to determine and dispose of whatever issues may have failed of adjustment within a reasonable time, and by the processes herein before recommended, and to take such additional action as may be necessary to the end that an early reaffiliation of the United Mine Workers can be had on a basis in keeping with the traditions, conditions and requirements of the Federation, and as may be determined by the Executive Council. Your committee trusts that these negotiations will be carried on in the spirit of mutual helpfulness and unity and with expedition.

Immediately after the adjournment of the Sixty-third Annual Convention of the American Federation of Labor, the following letter was transmitted to the President of the United Mine Workers of America:

Boston, Mass., October 16, 1943.

Mr. John L. Lewis, President,
United Mine Workers of America,
United Mine Workers Building,
Washington, D. C.

Dear Mr. Lewis:

The Sixty-third Annual Convention of the American Federation of Labor, which convened in Boston on October 4th and completed its work and adjourned on October 14th, decided through adoption of the report of the Committee on Resolutions to which the application of the United Mine Workers of America for reaffiliation with the American Federation of Labor was referred, that it could not accept your request for reaffiliation with the American Federation of Labor upon the conditions proposed to the committee representing the Executive Council on or about July 20, 1943.

However, the Convention instructed the Executive Council to continue negotiations with the United Mine Workers of America upon the question of the reaffiliation of said organization with the American Federation of Labor. Following the decision of the convention as herein stated, the Executive Council directed that a committee representing it be authorized to meet with representatives of the United Mine Workers on some date within the near future which will be convenient and accommodating, for the purpose of carrying out the instructions of the convention. The committee will be prepared to meet with representatives of the United Mine Workers on some acceptable date following the expiration of a thirty-day period.

I enclose a copy of the report of the Committee on Resolutions dealing with the subject of the application of the United Mine Workers of America for reaffiliation with the American Federation of Labor.

I earnestly request that you advise me if you and your associates representing the United Mine Workers of America will meet with a committee representing the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor for the purpose of continuing negotiations upon the question of reaffiliation of the United Mine Workers with the American Federation of Labor, on some date following a thirty-day period stipulated by the convention as set forth in the report of the Committee on Resolutions which I repeat was decisively adopted by the delegates in attendance at the convention.

Very respectfully yours,

(Signed) Wm. Green,
President, A. F. of L.

In addition, a letter was sent to the officers of national and international unions affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, calling upon them to file a statement regarding transgression which may have been made upon their respective jurisdictions by the United Mine Workers of America, through District No. 50 or otherwise. The replies received from representatives of national and international unions whose jurisdiction had been invaded by the United Mine Workers through District No. 50 or otherwise, were all placed in the hands of the committee appointed for the purpose of negotiating with representatives of the United Mine Workers of America upon the question of reaffiliation with the American Federation of Labor.

The officers of the International Union Progressive Mine Workers of America renewed their protest against the readmission of the United Mine Workers into affiliation with the American Federation of Labor. This protest was based upon an understanding on the part of the officers and members of the Progressive Mine Workers of the jurisdiction extended them when they were chartered as an international union by the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor. The protest of the officers of the International Union Progressive Mine Workers of America was kept in mind and given consideration by the committee representing the American Federation of Labor in all the negotiations which were carried on with the representatives of the United Mine Workers of America.

The members of the committee representing the American Federation of Labor met with the President of the United Mine Workers and his associates at the Statler Hotel, Washington, D. C., on December 10, 1943. No agreement was reached at this meeting. The committee representing the American Federation of Labor reported that it was impossible to arrive at an understanding which would provide for a proper recognition of the jurisdictional rights of international unions affiliated with the American Federation of Labor.

The American Federation of Labor committee reported to the Executive Council of its failure to reach an agreement, at the meeting which was held at Miami, Florida, beginning January 17, 1944. The Executive Council advised the President of the United Mine Workers as follows:

The Executive Council has considered the report of its committee, the letter submitted by President Lewis and the application of the United Mine Workers of America for reaffiliation with the American Federation of Labor in a sympathetic way. The Council proposes that the United Mine Workers return with the jurisdiction they had when they left the American Federation of Labor. The Council instructs its committee to again meet with a committee representing the United Mine Workers of America for the purpose of clarifying all questions that have not been settled.

Further conferences were held by the committee and representatives of the American Federation of Labor with President Lewis and his associates representing the United Mine Workers of America. At these conferences President Lewis proposed that the United Mine Workers of America, which includes District No. 50, should be readmitted to affiliation with the American Federation of Labor as they were. He agreed to settle any jurisdictional dispute which might arise, after reaffiliation of the United Mine Workers with the American Federation of Labor had been consummated. Your committee proposed that jurisdictional questions be settled before said reaffiliation took place. It was impossible to reach an agreement upon this disputed question.

Finally, President Lewis proposed that if the United Mine Workers were taken back as they were, that he would meet with representatives of any international union who might present a jurisdictional claim and endeavor to settle it. If no settlement could be reached by direct negotiation he would be willing to submit the jurisdictional claim to the Executive Council for consideration and abide by its decision. Exception was taken, however, on the part of President Lewis, to the application of this plan and proposal to chemical workers, many of whom have been organized into the American Federation of Labor and others into District No. 50 of the United Mine Workers of America. President Lewis insisted that all chemical workers organized into District No. 50, United Mine Workers of America, should remain there without change and without regard to any claim which might be made by any organization affiliated with the American Federation of Labor for jurisdiction.

During the discussion of this subject, President Lewis was asked if he would agree to waive jurisdiction over chemical workers who were not regarded as related to or connected with coal and coke production and processing. President Lewis stated that he would not agree to such a proposal. He was asked if he would agree that chemical workers organized into unions by the American Federation of Labor and those organized by District No. 50 United Mine Workers of America, be merged and united in an international union to be chartered by the American Federation of Labor. He answered "no" to this inquiry.

The committee representing the American Federation of Labor reported to the Executive Council at its next meeting which was held at Philadelphia, beginning May 1, 1944. The members of the Executive Council, after giving consideration to the report made by the committee representing the Executive Council, decided that the Council reaffirm the action taken at the January meeting. An official communication was sent to President Lewis of the United Mine Workers of America immediately after the foregoing action was taken by the Executive Council, which read as follows:

Philadelphia, Pa., May 8, 1944.

Mr. John L. Lewis, President,
United Mine Workers of America,
Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir and Brother:

Reports were submitted to the members of the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor now meeting in Philadelphia, by myself and Secretary-Treasurer Meany, of the conference we held with you on March 14, and by Vice-President Tobin, chairman of the committee appointed by the Council to confer with you and your associates regarding the application for reaffiliation of the United Mine Workers with the American Federation of Labor, of correspondence which passed between you and him.

Following careful and thorough consideration of these reports the Executive Council voted to reaffirm its former decision taken at a meeting held at Miami, Florida, January 17-27, 1944. The decision referred to reads as follows:

"The Executive Council has considered the report of its committee, the letter submitted by President Lewis, and the application of the United Mine Workers of America for reaffiliation with the American Federation of Labor in a sympathetic way. The Council proposes that the United Mine Workers return with the jurisdiction they had when they left the American Federation of Labor. The Council instructs its committee to again meet with a committee representing the United Mine Workers of America for the purpose of clarifying all questions that have not been settled."

Please note that the Executive Council proposes "that the United Mine Workers return with the jurisdiction they had when they left the American Federation of Labor." I hope and trust you will accept this proposal of the Executive Council which can be clarified and interpreted at a meeting or meetings between you and your associates and the committee appointed by the Executive Council, of which Vice-President Tobin is chairman.

Fraternally yours,
(Signed) William Green,
President, A. F. of L.

At about the same time this letter was sent, a communication was received from President Lewis of the United Mine Workers which read as follows:

Washington, D. C., May 8, 1944.

Mr. William Green, President, and Members of the Executive Council,

Adelphia Hotel,
Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

Gentlemen:

Press reports reveal that the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor has again with characteristic servility to the Roosevelt Administration failed to take affirmative action with respect to the pending application for reaffiliation by the United Mine Workers of America, dated May 17, 1943.

Solely with the desire to make a contribution toward the constructive unification of American labor, the United Mine Workers of America, a year ago, filed its application for reaffiliation with your Council. Throughout this period of a year, the majority of the members of your Executive Council have lacked the courage to either vote "Yes" or vote "No" on the question of acceptance. Instead they have constantly muttered and mumbled and indulged in fearsome incantations over the fallacious and hoary question of jurisdictional rights. It is an amazing exhibition of base hypocrisy approximating moral turpitude.

It is, of course, publicly known that certain members of the Executive Council have been given imperative instructions to refuse admittance of the United Mine Workers of America to the American Federation of Labor by the New Deal politicians who are opposed, for political reasons, to unity in the ranks of labor. This is a continuance of the opposition of the New Deal managers as exemplified when the United Mine Workers of America proposed merger of the C.I.O. and A. F. of L. in February, 1942.

Every well-informed person in Washington knows the identity of the New Deal executives and the members of its Palace Guard, as well as the identity of the individual members of the Executive Council, who from time to time during the past year have clandestinely counselled together to insure the consummation of their shameful plans to betray the interests of the men and women of labor. The members of the Executive Council by their dishonorable intrigue have permitted the American Federation of Labor to become the puppet of a political organization, and, in fact, to achieve the status of a political company union.

Will you please without further procrastination or hypocrisy return to the United Mine Workers of America the application for reaffiliation dated May 17, 1943, together with check for per capita tax which accompanied the application.

Yours truly,
(Signed) John L. Lewis.

The request of President Lewis for the return of the application for reaffiliation with the American Federation of Labor, dated May 17, 1943, together with the check for per capita tax which accompanied the application, was complied with immediately.

Thus ended negotiations which had been carried on between the committee representing the American Federation of Labor and representatives of the United Mine Workers upon the application of said organization for reaffiliation with the American Federation of Labor.

(Page 476) Under the caption "Peace Negotiations with the CIO" the Executive Council reports that during the year there was no conference between the committee representing the American Federation of Labor and the committee representing the CIO, for the purpose of finding a basis for unity. In the meantime division, discord and disunity have existed in the ranks of labor; the situation has grown worse, confusion, distrust and bitterness have increased; that the CIO, in addition to organizing the unorganized has devoted much of its effort toward raiding organizations of the American Federation of Labor. The Executive Council voices the opinion that the leaders of the CIO are responsible for the confusion and bitterness which has developed.

Regardless of the attitude of the leaders of the CIO, your committee is convinced that our responsibility to the labor movement of the United States and Canada is such that we should unceasingly explore every avenue which would lead toward unity within the American labor movement. We are aware that a large portion of the rank and file of the CIO deplore disunity as much as we do, and we owe it to these men and women to continue, despite rebuffs that may be encountered, to work steadily for conferences leading to the consummation of unity.

Because of its relationship to this portion of the Executive Council's report, your committee also gave consideration to that portion of the report under the caption "United Mine Workers Failure to Become Reaffiliated." This portion of the report contains the vital correspondence on the subject which passed between President William Green, A. F. of L., and President John L. Lewis, United Mine Workers. The outstanding fact is that the United Mine Workers made an application for reaffiliation, and because of questions which developed the reaffiliation did not take place.

Your committee, in view of all the facts concerning these negotiations, recommends that the President of the American Federation of Labor be instructed to renew the invitation to the United Mine Workers to reaffiliate, for the practical reason that the reaffiliation of the United Mine Workers should strengthen the American Federation of Labor while proving helpful to the United Mine Workers. We believe that in connection with such invitation to the United Mine Workers, full consideration should be given to the directions and authorizations given to the President of the A. F. of L. and the Executive Council by the Boston Convention, 1943.

(1946, p. 76) The Sixty-fourth Annual Convention of the American Federation of Labor which was held at New Orleans, Louisiana, November 20th to 30th, 1944, directed,

That the President of the American Federation of Labor be instructed to renew the invitation to the United Mine Workers to reaffiliate, for the practical reason that the reaffiliation of the United Mine Workers should strengthen the American Federation of Labor while proving helpful to the United Mine Workers. In connection with such invitation to the United Mine Workers, full consideration should be given to the directions and authorizations given to the President of the American Federation of Labor and the Executive Council by the Boston Convention, 1943.

These instructions were carried out.

The Executive Council is happy to report that following an exchange of communications between the officers of the American Federation of Labor and the President of the United Mine Workers of America, and the holding of conferences between said representatives, an understanding was reached which provided for membership of the United Mine Workers of America within the American Federation of Labor. The charter of the United Mine Workers of America was restored, with the stipulation that said organization would be admitted to the American Federation of Labor with all the rights and privileges of affiliation enjoyed by all organizations, and such reaffiliation carries with it the assumption of the obligations ordinarily attached to affiliation.

This is an achievement which is deeply significant. It must be interpreted as evidence of the development of solidarity within the organized labor movement of the nation, and as a reflection of the desire of the workers of the nation to become united so that their economic strength can be fully mobilized in behalf of the membership of organized labor. The membership of the United Mine Workers of America numbers 600,000. This means added strength to the American Federation of Labor as well as strong cooperative support to the United Mine Workers of America.

The Council refers to this reaffiliation as "deeply significant." It signifies not only the bringing of 600,000 workers back into our fold; it means that these men, their families, their interests, their work is now joined closely with all of us, as we are with them, to promote the common good of our American economy.

President Green spoke of the great social significance of the establishment of the welfare fund by the United Mine Workers, which he said he hoped would point the way for similar approaches by other unions. May we continue to profit from their devoted zeal to the workers' welfare and may they, in turn, be greatly bettered because they are again where we all want them—in the American Federation of Labor.

(Disaffiliation)

(1948, p. 42) The E.C. reported the disaffiliation of the U.M.W. as follows:

The discontinuation of the affiliation of the United Mine Workers of America was most unfortunate. This action took place on December 12, 1947, when the President of the American Federation of Labor received a message from the President of the United Mine Workers of America reading as follows:

Green—A. F. of L.

We disaffiliate.

Lewis.

We sincerely regret the withdrawal of the United Mine Workers of America from affiliation with the American Federation of Labor and we express the hope that ere long said organization will again become affiliated with the American Federation of Labor.

(1948, p. 440) The following committee report on the subject of the disaffiliation of the United Mine Workers was unanimously adopted by the convention:

It was with deep shock that the members of the American Federation of Labor learned of the decision of the United Mine Workers of America to disaffiliate from the American Federation of Labor. It is difficult for us to comprehend fully the purposes that motivated this action; especially so, as the President of the United Mine Workers had himself pressed effectively for many of the programs through which Labor's cause has been vigorously advanced. This disaffiliation is the more amazing when we further realize that the man who curtly announced it has so often and so strongly pressed for a single great united free trade union movement in this country.

Surely, we all know the affiliation of the United Mine Workers of America with the American Federation of Labor has been mutually advantageous. We do not here attempt to explain or interpret the paradoxes involved in this disaffiliation. We do but hope that such motives and programs as once before effected a reaffiliation of the United Mine Workers with their parent body will again prompt this organization to join in full strength with the body which has so much, through the years, helped them and which they in turn have helped.

Whatever may have motivated the decision of the United Mine Workers to disaffiliate, the march of events since then has not shown a justification for disaffiliation of the United Mine Workers from the A. F. of L. and we hope that the union mindful of the loss resulting from disaffiliation will reconsider its decision and rejoin their parent body, the A. F. of L. We hope that they will return home to function in the family of which, by their very nature, they are a functional part.

U.S. vs. John L. Lewis and Mine Workers

(1947, p. 226) The Executive Council reviewed this important legal case in its report to the convention. Because of its importance to all labor organizations the report of the Executive Council is given here in full:

The outstanding labor case of the Twentieth Century is United States vs. John L. Lewis and United Mine Workers of America. This is not said to dramatize the particular case but rather to emphasize the legal principles involved affecting the rights of workers of this nation. Because of its importance it is deemed appropriate to report it in detail.

"Government by injunction" was the common thing at the turn of the century and for a good many years thereafter, but since the passage of the Norris-LaGuardia Act in 1932 the term lost its significance and is barely known to the workers of the last generation. In a most dramatic fashion government by injunction returned in all its full fury in the Mine Workers case. Those in the Labor movement who had lived through the travail and turmoil of the era of government by injunction were alarmed, and for good and substantial reason, at the manner in which it was restored.

In 1945 the government took over the mines under the Smith-Connally Act. In taking over the mines, however, it did not acquire title to the properties and the government expressly provided that the miners shall not be considered employees of the government; on the contrary, the former owners retained full ownership and possession rights and, indeed, continued active management and operation of the mines. After the mines were thus taken over by the government a contract was negotiated with the miners which, among other things, prescribed a procedure whereby the contract could be terminated by the giving of certain notices. Because of government refusal to adjust certain disputes such notices were given and the contracts duly terminated in the manner provided for. The government challenged the right of the union to terminate the contract and rushed into the U. S. District Court with a request for a preliminary injunction which was granted without a notice or hearing. The injunction restrained the officers of the union from publishing the fact that the contract was terminated, from continuing in effect any former notices that were given, and from taking any action whatsoever in aid or encouragement of any stoppage of work in the coal mines. The precise language of that injunction was virtually identical with some of the most infamous injunction orders in American Labor history.

President Lewis of the United Mine Workers was advised that the order was in glaring violation of the Norris-LaGuardia Act and hence was a nullity which carried no force and which could, therefore, be disregarded. The government thereupon instituted contempt proceedings which were tried by the same judge who issued the temporary injunction. After argument and trial of several days, the trial court imposed the largest fine ever imposed in a contempt proceeding, namely, a fine of $3,500,000.00 against the Mine Workers and of $10,000.00 against John L. Lewis.

Representing Mr. Lewis and the United Mine Workers were the most experienced and outstanding labor lawyers in the country.

Appeals were taken and by resort to certain emergency procedures the appeal went directly to the Supreme Court of the United States. While there were several exceedingly important questions presented to the Supreme Court, by far the most crucial and most significant to organized Labor was that of whether an order issued in violation of the Norris-LaGuardia Act, that is, an order issued beyond the jurisdiction of the court, had to be obeyed. For, obviously, if such orders could sustain contempt charges every labor union would be exposed to financial ruin by the arbitrary caprice of any anti-Labor judge in this country.

The members of the Supreme Court split several ways on the basic questions in the case, and it may be fairly stated of the majority opinions that they are notable only because of their extreme evasiveness and confusion. The so-called majority opinion was authored by Chief Justice Vinson and adopted in its entirety by Justices Burton and Reed. That opinion argued vaguely that the Norris-LaGuardia Act did not apply to disputes involving the government and that since the government had taken over the mines this was such a dispute. Evidently, sensing the weakness of this assigned reason, they proceeded to adopt another, weaker and more amazing; they held that even if the Norris-LaGuardia Act did apply and thereby the court was without jurisdiction to issue the injunction, the void order nevertheless had to be obeyed. Mr. Justice Jackson dissented from that portion of the majority opinion which refused to apply the Norris-LaGuardia Act. Nevertheless, he joined in that portion which held that the void order had to be obeyed. Mr. Justice Frankfurter, in a separate opinion, held that under the Norris-LaGuardia Act, the injunction was improperly issued. But he devised a theory which compelled obedience to the void order. Justices Douglas and Black avoided the all-important question of necessity to conform with a void order by ruling that the miners were government employees and adopted the majority ruling that the Norris-LaGuardia Act did not apply to government employees. As to that it should be noted that even the government did not suggest or argue that the Miners were government employees; and, indeed, no one familiar with the manner in which the coal mines were administered under the Smith-Connally Act had ever even suggested that the miners were government employees. Justices Rutledge and Murphy wrote stirring dissenting opinions pointing out at great length the many and obvious errors in the reasoning of the majority opinions and calling forth a host of authoritative prior decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States which were directly in conflict with the majority opinion in the Mine Workers cases. Justices Rutledge and Murphy tore to shreds the reasoning of the majority. A conditional reduction of the $3,500,000.00 fine to $700,000 was voted by the majority. But Justices Rutledge, Murphy, Black and

Douglas were against imposing any fine.

The American Federation of Labor is entirely confident that this reprehensible decision of the majority will go down in history as one of the most ignominious decisions ever announced by the Court. We are persuaded that this decision will take its uncomfortable place alongside of such judicial outrages as the Dred Scott case, the Debs case, the Danbury Hatters case, and the Bedford Stone case. Even more important, we know that the American people when once they realize the actual holding and implication of the majority opinion, will not long tolerate its perpetuation. For, it not only is completely contrary to basic constitutional and common law doctrines to compel men to abide by void orders rendered without jurisdiction, but also it is repulsive to the genius of freedom and democracy to compel obedience to such nullities.

The American Federation of Labor vigorously condemns the decision of the U. S. Supreme Court in this case, and will do everything in its power to secure its reversal and repudiation.

District 50 Jurisdictional Dispute

(1947, p. 567) Two resolutions, Nos. 70 and 135, both dealing with jurisdictional problems existing between District 50, United Mine Workers of America, and certain international unions of the A. F. of L., were submitted to the convention. The resolutions, committee recommendations and convention action, and Minority Report on the matter follow:

Res. No. 70: Whereas, Prior to the Miners Union coming back into the A. F. of L. there was part of the Miners Union known as District 50. This District 50 invaded the jurisdiction of many international unions by offering cheaper dues and initiation fees, and then entered into agreements with employers with lower rates of pay and other conditions established in industries. This practice has not been discontinued, and

Whereas, It was generally understood that the President of the A. F. of L., and District 50 were to meet with representatives of international unions affected; no such meetings have been held, therefore, be it

Resolved, That this convention instruct the President of the American Federation of Labor to call a meeting as soon as possible after the adjournment of this convention for the purpose of having District 50 turn over to the international unions such members as come under the jurisdiction of the international unions in accordance with jurisdiction under their charters granted by the American Federation of Labor.

Resolution No. 135: Whereas, No satisfactory understanding has been reached between District No. 50, United Mine Workers of America, and some international unions affiliated with the Metal Trades Department, over questions of jurisdiction, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the President of the American Federation of Labor be requested to call a conference of officers of District No. 50, United Mine Workers of America and the international unions affiliated with the Metal Trades Department, having unadjusted questions of jurisdiction with District No. 50; and that the President of the American Federation of Labor be requested to preside over this conference.

Resolutions Nos. 70 and 135, under the caption, "Jurisdiction of District 50 U. M. W." introduced by the delegates of the International Molders and Foundry Workers of America, and under the caption "District 50 U. M. W.," introduced by the delegate of the Metal Trades Department.

Your committee recommends that action on Resolution No. 135 covers the purpose of Resolution No. 70, making action on that resolution unnecessary.

Your committee recommends that the Whereas of Resolution 135 be amended by striking out the words "District No. 50," so that the first three lines of the Whereas will read "No satisfactory understanding has been reached between the United Mine Workers of America," etc.

Your committee further recommends that an additional Resolved be added to Resolution No. 135, reading, and be it further

"Resolved, That this convention declare that the only organizations having jurisdiction in the building and construction field are those National and International Unions already holding certificates of affiliation from the American Federation of Labor, and represented by the Building and Construction Trades Department of the American Federation of Labor."

With these amendments your committee recommends the adoption of Resolution No. 135.

Minority Report on Resolutions Nos. 70 and 135

Minority Report affecting report of the Resolutions Committee in re Resolution No. 70 introduced by the International Molders Union and Resolution No. 135 introduced by the Metal Trades Department.

These resolutions have to do with alleged jurisdiction problems between International Unions and District 50, United Mine Workers of America. Resolution No. 70 provides for this convention to instruct the President of the American Federation of Labor to call a meeting between the International Unions affected and District 50. The purpose of this meeting, as pointed out in the resolutions, is to have District 50 turn over to the International Unions such members as come within the claimed jurisdiction of such International Unions.

Resolution No. 135 provides for the calling of a similar conference with District 50 and representatives of the International Unions in the Metal Trades Department. Resolution No. 70 states "that no such meetings have been held." Both of these resolutions are in substance and in fact from the Metal Trades Organizations.

However, when the resolutions were under consideration by the Committee on Resolutions, the President of the Building Trades Department presented the arguments in favor of the adoption of the resolutions and suggested an amendment to one of the resolutions providing that the convention in effect order, declare and reiterate the jurisdictions granted the Building Trades organizations by the American Federation of Labor. This amendment was adopted by the committee with dissenting votes.

This minority report points out that the resolutions, primarily being from the Metal Trades organization, were used by the Building Trades Department to have their jurisdictions reaffirmed by the convention which, in our judgment, is extralegal and in violation of regular procedures and established policies of the American Federation of Labor.

The purpose of Resolution No. 135 is for a meeting with the Metal Trades Department and District 50, and does not provide for any meeting with the Building Trades Organizations. After the resolutions were adopted as amended, it was discovered that the meetings contemplated were to be with District 50 and not with the United Mine Workers of America. The resolutions were reconsidered and the Committee substituted the International Union for District 50.

The foregoing is a factual presentation concerning these two resolutions and indicates quite clearly that the tactics of the proponents of said resolutions—the Metal Trades which were later joined by their allies in the Building Trades—were neither sound nor constructive and constituted a clear departure from the established procedures and practices for the handling of these matters. They have certainly been mutilated as to the original purpose of the resolutions, as evidenced by the Building Trades, which amended the resolutions and thereby provided for convention determination of the issues before the meetings were held. In our judgment, the amendment to the resolutions, which was adopted, really destroys the original intent of such resolutions and predetermines the issue by the convention.

If Resolution No. 135 is construed as being adopted, the contemplated meeting, if held, will be with the Metal Trades Organization and not with the Building Trades Unions. From this confused state of affairs it is quite evident that proponents of these resolutions cannot successfully be charged with being helpful or constructive in the solution of these problems.

When the United Mine Workers of America was reaffiliated with the American Federation of Labor, we were admitted as is, and we naturally expected and so understood, that if jurisdictional or other problems developed, they would be handled in the usual manner and way under the procedures followed in such cases. Some meetings have been held, and while no agreements were worked out, the fact remains that meetings were held. The next step in procedure, of course, following the meetings, would be the good offices of the Executive Council.

The United Mine Workers of America, like any other organization, reserves for itself the right to protect its organization and membership in such jurisdictional matters. The United Mine Workers of America is always willing to meet with representatives of International Unions of the American Federation of Labor on any matter, jurisdictional or otherwise. The United Mine Workers shall continue to follow this policy. We resent, therefore, these resolutions directing us to meet when we have already met. We shall follow the usual procedure on these jurisdictional matters, reserving our right to protect our jurisdiction and our membership at all times.

This minority report, therefore, believes that the action taken by majority vote of the Resolutions Committee is improper and not in keeping with established procedure, and that such action of the Committee will serve no useful or constructive purpose. This report recommends, therefore, that the report and recommendations of the Resolutions Committee be nonconcurring in, and that the convention affirmatively declare that the usual procedure and established policy be followed in the handling of these matters between the organizations affected.

Respectively submitted,
Thomas Kennedy
Arnold S. Zander

Lengthy debate ensued on the motion to adopt the Minority Report and on the Majority Report. Representatives of the organizations at interest spoke on the subject and submitted correspondence which had taken place on the subject prior to the convention. The final decision was to re-refer both reports to the Executive Council, "for consideration and appropriate action."

Protest Against Invasion Into Construction Field

(1950, p. 43) Res. 62: Whereas, The United Mine Workers of America have entered into the construction field and are making great headway, and

Whereas, If the American Federation of Labor would enter into the organizing of coal mines and processing plants, it would tend to cause the U. M. W. A. to retrench to protect its interests in those industries, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Delegates in convention assembled request the American Federation of Labor to inaugurate such a program.

(1950, p. 483) We join with the introducers of this resolution in condemning the practice of the United Mine Workers of America of venturing into the construction field and thus invading the jurisdiction of the building trades unions. Such practices and procedures are akin to the methods of strikebreaking agencies and can only be considered as tools and implements of indirect if not direct service to those employers and contractors who would undermine, if not destroy, our building trades unions and their standards of employment.

However grievous the complaint, your Committee cannot approve the remedy of retaliation proposed but would urge the officers of the Federation and those of the Building Trades Department to explore and, if possible, devise some feasible and effective plan to prevent the continuance of the unwarrantable and destructive invasion of the building trades unions area of operation by the United Mine Workers and District 50.

Mirror Imports, Tariffs

(1952, pp. 379, 520) Res. 142 dealt with the growing threat to the American glass mirror industry by imports from low-standard countries and requested support for American-made mirrors by builders, architects and consumers in order to protect labor standards in the American glass mirror industry.

Mississippi Flood Control

(1928, pp. 83, 216) After extended hearings a bill was introduced in Congress having for its purpose to provide protection against great floods in the Mississippi Valley. The A. F. of L. convention in 1927 declared it was a governmental duty to finance the great project. This was bitterly contested by administration forces but finally the bill with that provision passed and became a law. The A. F. of L. used every effort to bring about that result.

Missouri River (Valley) Project

(1946, p. 536) Res. 109 protested against the moratorium in effect against completion of the Missouri River Basin project and called for completion of the project without further delay.

(1946, pp. 211, 468) The committee report on the section of the Executive Council Report relating to A. F. of L. support of a Missouri Valley Authority was unanimously adopted:

Under this heading the Executive Council reports the introduction and support of two bills creating the Missouri Valley authority providing flood and erosion control, new farms, jobs in nine states and helps postwar jobs throughout the United States. These bills failed of passage. The Executive Council recommends continued support of this proposal and your Committee recommends adoption of this section of the Executive Council's report and recommendation.

(1947, p. 682) Res. 198 requested the A. F. of L. to approve this resolution calling upon the Secretary of the Interior to make certain information available to interested organizations in the Missouri Valley Development Plan, specifically the names of all contractors who were submitting bids on all projects in the Plan. The convention referred the resolution to the Executive Council "for investigation of the facts and such action as will be helpful."

(1947, pp. 250, 523) Under this heading the Executive Council reports its continued support of legislation creating the Missouri Valley Authority but that despite its efforts the proposal has not made progress.

The Executive Council recommends continued support of this proposal and your committee recommends adoption of this section of the Executive Council's report and recommendation.

(1948, p. 135) We feel that this legislation is essential to the welfare of our Nation, particularly at this time, and will continue support of this proposal as authorized by previous conventions.

(Page 397) Development of these resources will be of great public benefit. We urge the Executive Council to do all they can in support of any legislation having for its end completeness in this development.

(1948, p. 135) In its report on this subject, the Executive Council stated: "We feel that this legislation is essential to the welfare of our nation, particularly at this time, and will continue support of this proposal as authorized by previous conventions."

(1948, p. 397) Development of these resources will be of great public benefit. We urge the Executive Council to do all they can in support of any legislation having for its end completeness in this development.

(1949, p. 202) Our position in support of the creation of a Missouri Valley Authority remains unchanged. . . . The broad program of unified resources development and water control . . . continues to have our endorsement, supported by testimony when hearings are in order. . . . The needs of our people are such, in our opinion, that backing for this legislation is essential for the advancement of residents in the Missouri Valley. The trail-blazing job done by the Tennessee Valley Authority is sufficient proof of the practicability of other such enterprises.

(1949, p. 381) In a general report on hydroelectric development, the convention unanimously approved the report of the committee considering the

Missouri Valley Authority, Columbia Valley Authority, and Colorado River System. (See: Hydro-Electric Power Development.)

Mobilization, Planning for Full (see: Defense).

Mobilization, Industrial (War)

(1939, p. 497) There is in existence a so-called "Mobilization Plan" which, being the joint work of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, lays down plans for the stringent regimentation of all labor in the event of war or a national emergency. The proposals as stated in Appendix III of that Plan call for an Administration of War Labor and an Advisory Board of ten (10) members, all appointed by the President, the duties of the Board as stated being: "1. Measures to prevent grievances of employers and employees, whether actual or imaginary, from interfering with war production. 2. The effect of organizations of employers into trade associations and of labor into trade unions and the effect of the maintenance of the right of collective bargaining between such organizations or industry's ability to meet the material requirements of the armed forces. 3. Standards of wages, hours of work, and working conditions. 4. Equality of work for identical pay. 5. The necessity for the modification of the statutory work-day with due regard for the national necessity and the welfare of labor. 6. Maintenance of maximum production in all war work and the suspension for the period of the actual emergency and a reasonable adjustment thereafter of restrictive regulations not having the force of war, which unreasonably limit production." The implication of which is, this appointed board will take over and determine those activities, which hitherto have been the province of Trade Unions, and as a consequence our organizations will be stripped of their function and so destroyed. Other recommendations of the Plan brazenly call for the suspension of those laws which have from time to time been enacted in the various states, restricting the hours and conditions of employment of women and children, and would bring back the intolerable exploitation which labor has combatted and ameliorated in fifty years of struggle. The Executive Council is directed to inaugurate a movement that will protect Organized Labor from the menace of such "War Dictatorship" as is contained in the "Industrial Mobilization Plan."

(P. 511) Statement by committee chairman: "Might I say to you that in this report, without going further into its provisions, there is designed a provision that in the event of war or the imminence of war, all legislation having to do with the standards of work may be set aside, yes, even including minimum rates under which children might be employed. Likewise it is contemplated that our educational and training centers may be placed under the department of the war-making agencies. It is well, therefore, that our attention is called to that industrial mobilization plan in order that we might know before we become involved in war—and pray that we may be spared that great trial and privation—so that at least we may know beforehand and seek to provide adequate representation of labor upon all agencies having to do with labor and labor relationships, and so that the standards and the conditions we have set for ourselves may not be destroyed, so that we may maintain our freedom as trade unionists and as wage earners, that we may not only maintain our standards but seek continually thereafter to improve upon them."

(1940, p. 491) A resolution was considered by the 1940 convention calling for the establishment of an

A. F. of L. Commission to Study an Industrial Mobilization Plan to Safeguard Labor's Interests in the Defense Program. While the convention did not adopt the resolution per se it did approve the general thoughts of the resolution, the creation of a special commission for that purpose was not considered necessary or advisable. The "officers of the A. F. of L. and its Executive Council are charged with the responsibility of seeing that labor's welfare and its rights are thoroughly protected in connection with the nation's program of defense."

Monetary System (see also: Federal Reserve Act (1946); Bretton Woods Agreement (1946).

Whereas, It is an economic fact that the Government should have sole power to create and regulate the value of the nation's money as provided for in Article 1, Section 8 of the Constitution of the United States, "to coin money, to regulate the value thereof," and

Whereas—It is a widely known fact that our Government is compelled to borrow its own money from private institutions and pay interest to private banking institutions for use of its own money, and

Whereas—Even with a victorious end to the war there can never be a secure and lasting peace so long as a few ruthless private bankers have the power to bring on a condition of economic chaos, and

Whereas—Labor unions can never gain their goal by bargaining in the matter of hours, wages and general working conditions until Congress restores to itself the power to coin money and regulate the buying power of the wages bargained for, and

Whereas—An amazing revolution has taken place in the science of production no change in any way commensurate has taken place in the financial mechanism, and

Whereas — A government-created money interest-free at source of origin used scientifically would prevent inflation, deflation and make it possible for consumption to keep pace with production, and

Whereas—An honest, scientific, constitutional money system should have these essential principles:

1. It must be created and controlled by Congress.
2. It must be free from interference by politicians and private bankers.
3. It must be interest free at origin and based on the total wealth of the nation and not on bonds or basic metals.

4. It must have a 100% reserve requirement, therefore, be it

Resolved—That the American Federation of Labor in convention assembled respectfully request the President of the United States to immediately call upon Congress to restore the powers vested in Article 1, Section 8 of the Constitution of the United States, and be it further

Resolved—That it go on record urging the Senate and House to seriously consider the monetary bills H.R. 42 and H.R. 153.

Money Management, Education

(1936, p. 411) Training in scientific money management has never been afforded in the public schools of this country (except in one place) with the result that the great majority of the adults of today are financial drifters. For the same reason, over 2,000,000 financial illiterates are being turned out of our schools and colleges every year until such training shall have been made a requirement in school and college curricula. Such training is now possible as the result of nearly two decades of specialized study and eight years of practical experimentation throughout one public school system. The E.C. is directed at the earliest possible moment to look into the possibilities of this practical form of education for the benefit of all its members and their families.

Monopolies and Trade Restraints

(1949, pp. 238, 386) The convention considered a brief report on monopolies and restraint of trade, and hearings which had been held on proposed legislation. However, the convention voted to support the recommendation of its committee that no action should be taken on this matter without further detailed study, and therefore recommended that the subject be referred to the E.C. for further study.

Mooney and Billings

(1933, p. 525) The A. F. of L. reaffirms all declarations of previous conventions of the A. F. of L. with reference to the Mooney and Billings case and the continuance of efforts for their unconditional pardon or early release.

Your Committee has considered Resolution No. 59 and has found that the purpose of the resolution is to induce the Montgomery Ward Company to refrain from purchasing or distributing any of the products made by the Washington Elger Company of Los Angeles, California, and the Dixie Foundry Company of Cleveland, Tennessee. Both companies are now on the "We Don't Patronize List" of the International Molders and Foundry Workers Union of North America.

Your Committee therefore recommends that this resolution be referred to the incoming Executive Council with the request that it take up the question with the companies concerned and failing of adjustment a report of the attitude of these concerns be made to the trade union movement in general.

Monthly Survey of Business

(1929, p. 101) The Monthly Survey of Business is a new service which the President of the Federation began with the month of July. This four-page bulletin gives the latest available information on business conditions compiled from the most reliable sources, shows the trends of business and indicates how these trends will affect Labor. The business world is increasingly using statistics and economic data showing business trends as a basis for planning and determining policies. Discussion of all business and production problems, including labor relations, involves familiarity with business facts and conditions. To assist every union executive to keep posted on such information is the purpose of the Business Survey.

(1930, pp. 93, 283) To make progress, union activities must be timed so as to take advantage of the most opportune circumstances. If business is good and firms are making substantial earnings, a drive for higher wages may easily win success. But a strike at the wrong moment when business is depressed, may cost thousands of dollars and accomplish nothing. It is as necessary to know when to act as it is to know what to do. To help union executives to keep closely in touch with business developments, we are publishing our Monthly Survey of Business. The Survey has a two-fold purpose. It gives last minute facts on the business situation, as it affects wage earners, discussing production, employment, workers' incomes, manufacturers' earnings and other current developments. Secondly, it interprets the basic significance of present business developments in relation to our general welfare and progress. There is a close relationship between workers' welfare, business prosperity and our general social, intellectual and spiritual advance. The Survey gives current facts to illustrate this. We feel that another important mission of the Survey is its presentation of these facts to groups outside the labor movement. It goes to economists, libraries, business organizations. A number of college professors are taking it to use in their classes on economics and business conditions. Some 3,000 copies are distributed monthly.

(1931, pp 141, 341) An important part of a union's executive's equipment is accurate information on business developments which affect workers' interests. The Monthly Survey of Business brings our local union executives every month a brief outline of the most significant developments. Its circulation has more than doubled in the past year, showing that union officers are availing themselves of the opportunity to know business facts. The Survey has continually pointed out the danger of wage reductions, showing the importance of workers' buying power; compared wage losses with dividend increases, and shown the importance of reserves for wages as well as reserves for dividend payments. We have kept our executives in touch with developments abroad which affect workers in America, farmers' problems and special problems of certain industries, such as building and railroads. Reports on unemployment and workers' buying power also keep the losses of wage earners before the country. A large number of requests for the Survey have come from groups outside the labor movement, such as business organizations, colleges, libraries, research groups. The Survey is a useful means of keeping before the public information on workers' problems which is fundamental in guiding business developments toward a balanced progress.

(1951, pp. 285, 560) Res. 29 proposed an investigation into the Moral

Rearmament Movement "so as to be in a position to acquaint the membership of organized labor with all the facts pertaining thereto."

Mothers' Pensions

(1925, p. 54) A bill was introduced in Congress providing for the establishment of a bureau for children's aid for the District of Columbia. One of the features of the bill was a provision to pay an allowance to the natural guardians of dependent children in order that they may be sustained and educated in their natural homes. Inasmuch as the natural guardians of most dependent children are their widowed mothers, the pension would be paid them. Although it failed of passage, it was believed that it can be enacted into law in the next session. (P. 283) E.C. and legislative committee were instructed to support this legislation in the next session of Congress.

(1926, pp. 66, 212) The convention commends the E.C. for this legislative victory which, in principle, is so important to the workers of the U.S. It is earnestly urged that the Council observe closely the administration of the law to the end that the intent of the Congress shall be made fully effective.

(1930, pp. 105, 286) The maternity and infancy act came to an end June 30, 1929. Before that time, however, bills were introduced to extend the life of the law. In December, 1929, President Hoover made a recommendation that the maternity and infancy act be restored but that part of its provisions come under the control and supervision of the Public Health Service. Bills to that effect were reported in February, 1930, but there was such opposition that nothing was done. It was contended that maternity and infancy laws should be administered by the Children's Bureau of the Department of Labor. This contention became so controversial that action on the measure was postponed until the next session.

(1931, pp. 112, 347) Bills providing for the restoration of the Maternity and Infancy Act were introduced in both Houses. Later, the House bill was changed to take away eventually from the Children's Bureau in the Department of Labor that part of its functions that cared for maternity cases and transfer them to the Public Health Service. This was opposed by Labor but it was passed by the House. The Senate passed the bill that Labor favored. The bills were sent to conference and the Senate receded leaving the changes in the original act adopted by the House. Owing to the filibuster in the Senate, discussion of the amendments was prevented. It was understood that the Senate would not have receded and approved of the House amendments.

(1934, pp. 117, 543) Our emergency relief problem would be simpler if we had adequate provisions for mothers' pensions. Mothers' pension laws exist in 46 states but they are obviously inadequate in coverage and provisions. We should endeavor to improve these laws and secure the enactment of the best standards in all states and territories.

Motion Picture Distribution—(1939, pp. 139, 416) S. 280, to prohibit and prevent the trade practices known as "compulsory block-booking" and "blind selling" in the leasing of motion-picture films in interstate and foreign commerce passed the Senate despite the opposition of all organizations of employees in the film industry. If the bill becomes a law, it will mean that production schedules of the motion picture industry will be cut in half and thus directly affect the employment of some 282,000 persons who are employed in the production, distribution and exhibition divisions of the industry. According to evidence given before the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce there are 276 crafts employed in the industry and that many thousands of these workers will lose continuity of employment or be made entirely idle. All unions whose members are employed in the industry appealed to the Senate to defeat the bill and the President of the A. F. of L. wrote a strong letter to the leader of the majority in which he pointed out the injury that would be done to the workers in the industry by creating extensive unemployment. The bill was passed by a vote of 46 to 28. When it reached the House it was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, which postponed action until the next session.

Motion Picture Industry (also see: Operating Engineers)—(1947, p. 168) In accordance with instructions of the 1946 convention, the E.C. undertook to "set up within the motion picture, amusement, and all other related industries, and with the sanction and agreement of all unions working in these industries, ways and means for the purpose of examining, considering, and after deliberation, setting up machinery, with the sanction and agreement of the national and international unions affected, which will insure the peaceful settlement, without work stoppage, of all jurisdictional disputes within the structure of the motion picture, amusement and related industries."

After giving consideration to the broad questions of jurisdiction and the settlement of jurisdictional problems, the Council directed that an inquiry be addressed to the trades involved in the motion picture studios in order to ascertain what their reaction would be toward setting up such a tribunal for the particular industry; and if that experience proved to be favorable, then another group could be invited to take similar action.

Communications were sent to the officers of all the organizations affected, and favorable replies were received from all organizations whose members are employed in the motion picture studios. After giving consideration to these replies, the Executive Council directed President Green to call a conference of representatives of the interested and affected organizations, for the purpose of establishing a committee to adjust jurisdictional disputes in conformity with the jurisdiction granted by the American Federation of Labor and to implement its decisions on jurisdiction.

The conference referred to was held at the headquarters of the American Federation of Labor beginning Tuesday, May 13, 1947. It was unanimously agreed at the conference that a committee composed of the Presidents of five national and international unions serve to study all phases of the jurisdictional questions involved in the motion picture industry, to analyze the causes of disputes among unions representing workers employed at the studios, to draft a plan providing for the peaceful settlement of all future disputes which would eliminate any possibility of strikes for jurisdictional reasons in the studios, and to submit this plan when drafted, for the approval of all national and international unions which have members employed in the studios. (At the time of preparation of the E.C. Report, no findings or recommendations of the committee had been submitted.)

(1947, p. 430) The report of the convention Committee on Organization contained the following reference to the long-standing jurisdictional dispute in the Hollywood motion picture industry:

A deep appreciation of our own responsibility in this matter must be ever evidenced by all of our unions if we are to preserve our rights to function fully as a free trade union movement. We recommend that the Executive Council establish a special committee which, functioning under the rules of the American Federation of Labor and under the direction of the Executive Council should devote itself to the consideration and adjustment of jurisdictional disputes as they arise between unions, and seek to effect mutually satisfactory settlements.

On this premise, your committee approached the long standing dispute in the motion picture industry. There were available for us all the documents incident to this dispute, from the time of the first meeting on this subject which was authorized by the Executive Council at its meeting in Cincinnati, in October, 1945. The voluminous report up to and including the reference in this year's Council report shows the real effort put forth by our Council and its subcommittee to work out a solution in this problem. However, now, we know that a supplemental report will be made direct to the Convention by the Committee selected for that purpose.

Your committee is not informed on the findings of the committee and therefore cannot even comment thereon.

However, your committee can and does recommend that whatever those findings are, whatever action is recommended by the committee pursuant to such findings—that if this report is adopted by this convention, the convention action be carried out forthwith.

We must demonstrate our ability to conduct our own affairs and particularly in all jurisdictional problems, and your committee firmly believes we will. We shall, therefore, all await the report of the Committee selected for this purpose and fully consider its every part.

The report of the convention committee was referred back to the Executive Council.

Whereas—It has become apparent that many motion picture producers and advertising agencies are leaving the continental United States to produce motion pictures for United States consumption for tax saving purposes, or to take advantage of cheap production and labor costs, and

Whereas—This practice is growing at an alarming rate and depriving many United States citizens of employment who would otherwise be used in the production of these motion pictures as well as depriving the United States government of taxes which would accrue from their salaries and wages, and

Whereas—This practice is also creating unfair competition to the producers who make their motion pictures in the United States and hire United States citizens, and

Whereas—We deem it grossly unfair and improper for American industry to attempt to sell American products to American workers by means of advertising films that have been made in foreign countries by foreign workers for the specific purposes of avoiding the wage and living standards which make the purchase of their products in America possible, therefore, be it

Resolved—That the 71st convention of the American Federation of Labor go on record as strongly protesting this practice and that we solicit the support of all labor organizations in America and all other Americans in protesting this practice of advertisers, advertising agencies and film producers in our efforts to convince such producers, manufacturers and distributors of commodities manufactured and sold in the United States, that such a practice is unfair and should be dispensed with.

(Protest Against Justice Department Ruling)

Whereas—The making, distribution and exhibition of motion pictures have long provided and do now provide employment for many thousands of persons, and have been for many years and now are the principal means of entertainment for many millions throughout the United States of America, and

Whereas—The motion picture theater in every community of the United States brings direct benefit to every transportation agency, every tire and gasoline station, every restaurant, every grocery store, every drug store, every novelty shop, every news stand, every shoe shop, department store, dry goods store and garment shop and is particularly important to real estate values, and

Whereas—Motion pictures have been and now are a channel of communication, historically noted for promoting the democratic way of life throughout the world and acquainting the world with American progress, and

Whereas—The United States Department of Justice has filed Federal court action which seeks to force the motion picture industry to allow the free showing on television of multi-million dollar theatrical motion pictures in direct competition with the theater box offices and if this illogical and arbitrary result should ensue, a great many of the 22,000 American motion picture theaters would be forced to close, with the result that film producers then would not have enough monetary returns to finance the making of quality theatrical pictures in which hundreds and sometimes thousands of American workmen are employed, and reasonable court suit by the Department of Justice jeopardizes the livelihood of many of the 250,000 workers in the film industry, who for the most part are organized in A. F. of L. unions, therefore, be it

Resolved—That the American Federation of Labor in convention assembled condemns the Department of Justice action against the motion picture industry, and be it further

Resolved—That the convention instruct the A. F. of L. Executive Council to investigate all factors in the bringing of this unfair suit which jeopardizes the jobs of thousands of A. F. of L. members, and be it further Resolved—That all A. F. of L. publications and news outlets be requested to give the widest possible publicity to this resolution.

Municipal Employers, Coverage Under Social Security

(1952, pp. 53, 470) Res. 85 contained the following proposal: That the 71st Convention of the American Federation of Labor instruct its Executive Council and legislative department to initiate necessary legislation correcting these inequities in the Social Security Act so that permanent and temporary employees of the above mentioned political sub-divisions, not participating in the established pension or retirement program of the political subdivision be eligible for unemployment compensation and old age and survivors insurance.

Referred to the Committee on Social Security.

Muscle Shoals

(1925, p. 171) Convention reaffirmed action of 1923 convention in unanimously opposing the subsidizing or granting of other Government financial aid to any private corporation or corporations for the purpose of establishing a privately owned and operated power system or to any encouragement whatever to a privately owned and operated super-power system.

(1927, p. 73) The joint committee appointed by Congress to investigate the best terms on which Muscle Shoals could be leased made a report in the first session of the Sixty-ninth Congress which authorized the Secretary of War to enter into a lease with the Muscle Shoals Fertilizer Company and the Muscle Shoals Power Distributing Company. Shortly after the second session opened a new bill was introduced to lease to the Farmers' Federated Fertilizer Corporation. It soon became evident that no legislation on Muscle Shoals would be attempted during the session. Several interests injected themselves into the leasing proposition for the purpose, it was said, of delaying any action. It was the desire of the opponents of any legislation to refer the bills back to the Senate Committee on Agriculture and postpone all consideration until the next Congress. This was done. In the meantime friends of public ownership insisted that no lease should be entered into. (P. 247) The E.C. was directed to watch this situation closely in the Seventieth Congress, to the end that whatever legislative action is proposed it will conform to organized labor's idea and for the best interest of the general public.

(1930, p. 382) The A. F. of L. urges members of Congress to take action at the next session that will bring about immediate settlement and disposition of the Muscle Shoals project in such a way as will fully protect the rights of the public.

(1933, pp. 104, 431) After years of effort Senator Norris succeeded in having a law enacted providing for government operation of Muscle Shoals.

Musicians, Anti-Trust Case

(1942, p. 349) The attention of the convention was called to the problem faced by the American Federation of Musicians in a dispute over records and transcriptions. The Anti-Trust Division of the Department of Justice entered the case and instituted suit against the A. F. Musicians. The supplemental report of the Executive Council, Res. 68, and action of the convention follows: (1942, p. 401)

The Executive Council submits the following declaration for consideration and action by this convention:

For a period of years the American Federation of Musicians has been engaged in a labor dispute with manufacturers of records and transcriptions, and with broadcasting companies over practices of the said employers, which have caused the unemployment of thousands of musicians affiliated with the American Federation of Musicians. The employers have not shown a disposition to resolve this important controversy and it became necessary for the members of the American Federation of Musicians to cease work in the making of records and electrical transcriptions. By unanimous action of a duly accredited convention of the American Federation of Musicians, held at Seattle, Washington, June, 1941, its President was directed to inform all members of the American Federation of Musicians to cease work in the making of records and electrical transcriptions. As a result of such order of the convention, the Anti-Trust Division of the Department of Justice has instituted a suit against the American Federation of Musicians in an effort to further the individual economic views of the head of said department, which views threaten the destruction of free trade unionism and have been previously repudiated by the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States.

The civil suit instituted by the Anti-Trust Division of the Department of Justice unfairly aids employers in their arbitrary resistance to a fair and equitable solution of the dispute. The objectives sought by the Anti-Trust Division of the Department of Justice would prohibit the use of peaceful measures in labor disputes, would deny the exercise of freedom of speech, and would impose involuntary servitude upon the workers of the country. Therefore, the American Federation of Labor condemns the Anti-Trust Division of the Department of Justice for its persistent campaign to destroy constitutional rights of a free and democratic labor movement. The American Federation of Labor gives unqualified support to the American Federation of Musicians in its just struggle to protect the skill and employment opportunities of its members from the destructive inroads made by the arbitrary and unrestricted competition of labor-displacing mechanical devices which the Musicians are continually called upon to help to manufacture with the result of destroying their own employment opportunities, which, without their help, could not be done.

Resolution No. 68:

Whereas—The American Federation of Musicians in convention assembled in Seattle, Washington, during the month of June, 1941, did instruct the International President and the Executive Board of the American Federation of Musicians to make certain decisions regarding the making of records and electrical transcriptions by members of the American Federation of Musicians, the unauthorized use of which have completely eliminated musicians' jobs where they previously existed, and

Whereas—Pursuant to this demand on the part of the rank and file membership of the American Federation of Musicians through the duly authorized and accredited delegates to the convention representing 145,000 organized musicians in the United States and Canada, the International President of the American Federation of Musicians, at the convention of the A. F. of M. held in Dallas, Texas, June 6th, 1942, expressed the will of the aforesaid 145,000 members of the A. F. of M. by decreeing that on and after August 1, 1942, the members of the A. F. of M. would cease the making of recorded music and electrical transcriptions except for the use of the armed forces of our country, for non-commercial use in the home, or at the request of the President of the United States, and

Whereas—The distortions and glaring inaccuracies by a section of the Press have confused the public mind for the deliberate purpose of creating disunity and to discredit organized labor's part in the war effort despite the fact the American Federation of Musicians has every just reason to be proud of the inestimable record of occasions on which the locals and members comprising the Federation have donated freely of their time and money to the armed service, in the sale of war bonds, in Red Cross drives and everything connected with the war effort in general, therefore, be it

Resolved—That the American Federation of Labor in convention assembled expresses its confidence in the judgment of the International President of the American Federation of Musicians and the 590 accredited delegates to the Dallas Convention of the A. F. of M., in their back-to-the-wall endeavor to retain the last vestige of employment for the union musicians, and be it further

Resolved—That copies of this resolution be sent to the Chairman of the Senate Investigating Committee, the chairman of the Federal Communications Commission, the Chairman of the Office of War Information, the President of the American Federation of Musicians.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

The American Federation of Musicians has for many years suffered severely because more than half of its one hundred and thirty-eight thousand members are unemployed. This unemployment is due, chiefly, to the fact that records and electrical transcriptions are being used in the transmission of musical entertainment to the public to such a degree that ninety-five per cent of all music heard today in the United States and Canada is what is commonly known as "canned music." Only five per cent is played by live musicians.

While a tremendous industry has sprung up in the use of music through the radio, and hundreds of millions of dollars is derived by these companies as a result of the use of music, very little of this return comes to the musicians because of the use of mechanical devices for the transmission of the music. The companies engaged in the manufacture of records and in the broadcasting industries find it profitable to dispense with the use of live musicians and to use these mechanical devices in connection with great advertising enterprises.

The American Federation of Musicians has for many years sought a solution to this unemployment problem. The manufacturers and broadcasting companies have shown no disposition to find ways and means whereby the unemployment created by their industry can be alleviated to a degree which would be fair and equitable.

Thus the employment and income of musicians are steadily decreasing while that of the record manufacturers and broadcasting companies is growing in staggering proportions. All the musicians have sought is a sensible and reasonable solution to the problem. All they want is that the employer assume a portion of the burden and examine the problem with a view of finding ways and means whereby the industry may go on but that the musician may live.

The American Federation of Musicians, at its convention held June, 1941, in Seattle, Washington, unanimously voted to direct its president to inform its members that they shall cease work in the manufacture of records and electrical transcriptions. This direction has been put into force and effect; and, as a result, the employers in these industries, the press and the Anti-Trust Division of the Department of Justice have "ganged up" on the American Federation of Musicians and launched one of the most vicious campaigns in labor history in order to prevent a just and equitable solution of the problem.

The Anti-Trust Division of the Department of Justice has instituted a suit for an injunction, the purpose of which is to compel the musicians to make records upon any terms and conditions fixed by the employers.

No regard is shown by the Anti-Trust Division for the injustice perpetrated upon the musicians by the record manufacturers. No regard is shown for the policy so frequently expressed by the government in recent years—that unemployment must be averted. No consideration is given to the fact that the musician in this instance is called upon to make the device which contributes to his destruction.

The attention of your Committee has been directed to the testimony given by the head of the Anti-Trust Division, before the Committee of the United States Senate, which undertook to launch an investigation of the action taken by the Convention of the American Federation of Musicians.

The Committee's attention has also been directed to the brief compiled in the suit which has been brought against the American Federation of Musicians. In that brief, there appears the following startling statement:

"In summary, we submit that the phrase 'terms or conditions of employment' assumes that there is a master who directs the work and a servant who obeys those directions. The function of the master is to determine what work he wants done, what machines he will use, what goods or services he will furnish, and the customers to whom he will sell those goods and services. Insofar as the servant demands the power to determine any of these questions he is no longer a servant. He has become the master. He is an entrepreneur in business. A union cannot, under the pretext of improving terms or conditions of employment, use organized coercion to destroy the right of the employer to conduct his business in an efficient way and to use his best judgment as to the goods he will sell, the customers to whom he will sell them, and his relationship with other independent organizations . . ."

That statement has not been extracted from an ancient text justifying the institution of slavery. Nor is it the solemn observation of one who lived in that period of history when the very word "union" was anathema, and those workers who dared to join together into unions, vicious and ignominious criminal conspirators.

That statement is made by one who presumes to speak for the United States of America. It was published only a few days ago, on October 1st, 1942. And thus, at last, is frankly disclosed the true and vicious sentiments of this great crusader.

Are there words that can and will describe the indignity and insult thus heaped upon every man and woman in this country contributing their skill and energies in this war—in this war to end the tyranny implicit in the phrase "There is a master who directs the work and a servant who obeys those directions?"

You know that the true spokesmen and interpreters of the policies of our country could not even have thought, much less printed, a concept so directly subversive to the institution of democracy. The right of free men and women not to obey the arbitrary directions of a master is the very essence of our democratic institution.

We say, with full awareness of the implications of this statement, that Mr. Arnold's comment injects a dangerous, discordant and disuniting note in the concerted efforts of our public war officials to achieve full and enthusiastic production for the war effort.

If there be any merit or substance to Mr. Arnold's comments, then the efforts of organized labor to obtain greater voice in shaping the policies and methods of war production constitute a violation of law. If there be any merit or substance to Mr. Arnold's comments, then every constructive suggestion made by any American worker, or by any American union for a proper use of the masters' machines is in violation of the law. If there be any merit or substance to Mr. Arnold's comments, then the entire effort of the War Production Board to establish joint labor management production committees is a violation of the law. If there be any merit or substance to Mr. Arnold's comments, then the workers of this country, lest they be exposed to prosecution—and persecution—by Mr. Arnold, must stand by in mute and servile silence while their so-called masters—blind to the public needs of war, and driven only by desire for profits—abuse and exploit their machines and their "servants" to their own selfish ends. Such is the dictum of Assistant Attorney General, Thurman Arnold.

Thus, the controversy is much broader and more comprehensive than an isolated dispute with the American Federation of Musicians. It involves a principle affecting the rights of all organized labor. Only by the vigorous support of the American Federation of Musicians can the establishment of this ruthless, undemocratic and unjust principle be averted.

Therefore, your Committee recommends the adoption of the Supplemental report of the Executive Council and Resolution No. 68.

(Protest Against Lea Act)

(1951, pp. 280, 551) Res. 18 called attention to the problem of the Musicians Union whereby they are subject to both Taft-Hartley and Lea Acts which mitigates against their efforts to protect their employment, and called upon the A. F. of L. to work for repeal of the Lea Act.

Narcotics Victims, Farms for (1928, p. 83) A bill providing for the establishment of farms for the treatments of narcotic addicts passed the House. This is a great step in the effort to restore these people to health. At present they are confined in prisons and jails where they can not obtain the proper care. If placed on farms they can be restored to health more quickly. Labor supported the measure.

Drug Act

(1952, pp. 44, 469) Res. 62 called for AFL support on a national basis for any movement to wipe out unlawful sale of drugs.

Illegal Traffic

(1955, p. 121) More than ever before, we urged the Congress to take a long look at the Communist worldwide illegal narcotics traffic which steadily infiltrates our shores and which constantly seeks to contaminate our armed forces around the globe.

Narcotics constitute a weapon particularly of Mainland China. Factories have been erected there and in North Korea and elsewhere to produce morphine, cocaine, heroin and other derivatives, including some new drugs not yet widely known outside that region of Asia, now in surplus quantities.

These narcotics have a two-fold purpose: 1. To gain gold and American currency with which to buy munitions and essentials. 2. To undermine the citizens of all nations which resist the sweep of communism.

We have called upon the Congress insistently to provide all money necessary for enforcement, informers fees and suppression wherever such service is needed.

The Senate Internal Security Subcommittee this year recognized the severity of the threat sufficiently that it called upon the Tokyo representative of the A. F. of L. Free Trade Union Committee to return to the United States from his post in Tokyo to explain what he knows of the problem. His expertness in this field and observations and general knowledge as the author of a number of treatises and books on the subject identify him as one completely equipped to speak with authority.

He explained that the dope trade has grown in a few years in Burma, Thailand, Malaya, Indo-China, Macao, Hong Kong and North Korea. In Japan, the Communists use the proceeds to keep their activities well-financed. He said that Japan and the United States are prime targets for the drugs.

The effects on the human system from drug addiction are manifold on mouth, nose, lungs, nervous system and digestive tract with victims dying young—at ages when their countries are depending upon them to help defend the sweep of Communism.

National Guard

(1935, p. 406) The state militia in Indiana was used in a controversy between the employees of the Columbia Enameling Company, Terra Haute, Ind., as a strikebreaking agency. The officers of the A. F. of L. are directed to notify the Governor of the State of Indiana and the Mayor of the City of Terre Haute, Indiana, of the disapproval of this convention of the use of the National Guard, special police and other officers to protect a corporation involved in a labor dispute when the right to organize, the right of free speech and free assemblage are in-involved; and for such other action as the E.C. may deem advisable.

The resolutions adopted were directed to be sent to all affiliated organizations and to the American Legion, as Governor McNutt had been a commander of that organization.

(P. 456) We call upon the E.C. to support legislation which will prevent the abusive use of state militia in industrial disputes; legislation which will confine the use of such militia solely to the maintenance of law and order, including protection of the rights and privileges of wage earners with respect to picketing, peaceful assembly, etc. We further urge the enactment of legislation which will establish impartial non-military agencies or tribunals through which use of Federal arms and equipment by militia in industrial disputes shall be immediately investigated and misuse of such equipment be severely punished.

(P. 516) It is advisable that the convention declare its convictions on the use of militia or Federal troops in connection with industrial disputes. The record of the militia in several states has justified the belief that their activities were more in the nature of strike-breaking than of preserving the public peace. Conventions of the American Federation of Labor have condemned in most vigorous language the activity of certain state militias in connection with strikes, and the massacres, the savage killing of women and children by militiamen, which have occurred. These justified condemnations of the strike-breaking activities of state militia have referred specifically to the militia of certain states.

If the citizens of our country are to retain confidence in the militia, and the Army of the United States, these military organizations when called for duty to a community where industrial disputes exist must maintain absolute neutrality in connection with the questions in dispute. They must be as much the protectors of the wage earners' rights as they are those of the employers. Their sole duty is to maintain law and order. The moment they become partisans of the employers, the moment their activities take on the function of strike-breaking, the moment they indicate that they are no longer the equal protectors of all citizens, they depart from their true function and bring not only themselves but their military associates into contempt. They destroy the confidence which should be reposed in them, and which is essential to confidence in government.

This convention declares its condemnation of any act by the militia of any state which indicates that the militia and their officers are not equally the protectors of law and order, and of the equal rights of all citizens, and that we voice our emphatic condemnation of the officers and members of any militia who, through their activities, give comfort to employers during an industrial dispute by using their armed force to overawe citizens and strikers, and in a manner to assist employers in breaking a strike.

The Executive Council is instructed to prepare legislation which will prevent any grants of money or Federal military supplies to state militias whose activities make it apparent that they are being used in a partisan manner in connection with an industrial dispute.

National Labor Relations Board

(Also see: Taft-Hartley, Allen-Bradley Legal Case)

National Labor Relations Act—(Labor and the)—(1934, pp. 74, 548) Shortly after Congress met, Senator Wagner introduced a bill providing for the adjustment of labor disputes and also providing for the creation of a National Labor Board. The Committee on Education and Labor of the Senate held hearings at which our President testified. Labor approved the measure with certain amendments.

May 26, Senator Walsh reported an entirely new bill, but no action was taken. June 16 Representative Burns introduced in the House H.R. Res. 375, which had been prepared at the instance of President Roosevelt. This was a resolution to "effectuate further the policy of the National Industrial Recovery Act" and was a substitute for the Wagner Labor Dispute Bill. It passed the House the same day and was sent to the Senate where it was passed June 19. The law authorized the President "to establish a board or boards to investigate activities of employers or employees in any controversies arising under Section 7 (a) of the National Recovery Act or which are burdening or obstructing, or threatening to burden or obstruct the free flow of interstate commerce."

Any board so established is empowered to order and conduct an election by a secret ballot of any of the employees of any employer, to determine by what person or persons or organization they desire to be represented in order to insure the right of employees to collective bargaining as defined in Section 7 (a) of the National Recovery Act. The resolution specifically provides that nothing in the law shall prevent or impede or diminish in any way the right of employees to strike or to engage in other concerted activities. The penalty of a fine of not more than $1,000 or by imprisonment for not more than one year, or both, is provided on conviction of any person who knowingly violates any rule or regulation authorized under Section 3 or who interferes with any member or agent of any board established under this resolution.

1934, under Public Resolution No. 44 which was passed by Congress on June 16, 1934, and approved by the President on June 19, 1934. As provided in the Executive Order, the National Labor Relations Board replaced the National Labor Board on July 9th.

The National Labor Board had been established by Executive Order on August 5, 1933, as a bi-partisan board under the chairmanship of Senator Robert F. Wagner. While important principles in the interpretation of Section 7(a) of the National Industrial Recovery Act were established, this Board was without power to enforce its rulings. Furthermore, although the question at issue in many cases was what agency should represent the employees in collective bargaining, this Board was without power to proceed with the necessary elections. In order that the agency which was responsible for the administration of the law might have the necessary powers to enforce decisions, to hold elections when necessary and to invalidate the company union as a recognized agency for collective bargaining, the Wagner Labor Disputes Bill was introduced by Senator Wagner. In the rush of last minute legislation, this bill was replaced by Joint Resolution No. 44.

Under the Joint Resolution, the President was authorized to establish a board or boards "authorized and directed to investigate issues, facts, practices, or activities of employers or employees in any controversies arising under Section 7 (a)—or which are burdening or obstructing, or threatening to burden or obstruct, the free flow of interstate commerce—."

Any board so established was empowered when it was in the public interest to order and conduct elections by secret ballot to determine "by what person, or persons or organization" the employees involved wished to be represented for the purpose of collective bargaining. In connection with such elections, power was given to order the production of pertinent documents or the appearance of witnesses to give testimony under oath.

Finally, after making provision for prescribing rules and regulations and specifying "a fine of not more than $1,000 or imprisonment for not more than one year, or both" for knowing violation of such rules and regulations or for interfering with or impeding the activities of any board, the Joint Resolution specifically protects the right to strike. "Nothing in this resolution shall prevent or impede or diminish in any way the right of employees to strike or engage in other concerted activities."

From the above, it is clear that the principal benefits to be anticipated from this legislation pertained to the matter of holding elections. The Board was empowered to order the production of the necessary documents or the appearance of witnesses to give testimony under oath. No additional powers were granted with respect to the enforcement of decisions where an election was not involved. No power was given to the Board to outlaw the company union as an agency for collective bargaining, but as will be seen from certain decisions of the Board which are reviewed below, the Board ruled in some cases that the company union would not be recognized as an agency for collective bargaining.

The Board was authorized:

1. To investigate issues arising under Section 7(a).
2. To order and conduct elections.
3. To hold hearings and make findings of fact with reference to alleged violations of Section 7(a).
4. To prescribe, with the approval of the President, certain rules and regulations.
5. To act as a Board of voluntary arbitration at the request of the parties to a labor dispute.

The Board was to recommend, when necessary, the establishment of regional boards or special boards over which the National Labor Relations Board would have the power of review. Furthermore, although it was stipulated that the Board "may decline to take cognizance of any labor dispute when there is another means of settlement provided," the Executive Order contained no provision that might be interpreted as denying the Board the power to review decisions or recommendations of the other boards created.

The Regional Labor Boards already in existence were continued with some changes in location and personnel. Seventeen districts were established and 24 local boards to act as agents of the National Board. Under this setup, the Regional Boards were for the most part, fact-finding agencies. While they might attempt to settle disputes or hold elections where the consent and cooperation of the employers were obtained, they were not permitted to hold elections where payrolls were refused except under instructions and direction of the National Labor Relations Board. They had no power to enforce recommendations with regard to violations of Section 7(a).

While the centralization of all powers in the National Board did involve certain delays, these were more than offset by the fact that all policies emanated directly from the Board itself. Consequently, uniformity was achieved that could not otherwise have been possible.

The operations of the National Labor Relations Board, demonstrated beyond question that where it may be advisable to establish special agencies to deal with particular situations or problems arising in certain industries, the interpretation and enforcement of the federal law that is enforced by all must be centered finally in one agency, to which all workers who primarily may be under the jurisdiction of a special agency, will have the right of appeal. Brief reference may be made to the Automobile Labor Board and to the Daily Newspaper Industry Board which were not established under Public Resolution No. 44, and which had no connection with the National Labor Relations Board, but which operated along lines which to a substantial degree were in direct conflict with the principles established by the National Labor Relations Board. Furthermore, the workers who were included under the jurisdiction of these two boards were granted no right of appeal to the National Labor Relations Board.

The Automobile Labor Board was created under the President's settlement of the threatened automobile strike. The settlement specifically provided for minority representation:

If there be more than one group, each bargaining committee shall have total membership pro rata to the number of men each member represents.

Since the National Labor Relations Board clearly enunciated the principle of majority representation in the Houde decision and strictly adhered to it thereafter, we find that workers in the automobile industry were completely denied certain fundamental rights which the National Labor Relations Board had determined to be theirs. One other outstanding issue in this connection was the matter of holding elections and the manner in which they were conducted.

The Daily Newspaper Industry Board was one of the adjustment boards which were established under the codes. The complaint of the San Francisco Call-Bulletin was filed with the San Francisco Regional Labor Board on October 5, 1934, and a hearing on the record was held before the National Labor Relations Board on November 13. A decision was made in favor of the complainant. The employer contended that the Board did not have jurisdiction and Mr. Richberg in his subsequent brief, contended that the stipulation that the Board "may decline to take cognizance" of situations arising where there is another means of settlement meant "shall" decline to take cognizance. To this the Board replied: "It is unnecessary to torture the meaning of plain language." This problem of jurisdiction was finally ended by President Roosevelt's letter to the Labor Board on January 22, in which he requested that the National Labor Relations Board refuse to entertain a complaint arising in an industry where the code provides machinery for settlement.

This decision applied to eighty-five industries (February 12, 1935) whose codes provided for Industrial Relations Boards to adjust labor complaints or disputes, or both. The more important of the earlier decisions issued by the National Labor Relations Board established certain fundamental principles which had been enunciated by the National Labor Board. These interpretations of Section 7(a) may be briefly summarized as follows:

1. The right of employees to bargain collectively imposes a corresponding duty upon employers. The employer is obligated by law to negotiate in good faith.

2. The representatives selected by the majority of the employees within a bargaining unit are the sole agency for collective bargaining for that unit.

3. The employees may select any person, persons or organization to represent them, and such representatives are in no way restricted to fellow employees.

4. The reduction to writing of agreements negotiated accords with sound business policy.

The right of majority representation and the obligation imposed upon employers to enter into negotiations in good faith were clearly set forth in the case of the Houde Engineering Corporation. In the decision, dated August 30th, the position of the Board on these two points was clearly set forth in the following language:

"This Board, therefore, stands upon the majority rule. And it does so the more willingly because the rule is in accord with the American traditions of political democracy, which empower representatives elected by the majority of the voters to speak for all the people.

"When a person, committee or organization has been designated by the majority of employees in a plant or other appropriate unit for collective bargaining, it is the right of the representatives so designated to be treated by the employer as the exclusive collective bargaining agency for all employees in the unit, and the employer's duty to make every reasonable effort, when requested, to arrive with this representative at a collective agreement covering terms of employment of all such employees."

In this connection it is of interest to note that the principle of majority rule under Section 7(a) of the National Recovery Act, was first established by the Petroleum Labor Policy Board.

In the Johnson Bronze Company case, the Board stated that the company should meet with the union committee, regardless of whether or not non-employees are on the committee.

The status of the signed agreement was established in the National Aniline and Chemical Company case when the Board found that "an insistence by an employer that he will go no further than to enter into an oral agreement may be evidence, in the light of other circumstances in the case, of a denial of the right of collective bargaining."

One of the most significant decisions by the Board in any case involving company unions was made on September 27, 1934, in the case of Ely-Walker Dry Goods Company of St. Louis. This decision provided in substance that the company should withdraw all financial support from the League, should cease from soliciting or suggesting membership in the League, and should withdraw from the League any recognition as a collective bargaining agency. Wholesale House Workers Union Local 18316 which represented a conceded majority of the employees in the departments concerned was to be recognized as the exclusive collective bargaining agency for the employees in those departments, and the company was to negotiate in good faith with the union and make every reasonable effort to arrive at a collective agreement.

Two important forms of discrimination were recognized in the cases of the Foster Knitting Company, Inc., and the Globe Gabbe Corporation, respectively. In the first of these, the Board found that the company in denying to several employees reinstatement because of their union affiliations and activities, upon the termination of a temporary plant shut-down, had in effect discharged these employees. In the latter case, it was found that the removal of a plant from one location to another would not be found a sufficient reason for any change in relations already established with the union where former employees were also willing to remove to the new location.

The position of the Board in seeking to protect the interests of employees who had been discharged for union activity is illustrated by the case of the U. S. Smelting, Refining and Mining Company. The company expressed its readiness to reinstate the men who had been discharged, but offered to two of them jobs with rates of pay considerably lower than what they had been receiving. The Board ordered that they be offered reinstatement immediately in their former positions with the same rights as previously enjoyed.

While the definite policy of payment in full for all time lost through discriminatory discharge was never established, back wages to the date of the Regional Board decision were ordered in the case of the Brunswick Laundry, and this principle was followed in many subsequent cases.

One of the last decisions which was of significance, so far as the establishment of principles was concerned, was in the case of the Macauley Company where it was determined that no jurisdiction could be taken over a situation which did not arise under the President's Reemployment Agreement or under an industry code.

During the first six months of operation by the National Labor Relations Board, one hundred elections were conducted by Regional Boards with the consent of the employers. An analysis of the results shows that 59 percent of the valid votes were cast for trade unions and 34.9 percent were for company unions or employee-representation plans. After these elections, recognition and collective bargaining were achieved in half of the units involved and written agreements were reported in about 40 percent of the units.

Under Public Resolution No. 44, the following special boards were established in addition to the National Labor Relations Board:

1. The National Longshoremen's Labor Board
2. The National Steel Labor Relations Board
3. The Textile Labor Relations Board

The National Longshoremen's Labor Board was created by Executive Order on June 26, 1934, in connection with the wide-spread strike of longshoremen then in progress on the Pacific Coast. Pursuant to the agreement of August 7, 1934, between the parties, the Board on October 12, 1934, handed down its decision between the International Longshoremen's Association and the Waterfront Employers of Seattle, Portland, and San Francisco, and the Marine Service Bureau of Los Angeles. The basic features of the award were:

1. The National Longshoremen's Labor Board
2. The National Steel Labor Relations Board
3. The Textile Labor Relations Board

The National Longshoremen's Labor Board was created by Executive Order on June 26, 1934, in connection with the wide-spread strike of longshoremen then in progress on the Pacific Coast. Pursuant to the agreement of August 7, 1934, between the parties, the Board on October 12, 1934, handed down its decision between the International Longshoremen's Association and the Waterfront Employers of Seattle, Portland, and San Francisco, and the Marine Service Bureau of Los Angeles. The basic features of the award were:

(a) An increase in the basic wage rate from 85 cents to 95 cents per hour.

(b) A 6-hour day and a 30-hour week

(c) Provision for the hiring of all longshoremen through halls maintained and operated jointly by the International Longshoremen's Association and the respective employers.

The proposals of the International Longshoremen's Association had been:

(a) An increase in the basic wage from 85 cents to $1.

(b) Limitation of hours of work to 6 per day, 30 hours per week.

(c) Hiring and dispatching through the International Longshoremen's Association halls, under regulation established by a joint committee. On October 17, 1934, decisions were handed down involving certain members of the International Longshoremen's Association engaged as grain handlers in Portland, Vancouver and Seattle and certain members engaged as dock and terminal workers in Portland, Oregon. By order of the President, the Board ceased to exist on March 11, 1935.

The National Steel Labor Relations Board was created by Executive Order on June 28, 1934, with powers similar to those of the National Labor Relations Board but with jurisdiction limited to the iron and steel industry. The principal functions of the Board, therefore, were:

(a) To investigate issues arising under Section 7(a).

(b) To promote the settlement of controversies by mediation and conciliation.

(c) To serve as a board of voluntary arbitration.

(d) To exercise all the powers provided in said Public Resolution No. 44, 73rd Congress, for a board established under said resolution.

(e) To hold elections, applying the majority-rule principle.

Under the Steel Labor Relations Board, certain differences were adjusted; reinstatement was required where discriminatory discharges were found and elections were ordered in many cases to determine by what person, persons, or organization the employees concerned wished to be represented for the purpose of collective bargaining. As sufficient power was not granted to the Board, it was unable to enforce decisions. In many instances, elections which had been ordered were prevented by court action. Although the Board was authorized to continue in a mediatory capacity after the invalidation of the NRA by the Supreme Court, operations were actually terminated by the Schechter decision.

The Textile Labor Relations Board was created on September 26, 1934. The establishment of the Textile Labor Relations Board and of the special boards to study the actual operation of the stretch-out were recommended in the report of ex-Governor Winant to the President. On September 5, 1934, a Board of Inquiry under the chairmanship of John S. Winant had been appointed by the President to assist in reaching a settlement of the textile strike.

The Board was authorized to inquire into the complaints and problems involved; to consider ways and means of meeting them; and upon the request of the parties, to act, or to select persons who should act, as a board of voluntary arbitration. The report of this Board of Inquiry was released on September 20th. With respect to the ability of the industry to carry higher payroll costs and with respect to the enforcement of certain code provisions, special studies were recommended by the Federal Trade Commission and by the United States Department of Labor. It was further recommended that special committees be created to supervise the use of the stretch-out and to recommend a permanent plan for the control of the stretch-out.

While these recommendations were of real significance, it may be said that the recommendations for a Textile Labor Relations Board "for the more adequate protection of Labor's rights under the collective bargaining and other labor provisions of the code" was the most significant feature in the recommendations of the Board.

After a thorough analysis of the agencies which had been established in connection with code administration, the Board found "that the whole system of administering the labor provisions of the code has completely lost the confidence of Labor in this industry, and is for that reason alone, impossible of functioning satisfactorily in the future." It should be noted that the Board of Inquiry, in recommending that a special board be established for the Textile Industry, took cognizance of the fact that cases arising out of Section 7(a) may be appealed to the National Labor Relations Board: "By this means harmony of principle in dealing with Section 7(a) cases is assured."

In its creation, the Textile Labor Relations Board had the same general functions in the textile industry as did the National Steel Labor Relations Board in the iron and steel industry. The personnel of the two boards was the same. The foremost function of this Board, however, was to "take appropriate action in any case in which it is alleged that there has been discrimination in taking men back to work after the textile strike." The major portion of the activities of the Board were devoted to this problem. In addition to recommending the reinstatement of strikers in many cases which were submitted to the Board, other cases were handled which concerned violations of Section 7(a) and some elections were ordered.

The action which was taken by the Board in two instances warrants particular notice. In the case of Standard-Koosa-Thatcher Company, the alleged company union, the Good Will Adjustment Club, was certified by the Textile Labor Relations Board as the representative of the employees for the purpose of collective bargaining. In the case of the Ninety-six Cotton Mill which involved certain strikers who had not been reinstated after the textile strike, the Board ruled that "The complainants' strike was unsuccessful and for that reason, it is not incumbent upon the employer to reinstate the strikers in their former positions." This ruling was in direct contradiction with the request of the Winant Board that the employers in the industry "take back the workers now on strike without discrimination."

As was the case with the National Steel Labor Relations Board, the National Textile Labor Relations Board for all practical purposes was terminated with the invalidation of the NRA, although it was authorized to continue in a mediatory capacity.

Brief consideration of principles established by the Board and of the results obtained through those elections which were held indicates the tremendous potentialities of such an agency, but the total inability of the Board to enforce compliance with rulings which were made shows most conclusively that under Public Resolution No. 44, the Board was not vested with adequate power.

Chairman Biddle in his appearance before the Senate Committee on Education and Labor during hearings on the Wagner Bill presented figures illustrating the scope of the Board's achievement. Of approximately 5309 cases brought before the regional labor boards, between July 1, 1934, and March 1, 1935, approximately 3950 were disposed of. Approximately 1,500,000 workers were involved. On the other hand, where decisions were issued by the National Labor Relations Board finding violations, restitution in accordance with the decision was made in only 34 out of 86 cases. While 33 of these cases were referred to the Department of Justice, not one suit had been brought at the time of Chairman Biddle's statement.

With regard to elections, it is important to note that while many elections were held with the consent of employers, Chairman Biddle reported that in the case of each of the six elections ordered by the Board, the employer filed a petition with the Circuit Court of Appeals to review the Board's order in accordance with the provisions in Public Resolution No. 44.

The next chapter in our history of organization and collective bargaining under the protection of the federal government will be based on our experience under the National Labor Relations Act which became law on July 5, 1935.

The Board is empowered to prevent any of the unfair labor practices listed below when they "affect" interstate commerce. It is an unfair labor practice for an employer to:

1. To interfere with, restrain, or coerce employees in self-organization and collective bargaining.

2. To dominate or interfere with the formation or administration of any labor organization or contribute financial or other support to it.

3. To discriminate with regard to hire or tenure of employment or any term or condition of employment, to encourage or discourage membership in any labor organization.

4. To discharge or discriminate against any employee for filing charges or giving testimony under the Act.

5. To refuse to bargain collectively with the representatives of the employees.

Certain of the more important principles established by the National Labor Relations Board have been written into the new law. The right of majority representation is specifically included and employers have the affirmative duty to bargain collectively with the duly chosen representatives of their employees. The company union is outlawed and the union shop is specifically legalized. The provisions in the Act which pertain to these points should go far toward clarifying certain fundamental issues which have been recognized since the enactment of the National Industrial Recovery Act and Section 7(a). Of greater importance, however, than the above, are the new powers with which the Board has been vested:

1. The power to subpoena witnesses and any evidence "that relates to any matter under investigation or in question";

2. The power to issue cease and desist orders enforceable in the courts.

Under the National Labor Relations Act, we have every reason to believe that new goals in the field of labor relations will be achieved. The one outstanding question in connection with this legislation is to what extent will the National Labor Relations Board be permitted to protect the right to organize and bargain collectively under the commerce clause of the Constitution.

(1935, p. 133) The Labor Disputes Bill passed both Houses of Congress, was approved by the President and became a law July 5, 1935. Our President and other friends of the measure appeared before the Education and Labor Committee of the Senate and the Labor Committee of the House and explained the great benefits that would come from this legislation. They pointed out that there could be no peace in industry unless collective bargaining machinery was set up so that negotiations between employers and employees could be carried on in a practical and constructive way.

When Section 7-a of the National Recovery Act became a law through its incorporation in industrial codes of fair competition the membership of the A. F. of L. believed a policy had been adopted that would prevent strikes and minimize labor disputes. But this was not to be. Employers refused to obey the law. They employed high-priced lawyers to show them how to circumvent the law.

Discrimination was the order of the day. Employees were discharged. enormous sums were used to establish company unions and a legal fight was made to protect said company unions. Courts were appealed to to prevent or delay the holding of elections to determine who should bargain collectively with the employer. In calling upon the workers to obey the laws great corporations expended large sums in trying to break the law.

Because of the action of the employers it was necessary to secure the passage of legislation that would make it possible to have real collective bargaining. To that end the Labor Disputes Bill was introduced.

No bill ever introduced in Congress was so misrepresented. In the south a telegraph and telephone company solicited contributions from its employees to be used in defeating the measure. Some employers coerced their employees into signing petitions protesting against the legislation. One corporation started a chain letter urging recipients immediately to wire their respective Congressmen the strongest possible protest against the bill and also to have twenty-five or more of their employees to do the same. Those who received the chain letters were requested to write five business friends to also send such messages to Congressmen and also have their employees do likewise. Great importance was given this campaign as an appeal was made to each recipient of the letter "not to break the chain."

When the bill was up in the Senate efforts were made to insert amendments that would practically kill the intent of the proposed law. These, however, were defeated and the bill was passed by the Senate May 16 by a vote of 63 to 12.

The opposition to the bill in the House became greater and greater. When the bill was first introduced in Congress and hearings were held, President Green called upon the officials and members of all labor organizations to write or wire their respective Congressmen urging them to vote for the bill. However, the great strength of the opposition was directed toward the House organization in its last efforts to defeat the bill. The Rules Committee was asked by friends of the bill for a rule providing for the consideration of the measure. After some delay caused by continued opposition a rule was finally granted. The bill passed the House June 19 without a record vote.

Convincing evidence was submitted in an effort to prove that the National Labor Relations Act would be of benefit to the people of the United States. All that Labor asked was to be placed in a position of equality with employers in bargaining collectively.

The intent of the law was so important that the President of the United States placed it in his "must" list for passage by Congress.

Labor has always opposed "company unions." These "unions" are formed by employers for the purpose of controlling the economic power of the workers. They are organized by the employers for their own special benefit. The law is designed to protect employees against being compelled to join company unions for it prohibits certain unfair labor practices. Among them are:

1. Interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of their rights of self-organization and collective bargaining.
2. Dominating or interfering with the formation or administration of any labor organization, or contributing financial or other support to it.
3. Discriminating in regard to hire or tenure of employment or any term or condition of employment to discourage membership in any labor organization, but an employer is not precluded from entering into an agreement with a union of the appropriate craft or unit of employees, making union membership a condition of employment.
4. Discharging or otherwise discriminating against an employee or filing charges or giving testimony under this Act.
5. Refusing to bargain collectively with the representatives of the employees.

Nothing in this Act shall be construed so as to interfere with, impede or diminish in any way the right to strike.

(1936, pp. 153, 435) The National Labor Relations Board began its work on August 27, 1935, the date on which the appointment of the three board members by the President became effective. Since that time, the board has been the agency empowered to protect the right of workers to organize and bargain collectively under the mandate of the law.

With what degree of success has the board achieved this purpose during the past year? An appraisal of the board's activities may be based on the number of cases handled by the board itself and its regional officers during that period. By October 1, 1936, the board's record covered 1,405 cases involving 291,408 workers. Of these, 369 cases were closed by agreement of the parties; 444 were closed by dismissal or withdrawal; and 78 cases were closed for such reasons as compliance with decisions, failure to find violation, refusal to assume jurisdiction, or by transfer to some other agency.

In addition, the board settled 103 strike cases out of a total of 175 handled. It averted 78 threatened strikes and held 57 elections.

It will be noted that almost half of the cases closed were closed by agreement of the parties and, therefore, clearly represented a satisfactory settlement of the dispute. Included in the number of cases closed by dismissal or withdrawal are many in which charges were originally filed with the board, but under the threat of the board's action, the employers were willing to reach an agreement "out of court."

On October 1, 1936, there were 514 cases still pending final determination. This number included many cases in which decisions had been rendered but full compliance not obtained.

This record of cases gives undisputable evidence of the board's ability to prevent unfair labor practices outlawed by the Act. While many of the cases presented to the board did not come for final determination either before the board or the courts, most of these cases were settled to the satisfaction of the workers involved because of the mere existence of the statute and the administrative machinery designed to enforce it.

The first of the unfair labor practices outlawed by the Act is for an employer to interfere with, restrain or coerce employees in the exercise of their rights. The cases heard and decided by the board have revealed important factual information on such practices chiefly because of the board's power to subpoena witnesses and records.

It was shown, for example, that labor espionage was an important instrument used by employers for union-breaking. Much of the factual material brought to light in the board's hearings in this connection served later as a basis for further investigations by the LaFollette Subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Education and Labor. The cases of the Friedman-Harry Marks Clothing Company and the Pennsylvania Greyhound Lines, Inc., showed that employers and officials of corporations were not adverse to spying on unions personally. In the Virginia and Maryland Coach Company case, the vice-president of the bus company went so far as to attend a union meeting disguised by a bus operator's cap. In other cases, it was shown to be a common practice to use regular employees for spy work (Protective Motor Service Company and Consumers Research Inc.). Refusal by the workers to accept invitations to spy on their fellows was also demonstrated in such cases as that of the Fruehauf Trailer Company and Foster Brothers Manufacturing Company, Inc. The use of the nationally known detective agencies by employers was revealed in detail in the notorious Freuhauf case and the cases of the Mackay Radio and Telegraph Company, the Brown Shoe Company and others.

The experience of the board has shown that discrimination against union members and leaders, as well as threats of such discrimination, still remain the most common form of interference with union activity. This is generally done together with deliberate propaganda which not only poisons the minds of the workers against unions but also indicates to them that employers are prepared to make their hostility to unions effective by dismissal.

Among the many varieties of threats is the threat to move the plant or go out of business if the union succeeds in organizing the employees (National Casket Company, Brown Shoe Company, etc.) Another form of propaganda consists in attempts to convince employees that unions and union organizers are not interested in the welfare of the workers but serve ulterior purposes. Employers' denunciations of unions as rackets were recorded in the cases of the Atlas Bag and Burlap Company, the Wheeling Steel Corporation, and Jones and Laughlin Steel Company. Sometimes such statements are more specific and homely; if a worker joins the union he would "be down here stopping bullets" while the union organizer would be "sitting in the hotel smoking a cigar" (Greensboro Lumber Company).

In some instances, an attempt is made to sap the strength of unions by foisting individual agreements on some of the workers (Atlas Bag & Burlap Company). In some situations, the same purpose is achieved by soliciting the striker under threat to return to work individually.

The board has also held that activities of employers which have the effect of injuring the morale of union members constitute interference, restraint and coercion. An example of this was shown in the Brown Shoe Company case where a seniority agreement with the company was the union's outstanding achievement in collective bargaining. This agreement was arbitrarily abrogated by the company without notice at a time when the members of the union needed its protection most. Such action the board has found unlawful.

Finally, affiliation with an outside union is often discouraged by refusal of employers to deal with representatives who are not in their employ. In the Oregon Worsted Company case, the board held that the "insistence upon dividing the committee into employee and non-employee groups constituted an arbitrary and flagrant violation of the employee's right to self-organization. It is not for the employer to dictate the form of representation the employees shall have."

In its decisions, the board struck a heavy blow to company unions sponsored by employers to prevent self-organization of the workers. In the Pennsylvania Greyhound Lines, Inc., decision, the company was not only ordered to cease and desist from dominating and contributing financial support to the company union, but also to withdraw all recognition from the company union as representative of their employees. Similar action was taken in the Wheeling Steel Corporation decision where the company was ordered to cease and desist from encouraging membership in or recognizing the departmental councils (which was a form of company union in this instance) or from discouraging membership in the lodges of the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel and Tin Workers.

Since the legality of the union shop was established under the Act, it was unnecessary for the board to substantiate the point by any of its decisions. The board made an important ruling, however, in upholding the legality of a strike for a union shop under federal jurisdiction. This issue was squarely met in its decision in the Alaska Juneau Gold Mining Company case in which the board ruled that "a strike for a closed shop is not illegal; employees striking for such an end are as fully entitled to the benefits of the Act as are all other striking employees."

Inasmuch as the Alaska Juneau case originated in federal territory, this may be interpreted as the position of the board in a territory subject to direct federal jurisdiction. Had the strike originated in any of the states, the situation would have been materially different because the question of the legality of the union shop would then be determined by the state laws prevailing in a given locality. Legality of a strike for a union shop is a matter for judicial determination by the state courts governed by state laws. This is why in those states where union shops have been declared illegal and so held by the state courts, the board recognized the fact in the decisions handed down in cases originating in such states.

Another unfair labor practice prohibited by the Act is the refusal by employers to bargain collectively with the duly selected representatives of their employees. The board has rendered a series of important decisions upholding this fundamental right of workers. Following the precedent laid by the old National Labor Relations Board in the Houde case, the board ruled that collective bargaining must constitute negotiations in good faith leading toward an agreement. A mere discussion of proposals, the board held, does not constitute such bargaining (Atlantic Refining Company).

. . . An important phase of the board's work was the exercise of its power to determine representation in collective bargaining under the principle of majority rule. The first controversies concerning representation before the board were adjusted by elections held under agreements in which both parties had agreed in advance to abide by the results. The first case in which the board's power to determine "the unit appropriate for collective bargaining" was invoked was that of the Wayne Knitting Mills of Fort Wayne, Indiana. In the election held on December 7, 1935, the American Federation of Hosiery Workers, Branch No. 2, polled five hundred and sixteen votes out of nine hundred and sixty ballots cast. This majority vote qualified the Hosiery Workers Union as the exclusive representative for collective bargaining.

In many cases, however, the board was prevented by litigation from holding elections. On November 13, 1935, the hearing in the case of the Majestic Flour Mills, Aurora, Missouri, and Federal Labor Union No. 20028 was held up by injunction. This marked the beginning of a long list of cases in what clearly appeared to be a carefully planned campaign to prevent the board from exercising its functions. By August of this year, seventy-nine injunction cases against the board had been filed in thirty-one district courts.

While the question of the constitutionality of the Act has been raised by the respondent companies in every instance of court litigation, it is significant that no circuit court of appeals has found the Act unconstitutional. There is no doubt that the Supreme Court will rule on the constitutionality of the Act in adjudicating the cases now before it.

Much confusion concerning the validity of the Act has been created by employers who insisted on representing the measure as regulating commerce. Actually, however, the purpose of the Act is to eliminate the use of certain substantial obstructions to the free flow of commerce and to eliminate these obstructions when they occur. The Supreme Court will be certain to dispel all doubt as to the Act's validity, if it regards the law not as an attempt to regulate commerce but, as stated in the board's petition for a rehearing of the Jones & Laughlin case, as a "regulation designed to protect commerce and not to regulate the details of production."

(1937, pp. 126, 507) On April 12, 1937, almost two years after the enactment of the National Labor Relations Act, the U.S. Supreme Court upheld its constitutionality in five cases, the facts of each case arising out of various interpretations of the Act by the board as applied to transportation, communication and manufacturing. The effect of these decisions was to affirm the broad powers of the National Labor Relations Board as declared by Congress and to permit the board to begin for the first time an effective administration of the Act.

The board in theory began functioning on August 27, 1935, the date on which the three original members thereon were appointed; but actually it was some months after the appointment of the board that it became effectively organized and staffed to handle the volume of cases brought before it. Its first case was decided on December 7, 1935, and that case is an excellent example of the hamstringing of the board by the courts during its early days. That case, the Greyhound case, was argued in the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit in December, 1935, upon an application of the board for enforcement of its order directing the respondent to reinstate certain employees discharged for membership in the union and to dissolve a company union; and until the time of the decisions of the Supreme Court above mentioned, the Circuit Court of Appeals had not decided the case. It was only decided on June 15, 1937.

Prior to the decisions of the Supreme Court affirming the validity of the Act the board had been very active in attempting to carry out its functions; 2,311 cases were handled by the board during the 18 months after it began active operations in the fall of 1935 until April 1, 1937, the 2,311 cases involving 796,118 workers. Thereafter cases began coming to the board in greater volume. By May 1, 1937, 2,788 cases had been noticed by the board, 3,852 cases by June 1, 1937, and 6,479 cases by August 1, these 6,479 cases involving more than 1,944,000 workers; 3,824 of these cases have been closed.

During July 1,345 new cases arose, involving 309,666 workers, as opposed to 1,284 new cases during the previous month, involving 369,515 workers.

(P. 429) The E.C. is directed to have the following amendment to the National Labor Relations Act introduced in Congress and use every legitimate means for its enactment:

"Employees shall have the right to organize and bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing. The majority of any craft or class of employees shall have the right to determine who shall be the representatives of the craft or class for the purpose of this Act."

(P. 484) The A. F. of L., over a period of years, has endeavored to promote legislation having the twofold purpose of guaranteeing Labor's right to organize, and the legalization of the privilege of those who labor to affiliate with labor organizations of their own free will, uninterfered with by employers or federal, state or municipal government.

The A. F. of L. has succeeded in establishing trade unionism as an institution which respects the public laws, and consistently observes the integrity of all contracts which are entered into.

The A. F. of L., in the effort to carry out its purpose to secure full protection to the wage earner's right to voluntary association for lawful purposes, was instrumental in the passage of the National Labor Relations Act, approved July 5, 1935. It endorsed, and gave its assistance to the enactment of the measure by Congress, only after a definite understanding and positive assurance had been secured by its sponsor in the Senate and in the House that the proper administration of the Act would protect the right of legitimate labor organizations to negotiate and enter into agreements with employers, these agreements being negotiated by representatives freely selected by trade unions, and without interference from any outside source in their selection.

The National Labor Relations Act declares the policy of the United States to protect:

The exercise by workers of full freedom of association, self-organization, and designation of representatives of their own choosing for the purpose of negotiating the terms and conditions of their employment or other mutual aid and protection.

When the Act was under consideration we were assured by the sponsors of this legislation in the Senate and the House, that Section 9 (a) and (b), if properly administered, would and could not interfere with the activities of the trade union movement as constituted, or violate, or terminate agreements entered into by authorized representatives of Labor; or in any manner interfere in the determining of the form or character of the labor movement.

We were further assured that should any interpretation be placed upon the Act which worked to the detriment of the American trade union movement as represented by the A. F. of L., that the sponsors would immediately introduce an amendment to correct the misinterpretation which had been made.

We were further assured that under no circumstances could the application and administration of the Act in any manner, directly or indirectly, give to the National Labor Relations Board, or any of its agencies, power or authority to in any manner enter the field of conciliation, mediation and negotiation for the purpose of adjusting industrial disputes.

A careful reading of the Act makes it evident that no such authority or field of jurisdiction was given to the board.

For these and other reasons the A. F. of L. instructs the E.C. to promptly assemble all of the facts and the evidence in proof of the maladministration of the National Labor Relations Act, so that the rights of employees, together with the basic rights of trade unions, may be protected, and so that Congress may be requested to amend this Act so as to prevent hereafter the usurped authority now being exercised by the board and its agencies.

Furthermore the president and the E.C. are instructed and authorized to seek immediate correction of the deplorable, disruptive and destructive condition above referred to, by petitioning the President of the United States for prompt and adequate relief.

(1938, pp. 133, 344) On May 15, 1935, Senator Robert F. Wagner arose in the Senate and said of the National Labor Relations Act:

Anyone familiar with these laws will recognize at once that there is nothing in the pending bill which places the stamp of governmental favor upon any particular type of union.

Had the National Labor Relations Board construed and administered the Act in the spirit and on the basis of the foregoing declaration, we would not now have occasion to submit the following report. Instead of a report of justified criticism we would be submitting a report of unqualified approval of the board and its administration.

It is with deep regret that frankness impels us to report to you that the National Labor Relations Board has administered the Act contrary to its letter, spirit and intent, with manifest bias and prejudice against the A. F. of L. and in favor of dual and rival organizations. Our resentment has been arousing and your officers have publicly and officially in most vigorous terms condemned this unholy alliance between a government agency exercising quasi-judicial jurisdiction and the C.I.O.

Increasing importance which attaches to the actions of the National Labor Relations Board is evidenced by the fact that in the three years of its existence the board has handled 16,500 cases involving almost 4,000,000 workers. As the work of the board grew so did its tendency to go beyond the direct Congressional mandate and gradually to apply its decisions not to the questions of Labor's basic rights which the Wagner Act had been designed to protect, but to the problems of form and structure of the labor movement itself.

That a three-man board, composed of men with no direct labor experience should undertake to shape the form and structure of our labor movement through decisions clothed with judicial authority, aroused among our unions a growing feeling of apprehension and indignation. Aware of its solemn responsibility to preserve and perpetuate the basic democratic principle of Labor's self-determination and self-government, the entire membership of the A. F. of L. has united in its protest against this unwelcome intervention in Labor's internal problems by a government bureau. The A. F. of L. is aware that problems which have emerged and developed over a period of fifty or sixty years—problems with which Labor has struggled for several generations—cannot and should not be settled by snap judgments of outsiders no matter how well-intentioned or learned they may be.

It is with this invasion of Labor's democratic sovereignty that we have found fault and not with the principles and purposes which the Act embodies and which will always have our unyielding support.

The Board has exceeded its public purpose and has vitiated the procedure delineated in the Act in three respects:

First, in a large number of instances its agents have shown gross favoritism and bias in the handling of cases, furthering the objectives of one union against another and favoring one form of labor organization.

Second, by administrative fiat the board has set aside legally valid and binding contracts entered into in good faith by bona fide unions and employers.

Third, through the arbitrary determination of appropriate units in cases dealing with the question concerning representation, the board has sought to impose upon workers regardless of their wishes the type of organization it favored.

Before the U.S. Supreme Court on April 12, 1937, handed down the five epoch-making decisions, upholding the constitutionality of the National Labor Relations Act, the administration of the law by the National Labor Relations Board was on the whole, just and proper. Such errors as were committed, were the natural result of a newly constituted government agency administering a newly created law. Since the decisions of the Supreme Court of April 12, 1937, the board has abandoned whatever restraint it imposed upon itself prior to this date and has brazenly and by official acts declared itself as a proponent of the C.I.O. fostering its interests and by the effect of its decrees recruited membership for the C.I.O.

In the short period of time from April 12, 1937, to the date of the holding of the Denver Convention, the tendency on the part of some members of the board to pervert the spirit and intent of the law became apparent. The A. F. of L., desiring to maintain the substantial benefits of the Act and desiring to accord the board the benefit of whatever doubt may have existed as to its apparent unfair attitude toward the A. F. of L., abstained from any official disapproval of the board in the report of the E.C. to the Denver Convention. The E.C. however directed attention to the fact that the board was overstepping the bounds of its proper functions and the E.C. urged caution, as disclosed by the following statement in the report:

"The National Labor Relations Board is now taking jurisdiction under the decisions of the Supreme Court over a great portion of the vast industries of America. It possesses more power than does any other governmental board now in existence. The board's task is important enough if it adheres to the original intention of the Act of preventing employers from interfering with employees in joining unions. This work could well occupy the entire time of the board and its staff. The board, however, is going beyond this function and letting itself be drawn into conflicts between unions when such entry by the board is entirely improper and we believe unlawful. . . . The administration of the Act by the board is becoming more and more important. Whether or not it will recognize the validity of union contracts where a question of representation has been raised, whether or not it will continue its hands-off policy with respect to intervention during a strike and whether or not it can continue to avoid the jurisdictional dispute between the Federation and the C.I.O. in the determination of units appropriate for collective bargaining remains to be seen. It is of the utmost importance to organized labor that the administration of the Act be in competent and conscientious and impartial hands."

Our suggestions for caution have gone unheeded. The administration of the Act has not been in competent and impartial hands. On the contrary, flagrant bias and prejudice exists on the part of the members of the board as is evidenced by decisions which attempt to undermine and destroy A. F. of L. unions.

A study of numerous cases discloses the following:

1—The board has thwarted the intent of Congress in determining what shall constitute an appropriate unit for the purpose of collective bargaining.

2—The board has by its decisions determined that craft unions or other labor unions of long standing and affiliated with the A. F. of L. have no right to free choice and self-organization. The board has assumed the power to make the determination of the proper unit contrary to the desires and wishes of craft groups or other recognized constituted unions affiliated with the A. F. of L.

3—The assumption of power by the board to disregard existing units of long standing and to substitute its own ideas and judgment of what shall constitute the proper unit has caused disintegration and in some cases virtual disestablishment of A. F. of L. unions.

4—The pronouncements of the board respecting the proper unit disclose the determination on the part of the board to comply with the contentions and demands of the C.I.O. and to favor C.I.O. unions in an effort to destroy A. F. of L. unions.

5—Great difficulty is experienced by many A. F. of L. unions which are strong and clearly have a majority in a plant in getting the board to order an election, when requests therefor are made by American Federation of Labor unions. By comparison, C.I.O. unions have secured rapid compliance with similar requests on their part.

6—A. F. of L. unions have experienced great difficulty in obtaining decisions by the board after elections have been held, and after hearings have been had. Many decisions have been held up for many months and in some cases for the purpose of affording C.I.O. unions an advantage through the delay.

7—Lawyers and personnel of the regional labor boards have personal relationships with C.I.O. officials and have frequently advised and guided them in pending controversies with A.F. of L. unions.

8—The National Labor Relations Board has in many cases built up a straw-man by the use of the word "favoritism" by the employer, as a result of which, it has violated the sanctity of contractual obligations between employers and A. F. of L. unions, has invalidated contracts and virtually disestablished existing A. F. of L. unions.

9—The board has instituted investigations and hearings at the request of small minorities of C.I.O. members for the purpose of assisting the C.I.O.

in disrupting existing relations between the employers and A. F. of L. unions.

Space will not permit a detailed recital of the number of cases and instances establishing the foregoing points. However, a few key cases are herein referred to.

First and foremost is the case of the Allis Chalmers Company, wherein board member Edwin Smith dissented. He held that maintenance electricians and firemen and oilers affiliated with the A. F. of L. have not the right to vote as separate units and that the majority in these groups should be denied the right to select their bargaining agent. He held that all workers should be fused into one unit and an industrial organization set up. In discussing the majority opinion wherein the craft groups were accorded the right to select their bargaining agent he said: "By this pseudo-democratic method, a determination of the greatest consequence to the other employees in the plant is left in the hands of groups known to be hostile to industrial organization." Board members, Chairman Madden and Donald Wakefield Smith wrote the majority opinion which was contrary to the contentions of Board member Edwin Smith. Since then, however, Board member Edwin Smith has won over Board member Donald Wakefield Smith and these two wrote that portion of the opinion in the Serrick Corporation case dated July 27, 1938.

. . . Furthermore, for the purposes of this Act, and under the circumstances of the present case, the division of the respondent's employees by the International Association of Machinists into two locals for organizational purposes must be deemed artificial. Since the I. A. of M. sought to organize the tool room employees separately and at approximately the same time, solicited and carried on organizational activity among production employees and continued to do so up to the time of the hearing, in fact, its methods of organization must be regarded as an attempt to enroll all the respondent's production employees in direct competition with the United Automobile Workers, which was organizing on an industrial basis. Therefore, the I. A. of M. cannot be heard to maintain that the craft unit is appropriate.

The foregoing decision of Board members Edwin S. Smith and Donald Wakefield Smith elicited the following dissenting opinion from Chairman Madden:

"I concur with the decision and in all of the opinion except that part beginning with the words 'Furthermore, for the purposes of the act,' and ending with the words 'that the craft unit is appropriate.' I think that this language is unnecessary for the decision of this case and that therefore no opinion should be expressed upon this subject."

From the foregoing it will be seen that the insidious attempt to destroy A. F. of L. unions through the perversion of the unit provision in the National Labor Relations Act is definitely on its way to accomplishment by the Board unless strong and determined measures are taken by the A. F. of L. to prevent it.

Precedent-making decisions have been handed down in which contracts between employers and A. F. of L. unions have been invalidated. This has been accomplished by the Board by adopting a rule termed "favoritism" by the employer for the A. F. of L. unions in the matter of organization. The Board has accomplished this by rulings in which it ascribed to employers acts of "favoritism" toward the A. F. of L. unions in the matter of organization. The Board has applied these rulings in such a way that if a foreman or a minor supervisory employee who has no right to hire or fire but who is eligible to membership in the C.I.O. and A. F. of L. unions, makes, without authorization from any official of the employer, a statement favorable to the A. F. of L. union of which the employee in question is a member, such statement is sufficient to invalidate contracts lawfully entered into between the employer and the A. F. of L. union. The following cases, which do not include all the cases on the subject, are proof of the foregoing charge: Consolidated Edison Company, Serrick Corporation, National Motor Bearing Company, Zenite Metal Corporation, Carrollton Metal Products Company, National Electric Products Corporation, Electric Vacuum Cleaner Company.

It is interesting to note in several instances, the U.S. Circuit Courts of Appeals have condemned this rule of the Board and failed to approve of it. Two such cases recently decided are the Ballston-Stillwater Knitting Co., Inc., decided in the month of August, 1938, by the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second District (N.Y.), and Peninsular and Occidental Steamship Co., decided in the month of August, 1938, by the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals for New Orleans.

Based on reasoning similar to that used in the invalidation of contracts, the Board has set aside elections conducted under its auspices in which the A. F. of L. unions were successful. These elections were set aside at the instance and request of the C.I.O. unions on the weakest of pretexts. The cases which support this charge are, among others, Carrollton Metal Products Company; Tennessee Copper Company; Johns-Manville Company (Cal.). When American Federation of Labor unions complained respecting outrageous conduct which would affect a C.I.O. favorable election—conduct amounting to bribery of voters—the Board has refused to grant even a hearing on the matter, much less set aside the election. A case in support of this charge is Mobile-Alabama Dry Dock Company.

By virtue of its decisions the Board has, by implication at least, placed A. F. of L. unions in the category of company unions and has caused to be visited upon A. F. of L. unions the same punishment as has been visited upon company unions.

In the Consolidated Edison Company case involving the C.I.O. and the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, the I.B.E.W. had secured a contract recognizing it as the bargaining agency for its own members. The Board set aside the contract and used language which fails to conceal the finding that it looks upon the I.B.E.W. as a company union. This case was appealed to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals of New York. The Court held that there was no justifiable reason for invalidating this contract and authorized the company and the I.B.E.W. to immediately enter into new contracts upon the same terms and conditions as those which were invalidated by the Board.

The Board has abused its powers in determining limitations of the bargaining unit. Bit by bit the Board has assumed extraordinary powers in determining the unit for bargaining. It reached its culmination in the so-called Pacific Coast Longshoremen's case. The Board held all the employees of the Pacific Coast ports and all employees of the Pacific Coast ports to constitute a single unit for bargaining. Thus the city of Tacoma has an overwhelming majority of employees who are members of the A. F. of L. Yet the Board has held that the C.I.O. will bargain for all the employees of Tacoma including the A. F. of L. majority because of the claimed majority by the C.I.O. of the entire coast. Here the Board effectively disestablishes the A. F. of L. union, because a union which cannot bargain for its members cannot function.

This ruling is a product of the philosophy of Edwin S. Smith and Donald Wakefield Smith to foster industrial unions to the detriment of A. F. of L. unions. This case is a precedent for combining all steel, automobile, and unions in similar large industries and all the employers in these respective industries as one unit, so as to effectively throttle and destroy individual A. F. of L. unions because the number of members in the aggregate in the A. F. of L. unions in these industries may be less than the aggregate members in the C.I.O. unions.

The Board has refused to respect strike settlements effected by the Department of Labor or by courts on the basis that an election would be held to determine the bargaining representative when it felt that A. F. of L. unions were likely to win the election.

We mention the cases of the Mt. Vernon Car Manufacturing Company of Mt. Vernon, Illinois, the Serrick Corporation of Muncie, Indiana, and the Consumers Power Company of Michigan in support of this contention.

In these cases strikes were called off on the basis that an election would be held. In the Mt. Vernon case over a year has elapsed and no election has been held. On the contrary, a prolonged hearing was conducted, which cost the A. F. of L. many thousands of dollars and no decision has been rendered to date. In the Serrick Company case a decision was withheld for a year and then instead of respecting the settlement and holding an election, the Board certified the C.I.O. union without election. In the Consumers' Power case, which involves a utility, there have been threats of closing down the power plant. Governor Murphy interceded and secured a promise from the Board that it would hold an election within sixty days. At the behest of the C.I.O. the Board has not held an election to date, which is far beyond the 60-day period. When the delay became intolerable and a strike was imminent, it proceeded to hold a hearing in order to give the C.I.O. the advantage of further delay.

There are a number of cases in which the C.I.O. unions have filed objections for certification as bargaining representative. When it was apparent to the C.I.O. that it would lose the election the Board has permitted charges of so-called unfair labor practices to be filed against the employer. This was done for the purpose of preventing the election which it was certain would result unsuccessfully for the C.I.O. It is apparent to us and to any impartial individual inquiring into these cases that the Board and the C.I.O. have conspired to delay the elections at the behest and for the benefit of the C.I.O.

The latest instance of this kind is the case brought by the C.I.O. against Chicago newspaper publishers. After a prolonged hearing the case was set for argument. The C.I.O. realizing it would lose an election, filed a charge of unfair labor practices. In fact an old complaint was resurrected and the arguments were called off by the Board.

There are many other cases and instances establishing other activities of the board which are detrimental to the interests of the A. F. of L. and which evince partiality and bias in favor of the C.I.O. The proof is strong and overwhelming.

Realizing that the maladministration of the Act is the responsibility of the present personnel of the board, the E.C. made known to the President of the U.S. its opposition to the reappointment of Donald Wakefield Smith. The President has re-appointed him. However, such reappointment does not lessen the justification for opposition by the A. F. of L. and it will continue to oppose those members of the board who fail to act impartially and without prejudice.

The E.C. has given much attention to the subject of the revision of the Wagner Act. The basic rights guaranteed by the Act, such as self-organization, collective bargaining and bona fide restraints upon employers against interfering with these rights, are sound and ought to be preserved. However, proper amendments are necessary to curtail the unlawful assumption of broad powers by the board, also to curtail unlimited discretion in construing and administering the Act, and to make specific the jurisdictional limits of the board. The manner and method of holding elections should be specifically provided for as well as the time in which such elections shall be held. Amendments will be necessary in respect to rights of review and appeal of decisions of the Board and that such right of review shall be accorded unions aggrieved of decisions in representation cases which is not now provided for in the Act.

More specifically, amendments will be required to limit the board's power to invalidate union and employer contracts and to limit the power of the board in determining the proper unit for the purpose of collective bargaining.

In connection with amendments it must be remembered that the Act does not accomplish to the degree intended the outlawing of company unions. There must be included in the revisions and amendments of the Act definite and more specific provisions in respect to the abolition of company unions.

(P. 344) It is evident, that the A. F. of L. has just cause to complain of the administration of the Act by the board. It is incontrovertible that the board is biased and prejudiced against the A. F. of L. and its affiliates. In controversies between A. F. of L. unions and C.I.O. unions the C.I.O. unions have been awarded favorable decisions, not on the merits, but upon preconceived economic predilections of the members of the board. There is a manifest purpose on the part of the board to change the historical structure of our National and International Unions and in effecting such change to destroy our unions. The Serrick Corporation decision referred to is a case in point. Here tool and die makers were denied the right to self-organization by denying to them the right to be constituted a separate unit for collective bargaining.

Investigation into the activities of the Board, among other things, conclusively established that the board refuses to act with reasonable promptness on charges lodged by A. F. of L. unions; that the board, after holding hearings, has unreasonably delayed handing down decisions to the detriment of the cause of our unions. Often such delays are to further the interests of the C.I.O. In other instances, elections fairly won by the A. F. of L. have been set aside and held for naught because of false and unfounded objections raised by the C.I.O. Contracts lawfully entered into by A. F. of L. unions and employers have been invalidated by the board on the flimsy pretense that some foreman without authority to hire and fire and who is a member of the union, has spoken favorably of the contracting union.

There are other fundamental complaints against the board which are amply sustained. The board has misconceived the purpose of the Act; it has perverted the spirit and intent of the law, and instead of administering the Act so as to promote peace in industrial relations its method of administration has promoted strife. It has failed utterly to take cognizance of the fact that the protection of the fruits of collective bargaining is as important to workers as the right to bargain collectively. It has failed to interpret the Act in the light of the expressed guarantees that workers shall have the right to organize for all "mutual aid and protection." Insurance benefits, strike benefits, mutually of interest of workers engaged in well defined, separated tasks, etc., are factors rarely considered by the board.

Although the Act contains fundamental guarantees of the rights of self-organization by workers which the A. F. of L. has fostered, the Board has given secondary consideration to these guarantees. Its primary consideration has been directed toward unwarranted assumption of great powers, reaching out and grasping for more and more jurisdiction, until the rights and privileges of free trade unions have been invaded, usurped and denied.

The manner and method of administering the Act by the National Labor Relations Board has brought administrative justice into disrepute.

It is imperative, therefore, that the Act be revised lest our unions be rendered impotent by the unjust decrees of the board.

Of course, amendments to the Act will have to be drawn as near to the date when Congress convenes as is practicable, because between the present time and the convening of Congress more experience will have been had with the board and its decrees. However, the experience to date convinces us that amendments dealing with the following subjects should be presented to the Congress:

- (1) The unit rule must be changed to conform to that which is in the Railway Labor Act so that it will be obligatory on the board to grant a craft or class the right to select its bargaining representative by majority vote.

- (2) The power of the board to invalidate contracts must be definitely curtailed.

(3) Every known interested party should be served with due process and be afforded an opportunity to appear in any case. No contractual rights should be passed upon without every party to the contract being served with process and given the right to appear in the case.

(4) Intervention by interested parties should be made a matter of right and not a matter of discretion.

(5) Definite qualifications should be set forth in respect to examiners. Some are wholly incompetent and unfit to serve in that capacity. In fact affidavits of prejudice should be permitted to be filed against them where an examiner is considered unfair.

(6) Clarification respecting power over the issuance of subpoenas is necessary and liberalizing of the rule in that respect should be provided.

(7) The secrecy of files must be lifted to the extent that all persons may have an opportunity to examine a record which contains material on which decisions are made. The idea of keeping information and material in a secret file and then utilizing it in connection with other evidence as a basis for the decisions smacks of star chamber proceedings.

(8) Elections shall be conducted within thirty days from filing of a petition therefor.

(9) All cases shall be decided within 45 days after the close of the taking of testimony.

There are two propositions which we acknowledge are controversial. We direct that the E.C. consider them further:

First: Jurisdiction shall be granted appellate courts to review the facts as well as the law to determine whether the decision conforms to the weight and credibility of the evidence.

Second: Separate the administrative functions from the judicial functions of the board, lodging the judicial functions in a tribunal wholly independent from the National Labor Relations Board.

Responsibility for much of the maladministration of the Act is due to the personnel of the board. Changes are imperative if a just policy is to be adopted and maintained.

Finally, vigorous opposition to the appointment and reappointment of men who are not qualified by training, experience and reputation for a quasi-judicial position of highest importance. If our protests are not heeded at one source, they should be forcefully presented to the Senate of the U.S. so that only persons known to be free from bias or peculiar economic philosophies are appointed.

Although it was not the purpose of the Act to vest mediation and conciliation powers in the National Labor Relations Board it has assumed such functions. There is in the Department of Labor a strong and efficient well-administered and thoroughly informed mediation and conciliation department which from the beginning has had the confidence of the workers. In numbers of cases regional directors have, under the guise of administering the Act, assumed mediation and conciliation authority which in truth and in fact was not through mediation or conciliation but mandates equivalent to threats of reprisals or penalties if not complied with. The Act does not give the Board authority to infringe upon or assume the functions of the Conciliation Division of the Department of Labor. The Board should confine its functions to the prescribed purposes of the Act.

If necessary Congress should be asked to specifically provide against appropriations being used for the above purpose.

(P. 352) Resolutions were adopted declaring that certain members of the NLRB should be relieved from any further official capacity of the board, and that members of the U.S. Senate should in the following election be asked to declare their intention against confirmation of such officials.

(1939, p. 147) In a lengthy report on the administration of the National Labor Relations Act, the Executive Council condemned the actions of the National Labor Relations Board in many important instances and reported on efforts made to replace anti-labor members of the Board. The report of the E.C. prefaced its report with the following statement:

"The American Federation of Labor was the chief sponsor of the National Labor Relations Act. It fought for its adoption with all the vigor at its command. It considered the adoption of this Act a great victory for organized labor because it not only recognized Labor's fundamental rights of self-organization, self-determination and freedom of choice in designating representatives, but it gave Labor a means of enforcing such rights to the end that collective bargaining would be a reality.

"The basic principles of the National Labor Relations Act are sound. The American Federation of Labor supports these basic principles and will continue to support them as forcefully as it sponsored the adoption of the Act. It will jealously defend and protect the basic principles of the Act from attack by forces that are antagonistic to these basic principles."

(1939, p. 481) The convention approved the following report of its committee which considered this subject:

Your committee again emphasizes the fact that the American Federation of Labor was the original sponsor of the National Labor Relations Act. The basic principles of the National Labor Relations Act, guaranteeing to workers the rights of self-organization, self-determination, freedom of choice in designating representatives and imposing on employers the duty to bargain collectively with representatives of workers, are sound. The American Federation of Labor will support these principles with all the vigor at its command. It will defend these basic principles of the Act from attack by any forces antagonistic to them.

Because of a perverted construction of provisions in the Act and an improper administration of it by the Board, the fundamental rights referred to have been weakened and in some respects destroyed. Because of bias on the part of certain members of the Board and its personnel, the American Federation of Labor and its affiliates have been made the victims of maladministration. Recognizing this, the Houston Convention by unanimous action directed submission to Congress of amendments to the Act. These were carefully prepared and submitted soon after Congress went into session in 1939. Extended hearings were held before the Labor Committees of the Senate and House of Representatives, but because of the delay in starting the hearings, no action was taken on these amendments at the last session of Congress.

The overwhelming volume of proof and evidence submitted at these hearings sustained the position of the American Federation of Labor in sponsoring its amendments. The examination of many of the Board's decisions proved conclusively that the structure of the International Unions comprising the American Federation of Labor, and that of the American Federation of Labor itself, was at stake.

It is impossible to review all the National Labor Relations Board cases which the American Federation of Labor presented to justify the amendments, for they run into the hundreds. The evidence presented proved, among other things, that in numerous instances the National Labor Relations Board had postponed elections requested by American Federation of Labor organizations, these postponements giving the C.I.O. an additional opportunity to break down American Federation of Labor membership.

It was proved that the National Labor Relations Board had declared bona fide trade union agreements entered into with employers null and void, and that Federal Courts, including the Supreme Court of the United States, had held that the Board was in error and unjustified in its efforts to vacate these agreements.

It was proved that in instances when the American Federation of Labor desired to have subpoenas issued to secure the presence of witnesses, the National Labor Relations Board had unreasonably delayed issuing them.

It was proved that in numerous cases the Board had so prepared the ballots for election to determine the unit for representation, that American Federation of Labor unions were barred.

It was proved that in instances the National Labor Relations Board had refused to permit American Federation of Labor unions to be parties to cases coming before it.

It was proved that a number of examiners had shown themselves biased and wholly incompetent and unfit to serve in that capacity.

It was shown that in many cases American Federation of Labor unions had been dealt with unjustly and in a prejudiced manner, the proof being the decisions which had been handed down by the United States Circuit Courts of Appeals, and the United States Supreme Court itself.

Even the Board itself has since amended its rules in such a way as to meet some of the demands of the American Federation of Labor. The Board also rendered several precedent-making decisions which have had the effect of adopting amendments sponsored by the American Federation of Labor. Likewise several court decisions rendered in the past few months pronounced principles consistent with the amendments of the American Federation of Labor. Thus, great benefits resulted from the presentation of these amendments and the hearings held respecting them.

The necessity for the amendments, however, is not lessened, because this Board or some future Board may revise the rules now in force. This Board, or some future Board, may render decisions in other cases, reversing the present favorable decisions. Courts, too, may recede from their present position. Further, the amendments are vitally necessary in order to overcome several recent decisions of the Board which seriously jeopardize the interests of the American Federation of Labor; they are also necessary for the improvement in administration of the Act, and for the purpose of removing the existing bias of some of the members of the Board, and of its personnel, against the American Federation of Labor and its affiliates.

The decision in the American Can Company case, rendered July 29, 1939, as pointed out by the dissenting members of the Board,

. . . once the industrial union has obtained an exclusive contract on a plantwide basis, either by organizing before the advent of the craft union or by capturing the craft union's majority in a later election, thereafter the craft employees are irrevocably part of the industrial unit. The effect is, therefore, to crystalize the industrial form of organization and prevent the craft employees from ever thereafter changing their minds . . .

indicates the imperative necessity for the revision of the unit rule in the present Act and for the adoption of the amendment of the American Federation of Labor respecting the unit rule, which amendment is identical with the New York Act and is based on the principles of the Railway Labor Act.

In a recent decision—(the Pittsburgh Plate Glass Company case), the Board held that the workers in a separate plant of the company, who were overwhelmingly opposed to being represented by the C.I.O., were to be bargained for by the C.I.O. regardless of an existing contract to the contrary. A member of the Board, in a vigorous dissenting opinion, accuses his colleagues of flaunting the plain provisions of the Act in order to fix a unit to "suit their own fancy."

It is apparent from these and other decisions of the Board that the members are suspicious of one another's motives, and the accusations contained in these decisions emphasize the absolute necessity for the adoption of the American Federation of Labor amendments so as to stop this illegal abuse of power by the Board and to eliminate decisions setting up units to "suit the fancy of its members" instead of complying with law.

Other problems of great consequence still remain which can only be resolved by amending the Act. The right of appeal has been denied in cases such as the West Coast Longshoremen's case, the Progressive Mine Workers' cases, whose petitions for certification have been dismissed without a hearing and without any reason being assigned for the dismissals. The problem of extraordinary and outrageous delay in adjudicating cases must be eliminated. The rule-making power of the Board by which it assumes the power to legislate and through which it has legislated against the interests of the American Federation of Labor must be curbed. This rule-making power as exercised by the Board, that is, the promulgation of rules without according interested parties the right of a hearing, endangers the constitutional form of government of our democracy.

Our movement could not remain silent when it became evident that it would not have an equal standing with any other labor organization before the law.

We were actuated by a deep-seated conviction that we were defending the structure and the principles of the American Federation of Labor from one of the most insidious and dangerous attacks it had ever encountered.

Nothing could have been more dangerous to the American Federation of Labor than to permit decisions to go unchallenged which, in substance, declared that the American Federation of Labor did not stand equal before the law with any other labor organization, or that the National Labor Relations Act authorized the Board to reshape the form and structure of the American trade union movement.

The dilatory tactics in the commencement of hearings before Congress eventuated in the adoption of a resolution to investigate the National Labor Relations Board by a committee of the House. The resolution was adopted by an overwhelming vote. If the result of this investigation should materially impair the Act, the responsibility must rest upon the shoulders of the National Labor Relations Board and its adamant refusal to yield to reasonable amendments before the resolution was proposed, and must be charged to opposition groups who, by vicious propaganda and other reprehensible means, endeavored to prevent the adoption of constructive amendments to the Act.

When testifying before the committee of the House, President Green admonished the committee that if action were not taken by Congress before 1940, it was more than likely that the whole subject would be made a political issue in the 1940 campaign.

Only through the adoption of reasonable amendments by the coming session of Congress can this be averted.

Your committee therefore recommends that the position of the American Federation of Labor remain unchanged and in all respects be affirmed; that the officers and Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor be directed to continue their efforts to amend the National Labor Relations Act in accordance with the amendments sponsored by the American Federation of Labor which are now pending before Congress.

Your committee further recommends that emphasis be placed on that amendment which provides for the creation of a new Board with a membership of five, and which provides, further for a complete overhauling of the present personnel employed by the Board.

(1940, pp. 79, 110-113, 481-486) Pursuant to instructions of previous conventions, the A. F. of L. continued efforts to secure desired amendments to the National Labor Relations Act. These amendments sought one fundamental objective—the effective removal for all time of the prejudicial bias, harmful inefficiency and flagrant distortion of basic principles that have characterized the administration of the Act.

(1940, p. 481) The strenuous efforts made by the American Federation of Labor in the past three years to change the personnel of the National Labor Relations Board and other key personnel, has borne fruit. Two members of the late Board are no longer members thereof.

The history leading up to these changes has been carefully set forth in the reports of the Executive Council and the Resolutions Committee for the years 1937, 1938, 1939, and in the present report of the Executive Council.

It is sufficient to say that the factual matter presented in these reports establishes that shortly after the formation of a dual labor movement, a biased and unfair attitude toward the American Federation of Labor and its affiliates was manifested by the members of the Board, and by their appointed agents in the administration of the Act.

Although the American Federation of Labor at first relied merely on protests to the Board against this prejudice and bias, the situation became so intolerable that no other course was left to the American Federation of Labor than to demand a change in personnel and amendments to the Act. Although these amendments are still before Congress and have not yet been adopted, the submission of them to Congress, the hearings and investigations conducted by various committees, have been productive of considerable reform in the administration of the Act.

Last year, about the time the Congressional hearings were coming to an end, the Board revised and changed a number of fundamental rules improving the administration of the Act. The most fundamental reform however, is the changed personnel, not only in the members of the Board, but in the various key employes and agents of the Board.

The hearings before the various Congressional committees disclosed that the secretarial force was anti-American Federation of Labor, and frequently acted as propagandists for a dual and rival labor movement. We are pleased to report that only a few days ago the Secretary of the Board, several of his assistants, and several lawyers employed by the Board, resigned. Most of those who have already resigned were openly accused of bias. There is room for further housecleaning, and we have every reason to believe that the new members will remove those individuals who have perverted the Act in their administration of it.

We have stated before, and we repeat again, that the fundamentals of the National Labor Relations Act are sound and must be preserved. But past experience indicates that these fundamentals can easily be departed from if the personnel of the Board is so disposed. Changes in personnel are not easily brought about. It is necessary therefore to guard the fundamentals of the Act with definite substantive and procedural provisions from which no future Board will be permitted to depart. Therefore, it is necessary that the following basic amendments heretofore proposed by the American Federation of Labor be enacted into law.

1. A change in the unit rule to permit skilled employes and recognized classifications of workers to retain their separate unity if they so desire, similar to the Railway Labor Act.

2. A direct court appeal by labor organizations in representation cases, so as to preclude a recurrence of the Longshoremen's decision, which wiped out all American Federation of Labor Longshoremen's bargaining units on the West Coast.

3. Amendments preserving the integrity of collective bargaining agreements lawfully entered into by bona fide labor organizations.

4. Procedural amendments to eliminate the outrageous delays that jeopardize the organizational gains made by many labor unions.

5. While we have confidence in two members of the present Board, unforeseen events may change the makeup of the Board at any time, and the logical reasons which originally led the American Federation of Labor to favor a five man Board remain unchanged.

The struggle for reform by the American Federation of Labor has not been in vain. With the change in the personnel of the board we look forward with hope and confidence to a fair, honest and unbiased administration of the National Labor Relations Act. In the efforts of the new members of the board to administer the Act fairly and honestly, the American Federation of Labor pledges to them its whole-hearted support.

(1940, p. 329) The general counsel of the A. F. of L., in reporting on the Simplex Shoe Company vs. Wisconsin State Federation of Labor case, stated that the decision handed down in this case "gave validity to provisions which were subsequently written into the National Labor Relations Act and the various Labor Relations Acts of the states patterned after the Federal Act." This had reference to the legality of rights given Labor by the Norris-LaGuardia Act. The Simplex decision likewise was deemed to declare that "such guarantees written into any enactment as substantive law were valid and binding."

(1941, p. 521) The E.C. report contained a report on developments in the administration of the National Labor Relations Board. The following committee report on the report of the Executive Council was approved:

Significant improvements in the administration of the National Labor Relations Act continue to flow from the efforts of the past four years on the part of the American Federation of Labor to bring about necessary reforms.

The background and reasons for the American Federation of Labor's decision to amend the Act are detailed in the reports of the Executive Council and the Resolutions Committee for the years 1937, 1938, 1939, 1940 and in the present report of the Executive Council.

Briefly these reports demonstrated—and this demonstration has been fully corroborated by Congressional committees and by subsequent events —that the original board and its personnel administered the Act in a manner that not only prejudiced the interests and rights of the American Federation of Labor, but also perverted and endangered the basic principles embodied in the Act.

A few weeks ago the term of Board Member Edwin S. Smith expired. He was the last of the original board members. The President did not offer his name to the Senate for reappointment, and this in itself represents a substantial victory for the American Federation of Labor. Board Member Smith was openly hostile to the interests of the Federation from the very beginning of the formation of the dual labor movement. No private individual has done as much as this public official to encourage opposition to the American Federation of Labor and enhance and strengthen the development of a dual and rival organization. The elimination of Mr. Smith virtually completes the overhauling of a biased and unfair personnel and promises that hereafter the American Federation of Labor will receive fairer treatment before the labor board.

In addition to the removal of incompetent and unfair personnel, our amendments were addressed to four major objectives:

1. A change in the unit rule, so as to preserve the right of skilled craftsmen to designate their own representatives and to retain their own form of labor organization.

2. Amendments safeguarding the integrity of lawful collective bargaining agreements of bona fide labor organizations.

3. Procedural amendments that would eliminate harmful and unnecessary delays.

4. An amendment providing for a court review in representation cases so as to protect against arbitrary decisions relating to the appropriate bargaining unit.

As reported to you by the Executive Council, many of our objectives have been obtained without amendment through changes in board decisions and through court opinion. For example, the Longshoremen decision in May of this year completely reversed the notorious decision of the old board in the same case, whereby entire seaboard cities, organized by the American Federation of Labor and composed of 100 percent A. F. of L. membership, were forced to be represented by a dual and rival organization. Under the new decision the same employees in these ports have at long last been given the right of self-organization and of free choice of their own representatives.

Similarly, the board recently reversed its decision in the Libby-Owens-Ford Glass Company case in a manner that gave employees in one of the plants of that company, completely organized by the American Federation of Labor but who had heretofore been obliged to be bargained for by an undesired group, the right to designate their own A. F. of L. bargaining representative.

Outstanding, too, is the decision of the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals in the Electric Vacuum Cleaner Company case which reversed a decision of the old board that had arbitrarily invalidated an A. F. of L. contract with unions affiliated with the Metal Trades Department. The present board, too, in the Calvert Distillery Company case and others, evidenced a changed and wholesome attitude with respect to lawful collective bargaining contracts.

Finally, through a change in their rules of procedure, the present board has succeeded to a considerable extent in removing harmful delays.

Thus, it will be seen that the activities of the American Federation of Labor have indeed proved fruitful. And yet, the need for legislating these changes, rather than depending upon the particular personnel at a particular time, is self-evident. Even the present board itself has, particularly with respect to the unit question, rendered opinions that strike directly at the vital interests of the American Federation of Labor. In the Inland Steel Company case, teamsters were denied the right to vote whether they desired to be represented by the International Brotherhood of Teamsters or by a dual organization; and in the Weyerhaeuser case wherein the machinists were lumped with other crafts into one unit against the wishes of the separate crafts.

This board, as well as the former board, has assumed absolute and unreviewable power to shape and determine the structure of trade unions in this country in accordance with the economic predilections of the personnel of the board. We can conceive of no circumstances that justify this tremendous power. Already, the American Federation of Labor has suffered incalculable harm because of the abuse of this power by a biased board. Removal of that board has not removed the assumption of this power. Ignorance or mistake in the exercise of that power, no less than calculated abuse, constitutes a threat to the American Federation of Labor, since there is no appeal provided for from decisions in representation or unit cases. Therefore, it is incumbent upon the American Federation of Labor to persist in its efforts to have the Wagner Act amended in accordance with its proposals now pending before Congress.

(1942, p. 66) Efforts to improve the administration of the NLRB were incorporated in report of Executive Council. The council was pleased with the improvements made but regretted that the overall functions were still far from what is desired. The Council Report stated:

" . . . In short, there was considerable overhauling resulting in immediate and substantial improvements and indicating fair promise of efficient and equitable administration that would be consistent with the expressed purposes of the Act.

Unfortunately, however, the evils we have been complaining of have not been fully removed. This we attribute to two fundamental factors, one, the vast and unfettered discretion vested in the board to determine the units appropriate for purposes of collective bargaining—or, put otherwise, (1) the absolute power vested in three government officials to shape the structure of the trade union movement, and (2) the retention of certain important officials—particularly Regional Directors—who continue to reflect the bias and attitudes of the original board.

(P. 68) Small wonder, in view of the trend of the board which the foregoing cases illustrate, that Regional Directors who had temporarily obscured their anti-A. F. of L. prejudices when the new board came into being have openly resumed their former attitudes of hostility to the A. F. of L. Small wonder, too, that the volume of complaints against the board and its personnel that are being registered by our affiliates throughout the country grows greater and greater. For example, the General Executive Board of the Teamsters International Union at its recent meeting in Atlantic City issued a statement strongly condemning the actions of the board.

It is especially regrettable that in these perilous times when the energies of all should be directed toward the successful prosecution of the war that the labor board should administer the Act in a manner that can only lead to confusion, dissatisfaction and dissension. This unfortunate circumstance could have been completely avoided had our proposals for constructive amendment of the Act been adopted. Each passing year brings further proof of the appropriateness and need of those amendments. Congressional action on those amendments was precluded last year because of the occupation of Congress with defense matters. Now that we are directly engaged in a world-wide life and death struggle it may be thought by some that consideration by Congress is, at this time, inopportune. Yet, unless the board abandons its present trends, and permits workers to exercise the rights granted them by the Wagner Act, it is self-evident that passage of our amendments may become a necessary and even indispensable war measure.

(P. 163) H.R. 5580 defines subversive individuals and prohibits them from serving as representatives of employees under the National Labor Relations Act. The Executive Council while agreeing that subversive persons should be controlled, opposed this bill because if history and common experience mean anything such legislation will not serve that end, but rather will be utilized as a means of harassing and attacking legitimate labor organizations. The problem of subversive activities is, by no means, limited to representation of employees by subversive persons. There is absolutely no basis for the plain implication of H.R. 5580, namely, that our war effort has been hampered because of misrepresentation of the American worker. As a matter of fact, it is fair to say, on the basis of reliable investigations and records, that other groups in our society have been far more conspicuously used and abused by subversive persons than have labor organizations. Thus, legislation which necessarily relates subversive activities to labor unions results in a completely misleading and unwarranted focus, and its inevitable result will be to penalize labor groups whose contribution to the war effort has not only proved completely patriotic but also indispensable to success.

(P. 608) The American Federation of Labor desires no defense of individuals guilty of actions subversive to the Government of the United States, either in the ranks of the labor movement or elsewhere. We believe also that the record of the American Federation of Labor, in this as well as in other national emergencies, makes legislation restricting the right of free choice of representation (a restriction applicable only to organized labor) entirely unwarrantable and unjust.

(P. 490) The administration of the National Labor Relations Act, despite improvements resulting from legislative and other efforts of the Federation, continues to present important deficiencies and serious problems. The Executive Council's Report indicates that the American Federation of Labor is still victimized by the prejudice of subordinate officials of the board and by erroneous decisions of the board itself growing out of its absolute power to determine what form and structure trade union organization in this country should take. Unless the board permanently and conclusively abandons the mystified exercise of that power as evidenced by its decision in the Utah Copper Company case and by the other decisions noted in the report of the Executive Council, and unless—more importantly—the constructive amendments of the American Federation of Labor, which place reasonable limits on the extent of that power, are adopted by Congress, then we shall be confronted with a dangerous challenge to the principle of trade union autonomy and voluntarism.

tion of the conventions on such reports, conclusively established the manifest bias of members of the National Labor Relations Board and of a considerable number of its personnel against the American Federation of Labor and its affiliates. Manifest unfairness in the administration of the Act where our affiliates were concerned, has amounted to "maladministration." With changes in membership of the board, improvement for a short period was noticeable. Soon the former prejudices against the Federation and its affiliates reasserted themselves.

Your committee is convinced that the old remaining prejudiced personnel dominates the board, and that the present members are too weak or unwilling to resist the strong favoritism displayed by employed personnel for rival organizations. On no other premise can we explain the attitude of the board during the past year in support of the outrageous policy of raiding A. F. of L. unions by rival organizations. The board and its personnel have, on many occasions, fostered such raiding by giving the raiders aid and comfort in the form of favorable procedure, such as the issuance of unwarranted complaints against employers with whom A. F. of L. unions have existing contracts; conducting hearings, holding elections; and the timing of such procedure so as to be most advantageous to the raiders.

The board's activities reached a climax in its attitude toward the Kaiser Shipbuilding Company contract with the Metal Trades Department. Reference to the recital contained in the Executive Council's Report will make clear the circumstances of this raid.

We recommend hearty commendation of the Metal Trades Department for its prompt, vigorous and effective action in defense of union rights.

Your committee also recommends that the Executive Council adopt all appropriate means for resisting the injustice practiced upon its affiliates by the board in the aiding and abetting of the raids upon the American Federation of Labor membership.

Your committee urges that the Executive Council continue to energetically defend trade union rights as well as the fruits of collective bargaining, and prevent the board from perverting the Wagner Act into a charter for organizing rival unions by means of unlawful raids.

Your committee further recommends that the Executive Council study the work of this board, and developments from the operation of the law, for the purpose of recommending amendments which will assure constructive results.

(1944, p. 155) The Report of the Executive Council called particular attention to experiences during the preceding year with the National Labor Relations Board with particular reference to their attitude toward raiding of A. F. of L. unions. Specific cases were reported which were considered of major importance and the subject of the report was referred to a convention committee which made recommendations (unanimously adopted) as follows:

(P. 419) A. F. of L. called upon, through Res. 99, to secure coverage of government employees under NLRA. Convention took the following action on the proposal:

Because of the unsatisfactory results of the administration of the Act in its present scope and of the indefinite nature of the resolution, the committee recommends that it be referred to the Executive Council with instructions to confer with the affiliated organizations of government employees regarding any legislative proposal on the subject.

(P. 540) Vigorous protest was lodged by the Executive Council in 1943 against the National Labor Relations Board for its attitude toward raiding of the American Federation of Labor unions by rival and dual unions. Your committee was of the opinion that as a result of that protest the attitude of the board would change. Unfortunately it has not changed, and, if anything, the opposition to the American Federation of Labor has become intensified. Decision after decision, which has no basis in fact or justification in law, has been rendered against the American Federation of Labor by the board in cases involving the American Federation of Labor and rival unions.

It is unnecessary for your committee to emphasize this conclusion by repeating the uncontradicted evidence contained in the Executive Council's Report.

Any fairminded person, examining the record of this board, its members and personnel, as disclosed by the Executive Council's reports for the past several years, will be convinced that the board functions more as an agency of a dual and rival organization than a quasi-judicial body set up to administer a law calling for the highest judicial and administrative integrity. It is useless to complain to the board. Officials of the American Federation of Labor and of international unions have had repeated conferences with the board and have made personal appeal to its members to reverse its procedure and attitude and deal fairly and justly with our unions, but all to no avail. Raids upon teamster unions have been permitted and encouraged; the Brotherhood of Carpenters has been plunged into expensive litigation because of the refusal of the board to follow the procedure laid down by the National Labor Relations Act.

The board has permitted rival unions to flout agreements entered into with American Federation of Labor unions to abstain from raiding, which agreements were procured through the efforts of the War Labor Board. Nevertheless the National Labor Relations Board has ignored the War Labor Board and these agreements, and has accepted jurisdiction of cases for the purpose of aiding the rival unions to raid the American Federation of Labor unions, as is forcefully demonstrated in the International Harvester case reported in Executive Council's Report.

Shabby and unjustified treatment was meted out to the United Garment Workers in the Cohn-Goldwater Company case. An agreement between this employer and the United Garment Workers was set aside for naught by the Board for the purpose of permitting the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America to raid three plants of the Cohn-Goldwater Company which had contractual relationship with the United Garment Workers.

The board still adheres to the antiquated and unjust doctrines established by the first board administering the National Labor Relations Act. One doctrine highly prejudicial to the American Federation of Labor is the American Can Company doctrine by which it holds that a past history of bargaining on an industrial basis fixes the industrial unit for all time in the future so as to preclude forever the establishment of a craft unit. The American Federation of Labor, through its general counsel, has repeatedly requested the abandonment of this unjust doctrine by the board, but the board has been deaf to these pleas.

Another vicious and unjust doctrine is the principle established in the Tennessee Coal, Iron and Railway Company case, and recently re-emphasized in the Geneva Company case.

In the Tennessee case the board held that an industrial type of unit only was appropriate in the basic steel industry. Thus in any case involving basic steel no craft organization will be permitted to vote on a craft basis. Because of the importance of the subject we quote from the Geneva Company decision:

The various affiliates of the Council (Local Metal Trades Council), the I.B.E.W., the I.A.M., the Enginemen, the Trainmen, all seek separate craft units. Putting aside for the present the claims of the Enginemen and the Trainmen, it appears that the unit issue herein is the same as that which was resolved by the board in matter of Tennessee Coal, Iron and Railway Company by a finding that an industrial type unit was appropriate in the basic steel industry. The record in the instant case unquestionably confirms our conclusion in the above case. Accordingly, we find no merit in the contentions of the several American Federation of Labor affiliates that the separate craft units which they seek are appropriate for the purposes of collective bargaining at the Geneva plant.

This is perhaps the most far reaching and sinister doctrine of the many pronounced by the board which have for their purpose the undermining of the American Federation of Labor by reforming and changing its structure. By the extension of this doctrine the board can completely shut out from basic industries American Federation of Labor craft unions. It will be recalled that when the National Labor Relations Act was proposed and was being considered Senator Wagner appeared before the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor. It was then pointed out to him that the language in Section 9 dealing with the selection of appropriate units might be used to destroy existing unions by excluding other organizations from an appropriate unit. Senator Wagner emphasized that Section 9 was not intended for that purpose and would not, under any circumstances, be used to reform or change the structure of trade unionism and would not deny to the American Federation of Labor unions at any time under any circumstances the right to vote as crafts if they so desired. He pointed to the provision in the National Labor Relations Act guaranteeing "freedom of choice" to all the workers and stated most emphatically that it guaranteed to craft workers the right to vote as crafts when they so desired. Yet under the Tennessee Railway Company case doctrine not only have Senator Wagner's statements been repudiated, but a fraud has been perpetrated upon the American Federation of Labor by the establishment of this doctrine.

Your committee recommends that the National Labor Relations Board be called upon to reverse these decisions by renouncing them in future cases, and that nothing be left undone to have Congress enact a law which will never again permit the present or any future board to arrogate to itself the power to destroy a large portion of the affiliates of the American Federation of Labor.

We repeat that efforts to change the disposition of the board to aid and assist rival unions is well nigh useless. The only solution in sight is to adopt the recommendations of the Executive Council to request Congress to amend the Act in two vital respects—first, to provide, in the language of the New York Labor Relations Act, that no craft or class be denied the right to vote as a craft or class in the selection of a bargaining representative which will guarantee freedom of choice and the maintenance of craft union integrity contemplated by the Act; second—to provide for direct court review in representation cases, which is now denied under the Act.

Much injustice is suffered by the American Federation of Labor through inability to obtain a review in the courts of the board's decisions in representation cases.

Your committee calls to your attention the adoption of an amendment to the 1944 Appropriations Act denying to the board the power to invalidate existing contracts by prohibiting it from expending funds for that purpose. The Metal Trades Department procured an amendment of that character to the 1943 Appropriations Bill. It feared that the board would renew its attack upon existing agreements similar to the one the Kaiser Shipbuilding Company had with the Metal Trades Department if the prohibition of 1943 was dropped from the 1944 Appropriations Bill, therefore the Metal Trades Department prepared an appropriate amendment to the 1944 Appropriations Bill which guarantees the integrity of past and continuing contracts between unions and employers. This amendment to the Appropriations Bill has been the most vital force in preventing to a large degree numerous raids by rival unions upon American Federation of Labor contracts. The Metal Trades Department is to be commended for its vigilance in protecting the American Federation of Labor past and existing contracts by procuring passage of this amendment to the Appropriations Bill.

(1946, p. 130) The E.C. reported on important changes which had taken place in both the administration of the NLR Act and in the personnel of the board. The council pointed out that "the administration of the Act has improved somewhat under the new personnel, but some of the basic policies, which have heretofore been criticized by the A. F. of L., remain in effect, and many of the employees of the board, particularly in its regional offices, continue to perform their duties in such a way as to promote the interests of rival unions. The important American Can Company case was discussed in its effect on board action on craft union contracts.

The convention unanimously adopted the recommendations of its committee as follows:

(1946, p. 615) Since the report of the Executive Council two years ago the membership of the National Labor Relations Board has undergone some change. Under the chairmanship of Mr. Paul Herzog some improvement has been noticed in the administration of the National Labor Relations Act. However, this improvement has not been sufficient to remove pre-existing prejudice and bias on the part of personnel in regional offices when cases are presented involving issues between A. F. of L. unions and rival unions. An outstanding example of prejudice of this nature are the proceeding in the so-called West Coast Cannery cases involving the American Federation of Labor and the International Brotherhood of Teamsters on one side and a rival union on the other. Regional Board activities indicated that the weight of the board was thrown in favor of the rival unions under circumstances which required a wholly different attitude on the part of the board and its personnel.

The board still adheres to the reprehensible American Can doctrine which freezes mass production units so as to exclude crafts from being set up as separate units. There is still necessity for an amendment to the Act making it mandatory upon the board to permit craft workers to vote as a unit when such crafts exist in a plant and desire to vote as a craft.

Perhaps more time is needed in which to gather sufficient information to determine whether the attitude of the board toward previous complaints of the A. F. of L. has changed, and whether a fairer and more just administration of the Act will be had in the future. The American Federation of Labor will be most diligent and watchful in this regard, and it is hoped by the time the next convention is held the Executive Council will be able to report considerable progress toward a better administration of the National Labor Relations Act.

(1947, p. 674) Protest was registered against the administration of the NLRB and Robert Denham, general counsel, through Res. 180, which was approved by the convention and referred to the E.C. for implementation as follows:

Resolved—That Robert Denham, general counsel for the National Labor Relations Board, is hereby condemned as partisan toward employer interests and unfit to be permitted to act in the high legal capacity to which he holds an interim appointment, and be it further

Resolved—That the American Federation of Labor respectfully requests President Truman to recall his name from consideration for the high office of general counsel to the NLRB, and be it further

Resolved—That the American Federation of Labor call upon the Joint Committee on Labor Management Relations to replace its counsel with one who is able to at least observe the common amenities attendant upon the duties expected from one allegedly engaged in studying the important matters delegated by Act of Congress, and be it further

Resolved—That the American Federation of Labor again denounce Senator Ball as a hateful enemy of organized labor whose retirement will benefit the entire country, and be it further

Resolved—That the American Federation of Labor condemn the activity of the American Newspaper Publishers Association for its attempt to use the procedure of the Taft-Hartley law to add its pressure influence against the International Typographical Union and to pressure agencies of government with partisan publicity on behalf of the employers of the entire printing and publishing industry, and be it further

Resolved—That the foregoing facts be brought to the attention of President Truman with the urgent request of the American Federation of Labor that he make speedy and thorough investigation to the end that governmental agencies be held to fair and impartial procedures within the law.

Whereas—When the original National Labor Relations Act was enacted, no one anticipated the use of its election machinery by rapacious dual C.I.O. unions for raiding expeditions against duly certified A. F. of L. unions; unfortunately, however, this pernicious practice has developed, contrary to the original intent of the Act, affecting to very serious degree many A. F. of L. unions, and

Whereas—The cost of unwarranted, unnecessary NLRB elections, initiated only for raiding purposes, are borne by the government and ultimately by the taxpayers—without value received in peaceful labor relations, but on the contrary, stimulating increasing strife, and such election raids tend to disrupt production in the plants affected for weeks on end and are a menace to the national economy; an unfair charge upon the employer; and a disruption of normal labor relations, and

Whereas—The C.I.O. unions use the machinery of the NLRB election system to destroy A. F. of L. local unions and their bargaining rights and to corral the organized A. F. of L. workers into C.I.O. unions; even where they do not hope to accomplish the actual seizure or control of A. F. of L. plants and locals, they use this means to deplete A. F. of L. unions' funds in self-defense, so as to prevent them from using their resources for normal, healthy union administration and organizing unorganized workers, and at the same time, they are able to disrupt normal collective bargaining in A. F. of L. plants, therefore, be it

Resolved—That in view of this situation, and the dangerous consequences arising from such raiding attacks against legally certified A. F. of L. unions, the American Federation of Labor recommends the following amendments to the Wagner Act when re-enacted by Congress, to remedy these existing evils:

1. Require valid proof of a 51% majority by a petitioner against an existing certified union, before allowing NLRB to call an election at an organized mill, through:

- (a) A showing of representation of 51% of the workers in the mill through valid signed membership cards; and

- (b) Rigid examination by the board of proof presented by the petitioning union, through checks of cards against the payrolls of the company and signatures of the workers, before the board is permitted to call an election.

2. Require the union petitioning for an election in an organized mill, on a claim of 51% representation, to put up a bond that it represents a majority; which bond shall be forfeited, if it fails to win the election, and be split in a fair ratio between the government and the raided union.

Examiner's Protest Against NLRB Test—(1950, pp. 154, 442) During the year amicable conclusion was brought about in the case of the National Labor Relations Board field and trial examiners whose jobs had been at stake for many months. Sensing the danger to orderly administration of labor laws, we promptly took interest in this matter, dating from the passage by the Congress of the Administrative Practices Act. This law prescribed rigid tests of fitness for these examiners. To such thorough examination we had no opposition but we were definitely and directly concerned over the manner in which it was evident that certain examiners were on the verge of losing their jobs despite their long service with the government. It was apparent to us that simply because these men had entered upon duty during the days the Wagner Act was in force that they were being marked for dismissal.

We lost no time approaching understanding members of the Congress, particularly in the Senate. We requested that the issues be thoroughly searched and that justice be meted to those examiners who had performed loyally and efficiently and with far better claim to justice and fairplay than was about to be rendered. . . .

It was not necessary to go the entire length of obtaining a full-dress investigation of the detailed treatment given the examiners by the United States Civil Service Commission, though we were well and thoroughly prepared to give complete support of the cause of decency and justice at all stages of the preliminary inquiry and the public investigation should the latter eventuate. We intend at all times to continue our alertness in this regard and to repel the enemies of organized labor who had accepted as a foregone conclusion that the nation would ratify the adoption of the Taft-Hartley Act at the polls. The 1948 election well exemplified the fallacy of such presumptions. We were distinctly unwilling to stand idly by and witness the loyal examiners of the NLRB and other agencies be liquidated unceremoniously without raising a firm hand of protest.

We shall provide all indicated demand for coordination of the efforts of those who attempt to lay hands upon those in the Federal Government civilian service who otherwise might be intimidated by unfair tests of their abilities to continue to hold their jobs. The integrity of our government is based upon the honesty of purpose of those in the administrative branches. That integrity we intend at all times to foster with all the fervor at our command.

It now can be reported that these examiners will have no further need in the predictable future to be subjected to the tortures of job-fear superinduced by those who would connive to disrupt the orderly operation of our administrative government machinery.

Appointment of

Ever since the 80th Congress, there have been various efforts made, by those who claim some of the federal trial examiners are too liberal or too pro-Labor in their views, to remove such examiners from the federal service, not only in the NLRB, but also in other Federal Commissions or Agencies where examiners are employed. In the 83rd Congress Senator McCarran introduced S.1708 which would amend the Administrative Procedure Act to permit lifetime appointments by the President of all federal trial examiners. This would have permitted the elimination of presently employed trial examiners many of whom have given years of excellent and meritorious public service. The American Federation of Labor opposed this bill and no action was taken on it.

Reorganization Plan No. 12—(1950, pp. 156, 442) We paid particularly close attention to the President's Reorganization Plan No. 12 to transfer the functions of the General Counsel's office to the National Labor Relations Board of the board's chairman. It was evident that should the plan go into effect that some of the dissatisfaction with the Taft-Hartley Act might be removed and one or another feature of that Act eventually might be repealed piecemeal.

Our conventions have repeated their stand for repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act completely and at one action. At the same time, repeal of the Act, part by part, would make increasingly difficult final elimination of the remaining portions of the Act.

President Green's statement on Reorganization Plan No. 12 to the Members of Congress, including the Committees on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, is as follows:

The American Federation of Labor had not intended to inject itself into the controversy which has arisen in respect to the Presidential Reorganization Plan No. 12, which is the proposal to abolish the office of the General Counsel of the National Labor Relations Board and restore such functions to the direction of the chairman of the National Labor Relations Board as was the practice prior to the passage of the Labor-Management Relations Act of 1947. We do not consider this proposal as any part of Labor's fight to repeal the Taft-Hartley Act. The proposal is one which is justified entirely on the grounds that it promotes efficiency and harmony in the administration of an Act in which inefficiency and disharmony has heretofore prevailed to the confusion and detriment of organized labor in the processing of cases before the board. The testimony of Chairman Herzog, speaking on behalf of members of the Board, very forcefully presents the urgent reasons in support of the President's proposal. If there be any doubt in the matter, the American Federation of Labor urgently advocates such proposal as a means of accomplishing the objectives outlined in the Hoover Report.

This statement is sent due to the fact that there has been a serious misrepresentation made by opponents of the proposal before both House and Senate Committees. It was indicated by certain opponents of Reorganization Plan No. 12 that the American Federation of Labor favored separation of the function of the General Counsel from the administration of the Act by the board and had presented testimony in support of such separation of powers. While it is true that in 1939 or 1940 the American Federation of Labor did suggest, in view of the then composition of the board and its anti-A. F. of L. bias, that some curb be placed upon the discretionary powers lodged in the board, it is also true that the American Federation of Labor expressed strenuous opposition to any proposal that the functions and powers of the General Counsel and the board be separated, both in testimony before the House and Senate Committees in 1947 prior to the passage of the Taft-Hartley Act, and in 1949 during the hearings on the Thomas and Lesinski Bills. The record will speak for itself in that respect.

It is hoped that this will serve to remove any misunderstanding that might have been created by reason of erroneous statement that the American Federation of Labor favored separation of powers as between the office of the General Counsel and the National Labor Relations Board.

By a 53-30 vote, the Senate adopted the resolution of disapproval of Plan No. 12, thus leaving intact that portion of the law setting up the General Counsel's office independent of the board and the chairman.

Removal of Denham Praised—(1950, pp. 335, 491) Res. 125, unanimously adopted by the convention, extended thanks to the President of the United States for his recognition of the dire need for a change in the office of General Counsel of the NLRB in the removal of Robert Denham from office.

National Parks and Monuments, Preservation—(1954, pp. 399, 471) Res. 73 protested against proposed construction of dams in the Upper Colorado Basin including two within the boundaries of Dinosaur National Monument and would inundate over one hundred miles of beautiful river canyons comprising the Dinosaur National Monument. The resolution further calls for the preservation of our national park system in general as created to preserve the scenic and geologic wonders of the country for the enjoyment of this and future generations.

Referred to the Executive Council for consideration and study and whatever action may be warranted.

National Recovery Act—(1933, pp. 40, 409) The most important and far-reaching legislation ever enacted by Congress was "to encourage national industrial recovery, to foster fair competition, and to provide for the construction of certain useful public works."

The industrial recovery part of the Act provides for promoting the organization of industry for the purpose of cooperative action among trade groups, to induce and maintain united action of Labor and management under adequate governmental sanctions and supervision, to eliminate unfair competitive practices, to promote the fullest possible utilization of the present productive capacity of industries, to avoid undue restriction of production, and to increase the consumption of industrial and agricultural products by increasing purchasing power.

The object is to reduce and relieve unemployment, to improve standards of Labor and otherwise to rehabilitate industry and to conserve natural resources.

Section 7 of the Act defines clearly the rights of Labor and undertakes to protect these rights from infringement on the part of employers. Section 7 reads as follows:

Every code of fair competition, agreement, and license approved, prescribed, or issued under this title shall contain the following conditions:

(1) That employees shall have the right to organize and bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing, and shall be free from the interference, restraint, or coercion of employers of labor, or their agents, in the designation of such representatives or in self-organization or in other concerted activities for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection; (2) that no employee and no one seeking employment shall be required as a condition of employment to join any company union or to refrain from joining, organizing, or assisting a labor organization of his own choosing; and (3) that employers shall comply with the maximum hours of labor, minimum rates of pay, and other conditions of employment, approved or prescribed by the President.

The law also provides that the President shall afford every opportunity to employers and employees to establish by mutual agreement the standards as to the maximum hours of labor, minimum rates of pay and such other conditions of employment as may be necessary. If no such mutual agreement has been reached and which might merit the approval of the President, he, the President, may then investigate the labor practices, policies, wages, hours of labor and conditions of employment prevailing and authorize a limited code of fair competition fixing maximum hours of labor, minimum rates of pay and other conditions of employment. This shall have the same effect as a code of fair competition reached by mutual agreement and approved by the President.

After the bill had been introduced in Congress it was found it did not properly protect organized labor. We deemed the pending legislation of such grave importance that it caused a conference to be called in Washington of representatives of all national and international unions. This conference voted to insist upon inserting several amendments in Sub-divisions 1 and 2 of Section 7, and likewise referred to the E.C. the proposal to protect America's wage earners against undue foreign competition.

The President of the A. F. of L. appeared before the House Committee and urged the incorporation of the proposed amendments. They were approved by the House Committee on Ways and Means and passed by the House.

When the bill reached the Senate it was referred to the Finance Committee before which a representative of the steel industry appeared and urged an amendment that would legalize company unions. The Committee amended Section 7 to provide "that it was not intended to compel a change in the existing satisfactory relationship between employees and employers." This would have legalized "company unions." Immediately our President entered protest and when the amendment came up for action in the Senate it was defeated. The rejection of the amendment showed that Congress was opposed to "company unions."

Title II of the Act provides for public works and construction projects. For these $3,300,000,000 has been appropriated. The President is empowered to construct, finance or aid in the construction or financing of any public works project included in the program prepared upon such terms as the President shall prescribe. He is authorized to make grants to states, municipalities or other public bodies for construction, repair or improvement of any project, but no such grants shall be in excess of 30 per cent of the cost of labor and materials employed upon such project. The other 70 per cent will be loans to be repaid.

Not less than $50,000,000 is allotted for national forests highways, national forests roads, trails, bridges and related projects. The President may also allot funds made available by the Act for the construction, repair and improvement of public highways in Alaska, the Canal Zone, Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands. All contracts will contain such provisions as are necessary to insure that no convict labor shall be employed on any project, and that no individual except in executive, administrative and supervisory positions shall be permitted to work more than 30 hours in any one week.

All employees "shall be paid just and reasonable wages which shall be compensation sufficient to provide, for the hours of labor, as limited, a standard of living in decency and comfort."

For emergency construction of public highways $400,000,000 will be expended. Another particular feature of the Act is the provision that $25,000,000 is to be used for making loans for and otherwise aiding in the purchasing of subsistence homesteads of one or two acres. The moneys collected as repayment of such loans will constitute a revolving fund to be administered as directed by the President for similar purposes.

The fundamental objective of the American labor movement has been to establish in fact and in law the right of the workers to organize in organizations of their own choosing. We have always maintained that this object is inherent in the institutions and practices of freedom set up by the Constitution of this country. We have made steady progress in getting this right recognized in law and in practice. This right has specifically been written into the Bankruptcy Act, the Railway Labor Act and the Norris-La-Guardia Act. Language from the latter law was incorporated in the National Recovery Act, Section 7a. The exercise of the right to organize and bargain collectively is essential to the economic and social progress of wage earners. Workers understand full well that neither Government nor industry will confer upon them all the economic benefits to which they are entitled. The real instrumentality which the worker must utilize in order to promote his economic welfare is his trade union. With it he can achieve much through the operation and application of the National Recovery Act, but without it he will fail to gain the minimum of benefits provided in the Act. In fact, the National Recovery Act has served to emphasize the need of wage earner organization, cooperation and collective action. That fact has been demonstrated in the formation and application of industrial codes of fair practice. The trade union will ever be the medium through which workers can realize the full enjoyment of the benefits of legislation which proclaims the legal right of working people to organize, bargain collectively, and be represented by representatives of their own choosing.

The National Recovery Act accepts three basic groups as constituting industry; employers, representing the invested interests, employees or the producing workers, and the consumers. These are the distinct functional groups in the business fabric that constitute our economic civilization.

To make possible the necessary organization to serve as the agencies through which the Recovery Administration could function the Act specifically cleared away the legal difficulties that kept trade associations and trade unions from operating effectively. In Congressional discussion of the legislative proposal, the trade association and the trade union were accepted as the machinery implied in the measure.

Conscious of the fact that lack of organization among wage earners had been a major factor in the unbalance in distribution of national income which was one of the causes of our economic breakdown, Labor regarded the passage of the National Recovery Act as imposing an obligation upon wage earners to organize in trade unions. Wage earners have been quick to seize the opportunity for organization which the legislation affords them. After four years of uncertainties of unemployment and loss of savings, wage earners turn eagerly to an agency that provides opportunity for effectively bettering their conditions and giving them a greater degree of security. Accordingly, both spontaneous and directed organizing campaigns have been vigorously under way. More charters per day since July 1 have been granted to federal labor unions than at any previous time for which we have records.

The age-long struggle for human justice has centered around some phase of the right to representation for those affected by decisions. Politically, this principle was first proposed so that citizens might have a voice in taxation levied upon their money and properties. Since the right of representation was established in taxation, it has been gradually extending throughout the political field. With the changes going on in production and in the organization of our economic life, the high degree of interdependence in economic welfare and relationships has centralized decisions that involve working conditions, incomes, or the distributions of the returns from joint work. Decisions on these points mean justice or injustice in those things which constitute the foundations of living.

The work of one's hands and mind is in a very special sense personal and does not lose its personal quality, even when the worker joins a work organization housed under factory conditions and control over his work and product has passed entirely from under his control. Even though the worker has merged with groups associated together for carrying on a great production enterprise, his sense of justice is outraged if he has no voice in making decisions about his work.

The right to participations in decisions which concern us either personally or by representation, is a principle growing out of the facts of human nature and human experience. Representation is either direct or through organized channels. To secure this fundamental right is the primary purpose of the labor movement.

The National Recovery Administration in attempting to direct planning in industry, is setting up industrial policies and standards that affect wage earners profoundly. The whole organization of industry, trade practices, accounting and recording procedures, declaration of dividends, reserves, et cetera, directly condition and control the opportunities and sources within which standards for wage earners must be fixed. In order to exercise any real control wage earners must have the right of representation where decisions are made that limit their own opportunities.

The right of representation is essential to developing balanced data upon which to make decisions to assure balance in economic progress and, hence, sustained prosperity. Labor maintains, therefore, that if the Recovery Act is to achieve its purposes—jobs for the unemployed and increased buying power—representatives of wage earners must have a voice in every stage of code making. Inequitable distribution of income and unemployment were the result of an industrial control from which Labor was excluded. We cannot expect to reverse these two causes of economic disaster unless specific provisions are made for wage earner representation and participation in every stage of control. The A. F. of L. declares that labor representation in the drafting of code proposals in every stage of code hearing before the National Recovery Administration and in the enforcement and administrative agencies provided by the code, is essential to achieving the purposes of the National Recovery Act and to meeting the requirements of human justice.

(p. 81) In order to move forward forces started toward recovery on a large scale without losing the time necessary for industries to organize and work out codes, the President asked trade groups and individual employers to make agreements with him. Evidently, these agreements were designed to be the instrumentality for turning the tides of business upward. The plan was three-fold.

The employers' part is to act at once and all together to submit and scrupulously comply with agreements with the President to shorten hours and raise wages, and to cooperate with employees in peaceful adjustment of differences.

The employees' part is to do their best on the job and to cooperate with NRA and employers in peaceful adjustments of differences.

The public's part—and especially the part of women (who control the bulk of buying)—is to support all those employers and employees who do their part to put breadwinners back to work.

The blue eagle was adopted as the insignia of cooperation under this plan which proposed to get an appreciable proportion of the unemployed back to work by Labor Day.

The machinery set up to carry out this program included district recovery boards, state recovery boards, state recovery councils.

The district corresponded with each of the districts laid out by the Department of Commerce, 24 in number. The President appointed the boards, selecting as representatives those prominent in each manufacture, retail trade, wholesale trade, banking, farming, labor and social services, to serve without compensation.

The state recovery boards of nine members were appointed by the President so as to be truly representative of commercial, industrial, labor and civic interests.

The state recovery council is made up of persons designated by state, labor, manufacturing, trade, civic, social service or welfare organization, association or club. The council is to make necessary recommendations to the state board which receives and acts upon all matters referred to it by the NRA and district boards.

The Administration later sent telegrams to local organizations urging them to designate representatives to serve on a local compliance board for towns and cities. Each compliance board shall consist of two employee representatives—one of industrial workers and the other trade; two employers, one industry and one trade; one consumer and one lawyer; these six shall select a chairman. We earnestly urge local unions to see to it that all union groups are fully and adequately represented on state councils and local committees.

The Blanket Agreement follows:

(Authorized by section 4(a) National Industrial Recovery Act)

"During the period of the President's emergency reemployment drive, that is to say, from August 1 to December 31, 1933, or to any earlier date of approval of a code of fair competition to which he is subject, the undersigned hereby agrees with the President as follows:

(1) After August 31, 1933, not to employ any person, under 16 years of age, except that persons between 14 and 16 may be employed (but not in manufacturing or mechanical industries) for not to exceed 3 hours per day and those hours between 7 a.m. and 7 p.m. in such work as will not interfere with hours of day school.

(2) Not to work any accounting, clerical, banking, office, service, or sales employees (except outside salesmen) in any store, office, department, establishment, or public utility, or on any automotive or horse-drawn passenger, express, delivery, or freight service, or in any other place or manner, for more than 40 hours in any 1 week and not to reduce the hours of any store or service operation to below 52 hours in any 1 week, unless such hours were less than 52 hours per week before July 1, 1933, and in the latter case not to reduce such hours at all.

(3) Not to employ any factory or mechanical worker or artisan more than a maximum week of 35 hours until December 31, 1933, but with the right to work a maximum week of 40 hours for any 6 weeks within this period; and not to employ any worker more than 8 hours in any 1 day.

(4) The maximum hours fixed in the foregoing paragraphs (2) and (3) shall not apply to employees in establishments employing not more than two persons in towns of less than 2,500 population which towns are not part of a larger trade area; nor to registered pharmacists or other professional persons employed in their profession; nor to employees in a managerial or executive capacity, who now receive more than $35 per week; nor to employees on emergency maintenance and repair work; nor to very special cases where restrictions of hours of highly skilled workers on continuous processes would unavoidably reduce production but, in any such special case, at least time and one third shall be paid for hours worked in excess of the maximum. Population for the purposes of this agreement shall be determined by reference to the 1930 Federal census.

(5) Not to pay any of the classes of employees mentioned in paragraph (2) less than $15 per week in any city of over 500,000 population, or in the immediate trade area of such city; nor less than $14.50 per week in any city of between 250,000 and 500,000 population, or in the immediate trade area of such city; nor less than $14 per week in any city of between 2,500 and 250,000 population, or in the immediate trade area of such city; and in towns of less than 2,500 population to increase all wages by not less than 20 percent, provided that this shall not require wages in excess of $12 per week.

(6) Not to pay any employee of the classes mentioned in paragraph (3) less than 40 cents per hour unless the hourly rate for the same class of work on July 15, 1929, was less than 40 cents per hour, in which latter case not to pay less than the hourly rate on July 15, 1929, and in no event less than 30 cents per hour. It is agreed that this paragraph establishes a guaranteed minimum rate of pay regardless of whether the employee is compensated on the basis of a time rate or on a piece work performance.

(7) Not to reduce the compensation for employment now in excess of the minimum wages hereby agreed to (notwithstanding that the hours worked in such employment may be hereby reduced) and to increase the pay for such employment by an equitable readjustment of all pay schedules.

(8) Not to use any subterfuge to frustrate the spirit and intent of this agreement which is, among other things, to increase employment by a universal covenant, to remove obstructions to commerce, and to shorten hours and to raise wages for the shorter week to a living basis.

(9) Not to increase the price of any merchandise sold after the date hereof over the price on July 1, 1933, by more than is made necessary by actual increases in production, replacement, or invoice costs of merchandise, or by taxes or other costs resulting from action taken pursuant to the Agricultural Adjustment Act, since July 1, 1933, and, in setting such price increases, to give full weight to probable increases in sales volume and to refrain from taking profiteering advantage of the consuming public.

(10) To support and patronize establishments which also have signed this agreement and are listed as members of NRA (National Recovery Administration).

(11) To cooperate to the fullest extent in having a code of fair competition submitted by his industry at the earliest possible date, and in any event before September 1, 1933.

(12) Where, before June 16, 1933, the undersigned had contracted to purchase goods at a fixed price for delivery during the period of this agreement, the undersigned will make an appropriate adjustment of said fixed price to meet any increase in cost caused by the seller having signed this President's Reemployment Agreement or having become bound by any code of fair competition approved by the President.

(13) This agreement shall cease upon approval by the President of a code to which the undersigned is subject; or, if the NRA so elects, upon submission of a code to which the undersigned is subject and substitution of any of its provisions for any of the terms of this agreement.

(14) It is agreed that any person who wishes to do his part in the President's reemployment drive by signing this agreement, but who asserts that some particular provision hereof, because of peculiar circumstances, will create great and unavoidable hardship, may obtain the benefits hereof by signing this agreement and putting it into effect and then, in a petition approved by a representative trade association of his industry, or other representative organization designated by NRA, may apply for a stay of such provision pending a summary investigation by NRA, if he agrees in such application to abide by the decision of such investigation. This agreement is entered into pursuant to section 4(a) of the National Industrial Recovery Act and subject to all the terms and conditions required by sections 7(a) and 10(b) of that act."

Employers were given opportunity to modify the blanket amendment by offering substitute provisions for wages and hours adaptable to their own industries. Many of these provisions were not at all acceptable to the workers affected who had no opportunity to present their objections due to the desire of the Administration to secure immediate results.

Because of the speed with which these Presidential agreements were acted upon, many questions and protests have arisen against vague and misleading terms and efforts to lengthen hours and cut pay. Efforts are being made to remedy abuses. It is fortunate that these agreements are recognized as only temporary expedients, to be replaced by the code of each separate industry. The purpose of the re-employment agreement was to provide more jobs and more purchasing power quickly so as to sustain increased business activity.

The Agricultural Adjustment Act which was drafted and enacted to meet the desperate straits of those dependent on the farming industry, delegated authority to the Secretary of Agriculture to administer the Act. The purpose of the Act is to raise prices of agricultural commodities. The Secretary is given control over agricultural commodities in the field through every stage of processing together with prices. This wide, vertical control brings many industrial workers under AAA administration. An agreement has been reached distinguishing the agricultural workers from the industrial, allocating the former to the AAA and the latter to the NRA.

Agricultural workers are all those employed by farmers on the farm when they are engaged in growing and preparing for sale the products of the soil and/or livestock; also, all labor used in growing and preparing perishable agricultural commodities for market in original perishable fresh form. When workers are employed in processing farm products or preparing them for market, beyond the stage customarily performed on the farm, such workers are not to be deemed agricultural workers.

As a working arrangement, when industrial workers are employed in an industry coming under the Agricultural Act, wages and hours are referred to the NRA. The difficulty with this plan is that distinctly labor issues are decided apart from trade union practices and industrial methods that directly influence decisions on wages and hours. Workers are participating partners in industries in which they are employed and their incomes and working conditions are affected by all decisions which are coordinating forces within the industry.

To protect the effort at recovery from the backsets and disorganization that would arise from strikes and lockouts, the President of the United States created the National Labor Board to serve as an agency for conciliation and arbitration. There seemed a likelihood of serious and widespread strikes arising from dissatisfaction and misunderstanding with provisions of the blanket agreement, and it was thought wise to deal with such situations before they precipitated more serious difficulties.

The theory upon which the organization of the National Labor Board was formed is that it shall be composed of equal representatives of Labor and industry, with an impartial chairman appointed by the President of the U.S. Senator Robert F. Wagner, author of the National Recovery Act, was appointed by the President to serve as Chairman of the National Labor Board.

The Board has already acted upon a number of industrial disputes, and has brought about the settlement of a number of serious industrial controversies.

Because the Board was recently created, it has not yet had time to develop a plan of permanent procedure, nor has it formed a complete organization for the consideration and settlement of industrial disputes calling for consideration and action. We understand that the National Labor Board has been established as a part of the permanent administrative machinery of the National Recovery Act. It will function continuously and will be available for service in the settlement of industrial controversies which may arise and which cannot be settled directly between the representatives of employers and employees.

(P. 481) Under the National Recovery Act, Congress appropriated $3,300,000,000 for public works and other purposes as a means of stimulating employment throughout the country; The expenditure of this vast sum calls for action by local and state legislative bodies, executive officials and boards and commissions to authorize, plan and develop programs of state and local public works, in addition to the distinctive federal projects.

The A. F. of L. hereby appeals to the President of the United States, to the Department of the Interior, and to other divisions of the Federal Government, and to the officers of state and local governments throughout the United States to expedite the public works program by all proper and reasonable means, to the end that it may be made speedily effective for the purpose of reducing unemployment and stimulating business . . .

(1934, pp. 89, 472) For more than a year the government, Labor and industry have been engaged in a gigantic attempt to restore prosperity to this country, and to bring about such changes in the industrial system of the country as will guard against a recurrence of the depression under which we have been suffering for more than four years, and which a year ago resulted in an almost complete breakdown of banking and of business. This attempt, in so far as industry is concerned, has been carried on under the National Industrial Recovery Act.

Under this Act, Labor expected three principal benefits: increased employment through the establishment of a shorter work week; increased purchasing power in the hands of the millions of workers through the establishment of higher wage; the right to organize into trade unions without fear of restraint, coercion, or intimidation on the part of employers and, so organized, the right to bargain collectively for the establishment of satisfactory wages, hours, and working conditions. By the extent to which these purposes have been fulfilled, the success of the NRA may be judged from Labor's interests.

When the NRA became effective last year, wages had reached such low levels that millions of workers among those still employed, even in the long work-week which prevailed, were not making a living wage. Hourly wage rates of 8, 10, 12, and 15 cents prevailed in many industries. Weekly earnings had sunk to levels undreamed of during the years preceding the depression. Competition among employers for the little business remaining was fierce, and competitive prices of goods were based upon constantly lowered wages. The situation of the workers of the country was desperate.

It was in this situation that code making began. The theory back of codes, insofar as wages were concerned, was that competition based on low wages would be eliminated through the fair trades practices of codes; that while a single unit in an industry might very conceivably be unable to raise wages under former competitive conditions, all units in any given industry might very well increase wages simultaneously; that only through drastic wage increases could sufficient purchasing power be created to provide a market for the products of industry.

Codes set minimum wages, below which no unscrupulous or inefficient employer could go in payment of his workers. In this the codes were intended to and did benefit large numbers of unskilled men and women in industry. In some industries the minimum wages fixed in the codes raised hourly wage rates for an overwhelming majority of workers in the industry. This was true, for example, in the furniture industry, in the cotton textile industry, and in many others, where wages had been especially depressed. It is, however, unfair to judge the effect of the codes upon even these groups of workers by increases in hourly wage rates. This has been the tendency of both industry and the Administration, and has led to exaggerated statements of the benefits large groups of workers have received from code wages.

Of primary importance to the worker are weekly earnings. It is upon the amount in the pay envelope at the end of the week that the worker and his family must live. From a consideration of weekly wages, it becomes clear that minimum wage rates in the code have been set so low that the purpose of the NRA has been completely nullified in a large portion of industry. The wages fixed by the codes are not high enough to make possible an improved standard of living or to create increased consumer demand for the products of industry.

Total payrolls have increased under the NRA as has employment. Considering July, 1933, as the month just prior to the institution of the new program, under the President's Reemployment Agreement, there has been a 16.9 per cent increase in July, 1934, in the payrolls of sixteen industrial groups which report to the Bureau of Statistics. During the same period, July, 1933, to July, 1934, employment in the same reporting industries increased by 9.8 per cent. Individual average weekly wages in the same industries increased 6.4 per cent, while cost of living increased 6.3 per cent. This meant that the employees in these industries are at the same position in regard to purchasing power as they held before the NRA. This is far from carrying out the purpose of the Recovery Administration. Increased payrolls, of course, mean increased purchasing power in the hands of the workers, but total payrolls are no indication of what is happening to the individual wage earners and earnings. In many industries codes have meant a very real decrease in wages and earnings rather than an increase, and large numbers of workers find themselves today in a less favored position, economically, than they were a year ago.

In fixing wage rates in codes, the tendency has been to overlook the relationship which must exist between hourly wage rates and hours of work. Weekly wages and employment must be maintained as hours of work are reduced. Weekly wages and employment maintained must be increased as the cost of living increases.

Average weekly earnings have decreased in automobiles, iron and steel, paper and pulp, and wool textiles. When the increase in the cost of living is considered, the real situation of these employees is seen to be even worse than the figures indicate. According to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, the cost of living in June, 1934, was 6.3 percent higher than a year ago. While no figure is as yet available for July, 1934, it is certain that there was a further increase in the cost of living during that month.

Even in a number of the industries listed in which average weekly wages have shown an increase, that increase is not sufficient to compensate for the increases in the cost of living. This is true of cotton textiles, daily newspapers, petroleum, transit, and wholesale trade. These millions of workers have less purchasing power today than they had a year ago.

Minimum wages fixed in codes were to apply only to the least skilled workers in the industry, to those performing common labor. It has been obvious from the beginning that without some protection extended to skilled workers, the tendency on the part of employers would be to make the minimum wage the maximum, and to reduce wages of skilled groups to compensate for increases in the wages of the unskilled. To protect the skilled worker it has been recommended again and again by Labor that protection be given wages for groups of employees or occupations according to trade, industry or subdivision of industry, the experience of the workers, and the regions concerned, as would follow from the application of Section 7(b) (see later discussion). To this the Administration has been consistently opposed. Codes have for this reason failed almost completely to protect the higher-paid groups of employees. In many cases these groups have suffered significant decreases in wages. In the electrical industry, for example, a substantial loss in weekly wages by nearly all employees in the industry has resulted from the adoption of the code. In one plant average weekly wages of $32.00 to $35.00 were reduced to $20.00 and $22.00 by the adoption of the code.

In a few industries, despite the position taken by the Administration, wage scales above the minimum have been written into the codes. This is true of men's clothing, coat and suit, hosiery, graphic arts, and motion picture codes. In the vast majority of codes, however, no protection has been given skilled workers. Some codes actually provide for reductions in weekly pay proportional to the reduction in hours of work brought about by the codes; others ignore the higher paid workers; still others—and this in a majority—include meaningless and unenforceable provisions for adjustment in wages above the minimum, "so far as practicable," "in the light of all the circumstances," "an equitable adjustment upward," "the maintenance of differentials," and so on.

All of these provisions have proven to be completely useless. All kinds of subterfuges have been resorted to to reduce all wages to the minimum. Skilled employees have been reclassified as to occupations and duties to bring them into the minimum wage class; they have been discharged and rehired at the minimum rates of pay.

Not only have higher paid employees been reduced to the minimum wage rates, but many "sub-standard" groups of workers have been recognized by the codes as entitled to less than code minimum rates. Differentials of all kinds have been used to cut down the minimum rates. Regional or population differentials exist in almost every code. The establishment of lower wage rates for negro workers than for white workers has been general. This threatens to make permanent the lower standard of living and the lower purchasing power of workers in the South as compared with those in the North. No investigation which has so far been made justifies these differentials. They tend to bring about a shift in industry, based solely upon the determination of certain employers to pay low wages. The same is true with regard to the wage differentials established in many codes, as between cities of different populations. These differentials are based upon the same assumption as is that of the North-South differential—that cost of living is less in one community or locality than in another. These differences in established wage rates create or intensify competition based upon labor costs.

The sex differential has been written into a majority of the codes. Operations performed by women workers are placed on a lower wage level than those performed by men. Lower rates are established for learners, apprentices, junior workers, and handicapped workers. All of these differentials are highly undesirable and can tend only to destroy the benefits the codes should bring to the common or unskilled workers.

It seems obvious that codes must be revised to increase minimum wages, to eliminate groups of workers now below the minimum rates, and to protect wages of higher paid groups of employees.

The problem of the regulation of hours through codes is closely tied up with that of unemployment. The measure of the success of the attempt to regulate hours of work is the number of persons who are still seeking jobs. Judged in such figures of unemployment the codes have as yet fallen far short of what was hoped and expected of them a year ago. The last estimate of unemployment, that for July, 1934, shows well over ten and a half million workers still unemployed. Slightly over two million of these men and women are at work on government projects, on PWA, in CCC camps, on relief projects of one kind or another. This leaves eight and a half million men and women without even temporary jobs. It was hoped that when codes were adopted covering the majority of workers, hours would be so shortened that the millions of unemployed would be absorbed. This hope has not been fully realized.

A survey of the codes adopted shows that industry has failed completely to realize the necessity for the shorter work week. There are now between five and six hundred approved codes of fair competition, covering, it has been estimated, some 18,000,000 workers. Of the codes so far approved, by far the vast majority fix a 40-hour week or longer. Less than a 30-hour week has been established in one code, that of the cast iron soil pipe industry; the 35 or 36-hour week has been established in the garment trades, in rubber tire manufacturing, and in a few miscellaneous industries, such as cement, the manufacture of motor fire apparatus, fire extinguisher appliances, rolling steel doors, shipbuilding. Even a flat minimum 40-hour week has been established in only about 100 codes; the majority establish the 40-hour week with so long a period of averaging or so many exceptions and exemptions as to mean, in reality, a much longer week. A significant number of industries have written into their code provisions for the 42, 44, 48, 52 and even 54-hour week. Many of the codes establish, in fact, a longer work week than that which has been in effect in the industry during the entire depression. The code for the iron and steel industry, for example, established a 40-hour week averaged over a period of six months, with a maximum of 48 hours in any one week, but, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics figures, at no time during the past year has that industry worked up to the code hours. During 1934 the highest average work week was 37.2 hours in June. In July the hours of work were down to 28.1 per week. The automobile code established a 40-hour week, averaged over a period of 8 months, and actually permitted 48 hours per week during the production season. Yet Bureau of Labor Statistics figures show that at no time since the adoption of the code has the industry worked up to its code hours. Even in March, 1934, the highest month since the code became effective, hours of work average only 39.5 per week. Such regulations can not be expected to have, and have not had, any effect upon the problem of unemployment by which the country is still confronted. Nothing can be expected in the way of new employment possibilities from an industry which, already on an actual 30 or 35-hour week, fixes a 40 or 48-hour maximum work week in its code. It has been the constant demand of Labor that hours of work be reduced to the point where the unemployed can be absorbed. It is estimated that between two and three million workers have found jobs in industry through the NRA. This is something, but it is not enough. Hours of work must be greatly reduced.

There is urgent need of more adequate information upon which to base changes in the codes. So far, no satisfactory system of reporting has been established by the Administration. There are many industries which have not yet made a single report to the Administration of what is taking place under the codes. We have entered upon a phase of national planning, which makes accurate information essential. Before it is possible to know the hours and wages which should prevail in an industry, conditions in that industry must be known. A flexible reduction in hours of work was suggested in March, 1934, when the Administration proposed that hours of work should be reduced by at least 10 per cent while wages should be increased 10 per cent. This was recognition on the part of the Administration that codes were not doing what had been expected of them in putting people back to work. But the suggestion was never followed through. Opposition from industry was prompt and vociferous. Recently, two attempts have been made to reduce hours of work; one in the cotton textile industry, with no corresponding raise in wage rates; the other by the Administration itself, in the cotton garment industry, when by executive order a 10 per cent reduction in hours of work and a 10 per cent increase in hourly wage rates was decreed, against the wishes of the industry.

These two attempts to shorten hours of work are important. That of the cotton textile industry puts an intolerable burden upon the workers in the industry. Decrease in hours of work, with no change in wage rates, has brought weekly earnings down to pre code levels. Average weekly earnings by July, 1934, had fallen to $11.00, while in some sections of the country weekly earnings were again as low as $5.00, $6.00, and $7.00. Accompanied as this reduction was by a constant effort to impose a stretch-out on the workers, it resulted in strike action.

The second attempt to regulate hours of work by administrative order represents a great victory for Labor. It is recognition by the Administration that industry is not in every case capable of self-government. Hours of work in the cotton garment industry have been longer than those in the majority of the garment trades; no reemployment was brought about by the code. Yet the industry refused to shorten hours of work. An impartial study by the Administration revealed that the 36-hour week would be more advantageous to the industry than was the longer work week, and that week was decreed, with an increase of 10 per cent in wage rates, to protect the employees against cuts in their weekly earnings. There are undoubtedly many other instances when similar governmental policy will have to be followed, to bring about the necessary reduction in hours of work and protect earnings.

There are certain weaknesses in the codes as they are at present drawn, which prevent reemployment of many workers. Chief among these weaknesses are those which provide for the averaging of hours of work over long periods of time, in some cases as long as over a complete calendar year; the exemption of many groups of employees from the hours provisions of the codes; the extension of maximum hours of work during peak seasons of the industries.

For highly seasonal industries an averaging provision really means a much longer maximum work week than the code pretends to fix, as the longer work week in effect during the production season, may be averaged out during the season of complete lay-off which occurs every year in industries such as automobiles, canning, fishing, and many others. Practically every code exempts maintenance, repair and even "preparation" employees from all regulations of hours; others exempt "skilled or key workers"; outside salesmen have been given no protection; cleaners, janitors, shipping and stock clerks, firemen, engineers, electricians, deliverymen, outside employees of all kinds, are completely outside code regulations in the majority of instances. Many of these people are still working 50, 56, 60 and even 70 hours per week. In many of the codes no limit whatever is placed upon the hours which employees may be forced to work during peak periods; very few codes define what constitutes a peak season.

It is impossible to estimate how many thousands of workers are kept out of jobs by these loose code provisions. Certainly, substantial reemployment would be opened up if the hours provisions of the codes were made definite; if all the exempted groups of employees were brought under code regulation; if peak seasons in industry were used to give added employment rather than to extend the hours of work.

It has already been made obvious that codes which contain these weaknesses are impossible of enforcement. Who, for example, is to be held responsible for the check upon a man's work throughout an entire year, to make certain that his hours of work have, in that time, not averaged more than 40? Clearly, the men concerned cannot themselves be expected to remember or to keep a record of the hours they work over a long period of time, so they cannot check upon the enforcement of this portion of the code. The most effective method of preventing overtime, that of payment for that overtime at not less than time and one-half, has not yet been incorporated in many codes. Of the first 400 codes adopted, 68 have no overtime provisions whatever. In a majority of the remainder, overtime, usually at the rate of time and one-third, applies only to special groups of employees, usually maintenance and repair employees. As yet, only an insufficient number of codes contain overtime provisions which affect production employees.

In one way, codes have fulfilled expectations. They have, with few exceptions, wiped out child labor. The vast majority of the codes now in effect prohibit the employment of children under 16 years of age; many codes prohibit the employment of persons under eighteen years of age in hazardous occupations or operations. These provisions offer new opportunities to hundreds of thousands of young people for education and for physical, moral and spiritual improvement and represent one of the real achievements of the NRA.

Homework, which has been so prevalent in many industries, and which has given the unscrupulous employer an advantage over the employer who wanted to pay decent wages, has been largely eliminated under the codes of fair competition. Work previously performed under unsanitary conditions in the homes, for wages unbelievably low, is now being done under code conditions. Safety and health provisions are gradually being worked out and incorporated in the codes, though this phase of protection to the workers has not advanced as rapidly as might be hoped. A special committee has been created by the NRA in cooperation with the American Federation of Labor, and the Department of Labor, for working out standards of safety and health for major groups of industries.

So far the place Labor has in the continuing agencies set up to administer and enforce codes is entirely unsatisfactory. Only in a very limited number of codes has Labor been able to secure representation on the code authorities. In less than 25 out of the more than 500 codes so far adopted has Labor achieved representation, and in only five or six of these instances has this been direct union representation on the code authorities. The administration of industrial recovery will be worked out primarily through the codes; and, until Labor is in a position to participate effectively in this administration, it cannot hope to secure the benefits from the NRA which it has every right to expect. Nor can the NRA itself expect to function in a satisfactory fashion.

Recommendations have again and again been made to the National Recovery Administration that Labor representatives be placed on all Code Authorities. These Labor representatives must be given a place on the Code Authorities equal in power and in privilege to all other members of the Code Authorities. This means that the Labor representatives must have full access to all information of the Code Authority in connection with the administration of the code; they must have the power to attend all meetings of the Code Authority. In no other way can they have adequate information of the policies adopted by the Code Authority, and in no other way can they influence those policies. The attempt has been made to give the Labor representatives on Code Authorities only advisory powers, and to make it impossible for them to attend meetings of the Code Authority except when they are specially invited to attend. This places them in a position where they can hope to accomplish little, and will entirely defeat the purposes which Labor has in mind when it demands representation on the Code Authorities.

To summarize briefly, then, the various ways in which the labor provisions of the codes as they are at present operating, must be amended to carry out the purposes of the National Recovery Act:

1. Wages must be increased to a point where the real income of the employees, their real purchasing power, is increased. So far the codes have failed, signally, to bring about such increase.

2. Hours of work must be reduced to the point where industry absorbs at least a considerable portion of the still vast army of unemployed.

3. An adequate system of reporting must be built up by NRA, as the only basis upon which future policies and plans can be built.

4. Labor must be given a place in code enforcement and administration. It becomes clearer daily that strongly organized unions are the most effective agency available for the enforcement of the codes. Labor is one of the three elements in the New Deal. As such, it has responsibilities which it is eager and able to assume. This it can do only by securing a place in all administrative and enforcement agencies set up under the codes.

With 515 codes now approved, it is estimated by the Research and Planning Division of the National Recovery Administration that approximately 95 per cent of all employees who are to be included under codes are now working under approved codes. An estimate of the total number of employees who are to come under codes is 24,000,000 as of the 1930 census. Inasmuch as the Labor Department index of employment for manufacturing industries was 82.4 in May, 1934, as compared with 104.8 as an average for the year 1929, employment has been reduced approximately 20 per cent. Therefore, there are roughly 19,000,000 employees in the country who should be under codes, and 18,000,000 now included under codes.

These figures, however, are based on the 95 per cent estimate of the Administration. Inasmuch as this figure has been quoted for several months, and since there have been certain major changes in policy during that time, the authenticity of the figure might well be questioned. For example, we have the whole problem of service trades and industries, many of which were exempt from code provisions under the executive order of

May 26. It is true that "provisions covering child labor maximum hours of work and minimum rates of pay are the mandatory provisions of Section 7 (a) and 10 (b)," and are supposed to remain in effect. It is true, furthermore, that under the executive order of June 28, agreements may be entered into by "such service trades, not heretofore codified, as shall hereafter be designated by the Administrator for Industrial Recovery." The action which was taken by the cleaners and dyers on June 20, when they turned back their code to General Johnson, shows very clearly the unsettled condition which now prevails in this group of industry.

Inasmuch as in 1929, 800,000 persons were employed in hotels, laundries, and dry-cleaning establishments, it is obvious that a tremendous group of workers are not receiving the protection of the National Industrial Recovery Act. The workers in public utilities also have not yet been included under code provisions, although approximately 1,000,000 employees are involved. Certain major questions of policy within the administration have delayed any definite action on these codes for a period of months.

Finally, there are still thousands of workers gainfully employed in enterprises which might be considered as industrial, or which might be considered as agricultural. Probably the most important group in this classification includes fruit and vegetable packing and shipping. Reports from the northwest, from California, and from the southwest, as well as from Florida, indicate very clearly that many phases of the work required might well be considered as industrial.

Another example is that of the greenhouse workers, whose hours of employment are not controlled directly by climatic conditions. Since the canning industry is already under an approved code, serious consideration should be given to the inclusion of thousands of other workers throughout the country who are engaged in work which might be considered a parallel.

President Roosevelt and his advisors have recently been spending much time on plans for the reorganization of NRA on what is presumed to be a permanent basis. The first step in such reorganization is a complete realignment of the codes of fair competition. The classification of industries which has been worked out corresponds closely to the grouping of the Census Bureau. There will be 22 industrial groupings. It is the statement of the Administration that this regrouping will assure that allied industries receive identical treatment on common problems; that many allied codes may merge by voluntary action of the industries concerned; that more accurate statistical information may be secured on industries and trades. NRA does not propose that the 500 odd codes now in operation shall be cut down to 22 or to any other given number. It does propose to make possible code combinations as can be worked out between the groups or industries concerned.

In any reorganization of the NRA there are certain major policies which should be adopted. Briefly, these are:

1. The NRA should be reorganized from the point of view of a longer period than that to June 16, 1935. It becomes increasingly evident that some action will be necessary for perhaps a long time to come. Policies should therefore be considered from a long time rather than a purely emergency point of view.

2. Codes should be reopened for such changes as will bring about the original purpose of the Act—reemployment and increased wages.

3. Codes should be reopened upon petition by Labor as well as upon the initiative of industry or the Administration.

4. Compliance machinery should be divorced more completely from the NRA administration. An independent compliance board, answerable directly to the President, would be better able to assure unbiased and prompt action.

5. Every resource of the government should be used for the enforcement of the code provisions and the decisions of the labor relations boards.

6. Collective bargaining between bona fide trade unions and employers must be assured through enforcement of Section 7 (a) and the destruction of company unions.

7. Adequate information, reporting and planning agencies must be created by the government.

8. Labor must be made an active partner in the supposed partnership of government, industry and Labor.

9. Service industries should be included under codes. The distinction between intra-state and inter-state commerce is not a legitimate basis for the extension of protection to some workers and the denial of protection to others.

10. The entire agricultural labor population has so far been left without protection in regard to wages, hours, organization, or in dealing with employers. Some extension of the National Recovery Act to the field of agricultural labor should be made, either through a broadening of the Act now in existence, or a supplementary Act pertaining to agricultural labor.

It has been estimated that approximately 18,000,000 employees are now working under approved codes of fair competition.

It is significant to compare these figures with a recent report from the National Recovery Administration on the adjustment of code complaints by state NRA directors. The adjustment of "some 928 complaints during the two-week period ended August 4, netted 3,867 workers throughout the country a total of $75,394 in back wages." In other words, four workers in every 20,000 received back wages.

If all existing code violations had been reported, and equitable settlement on this basis had been made, it might be said that the compliance machinery is working to perfection; but since we know of widespread violations throughout the country with regard to code minimum rates, and rates above the minimum, which code provisions should have effected, it is obvious that the machinery which has been set up by the government is dealing effectively only with a negligible portion of all violations.

Delays in compliance machinery have worked untold hardship and have gone far toward breaking the spirit of workers throughout the country who, one year ago, were looking forward to a very definite improvement in standards of living under the protection of the government. Delays have been experienced not only in getting code complaints before government agencies which would take action, but also in the adjustments of these complaints which were ordered. The custody of the Blue Eagle is one of our major problems. So long as the power to withdraw the Blue Eagle is in the control of the National Recovery Administration, where powerful industries can exercise such pressure, we cannot well expect to secure equitable adjustments of code violations. One extremely important consideration in this connection is the fact that thousands of workers are still too much in fear of their jobs to report labor conditions which they know are not in accordance with those established by the code.

The President, in his executive order of May 15, has protected workers who report code violations against discharge or demotion. We can never expect to secure code compliance until all violations are reported, and we can not expect that violations so reported will be equitably adjusted, until certain changes have been made in the compliance machinery.

In August, 1933, when the blanket code became effective generally, local compliance boards were established throughout the country. It was found almost universally, however, that the close relationship which existed between these boards and local chambers of commerce, made code adjustments virtually impossible.

In the early part of this year state directors of compliance boards were appointed in every state, and in most cases there was an officer whose duty it was to enforce code labor provisions.

Experiences with these agencies in different state have varied with state, and with personalities. The report mentioned above is issued at the time when this machinery is giving way to compliance boards in every state, made up of a government officer with a representative of management, and a representative of Labor, and similar local boards in many industrial communities.

There is every reason to believe that these agencies will be more effective than their predecessors. The adjustment of code violations through agencies set up under individual codes is still in its infancy. We know that there are certain problems within almost every industry that are peculiar to that industry. The stretch-out in the textile industry, and in the wheat flour milling industry, for example, is a device which has been employed by management in each of these industries in order to offset, so far as possible, any cost increases which might have resulted from the code; but in each of these industries the stretch-out is an industrial problem, and if it is to be handled effectively, it must be taken care of through a separate agency within that industry in which Labor and management have equal representation and which has the necessary responsibility and authority.

Up to the present time, hour and wage violations, and 7 (a) violations have been kept quite distinct, to be handled through different branches of the government. If the codes are to have any direct results in bringing about greater employment and increased purchasing power, hour and wage provisions must be enforced. The enforcement program is developing, but organized labor throughout the country must be permitted to have a voice in shaping this program, and must welcome its responsibilities under this program, if labor conditions as stipulated in code provisions are to become a reality.

The inclusion of Section 7 (a) in every code is mandatory. This section provides that employees "shall have the right to organize and bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing, and shall be free from the interference, restraint, or coercion of employers of labor, or their agents, in the designation of such representatives or in self-organization or in other concerted activities for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection." Labor believed when the Act was adopted that it was at last freed from all restrictions upon membership in trade unions and that collective bargaining was not only looked upon by the Administration as a method of fixing wages, hours, and working conditions, but that unions would receive the active support of the Administration in organization and in collective bargaining.

It is in regard to Section 7 (a) that the most cruel disillusion of the workers regarding the NRA has occurred. Convinced that they were protected in doing so, hundreds of thousands—even millions—of workers joined unions. But employer resistance to organization in bona fide unions was by no means destroyed or even weakened by the adoption of this portion of the law. Willing to accept the benefits which the codes brought them through relaxation in the anti-trust laws and through elimination of destructive competition, they had no intention of complying with their responsibilities under the collective bargaining portion of the Act.

Workers who joined unions in good faith, therefore, found themselves dismissed for no other reason than that they had accepted, at face value, the promises contained in the law; company unions were created by employers to prevent the growth of real unions, and to forestall real collective bargaining. Agencies set up by the NRA for the enforcement of Section 7 (a) were either unwilling or unable to enforce the law, or delayed so long in its enforcement that unions concerned were weakened and even destroyed, and faith in this portion of the Act lost.

The first agency set up for solution of problems arising under Section 7 (a) of the Act, as well as the settlement of industrial disputes involving strikes or lockouts, was the National Labor Board, under the chairmanship of Senator Robert F. Wagner. Under this board, 18 Regional Labor Boards were created. The National and the Regional Labor Boards were bipartisan in character, each under the direction of a neutral chairman. While these boards settled many disputes, they had not sufficient power to make them effective agencies in establishing principles for industrial relations in the new order evolving under the codes.

Senator Wagner was himself one of the first persons to realize that the National Labor Board and the Regional Labor Boards were not effective agencies for securing compliance with Section 7 (a). He, therefore, introduced into the Senate the Wagner Labor Disputes Bill. This bill proposed to outlaw company unions as agencies for collective bargaining, to give the National Labor Board power to hold elections to determine the collective bargaining agency in any establishment or plant, to give the board power to subpoena witnesses and to take testimony under oath. This bill was not approved. In its place Congress passed Joint Resolution No. 44, creating a new National Labor Relations Board. This resolution is as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

That in order to further effectuate the policy of Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act, and in the exercise of the powers therein and herein conferred, the President is authorized to establish a board or boards authorized and directed to investigate issues, facts, practices, or activities of employers or employees in any controversies arising under Section 7 (a) of said Act or which are burdening or obstructing, or threatening to burden or obstruct, the free flow of interstate commerce, the salaries, compensations, and expenses of the board or boards and necessary employees being paid as provided in Section 2 of the National Industrial Recovery Act.

Sec. 2. Any board so established is hereby empowered, when it shall appear in the public interest, to order and conduct an election by a secret ballot of any of the employees of any employer, to determine by what person or persons or organization they desire to be represented in order to insure the right of employees to organize and to select their representatives for the purpose of collective bargaining as defined in Section 7 (a) of said Act and now incorporated herein.

For the purpose of such election such a board shall have the authority to order the production of such pertinent documents or the appearance of such witnesses to give testimony under oath, as it may deem necessary to carry out the provisions of this resolution. Any order issued by such a board under the authority of this section may, upon application of such board or upon petition of the person or persons to whom such order is directed, be enforced or reviewed, as the case may be, in the same manner, so far as applicable, as is provided in the case of an order of the Federal Trade Commission under the Federal Trade Commission Act.

Sec. 3. Any such board, with the approval of the President, may prescribe such rules and regulations as it deems necessary to carry out the provisions of this resolution with reference to the investigations authorized in Section 1 and to assure freedom from coercion in respect to all elections.

Sec. 4. Any person who shall knowingly violate any rule or regulation authorized under Section 3 of this resolution or impede or interfere with any member or agent of any board established under this resolution in the performance of his duties, shall be punishable by a fine of not more than $1,000 or by imprisonment for not more than one year, or both.

Sec. 5. This resolution shall cease to be in effect, and any board or boards established hereunder shall cease to exist, on June 16, 1935, or sooner if the President shall by proclamation, or the Congress shall by joint resolution, declare that the emergency recognized by Section 1 of the National Industrial Recovery Act has ended.

Nothing in this resolution shall prevent or impede or diminish in any way the right of employees to strike or engage in other concerted activities.

On June 29, 1934, President Roosevelt issued the following Executive Order, creating the National Labor Relations Board:

By virtue and pursuant to the authority vested in me under Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act (Ch. 90, 48 Stat. 195, Tit. 15, U.S.C., Sec. 701) and under joint resolution approved June 19, 1934 (Public Res. 44, 73rd Congress), and in order to effectuate the policy of said title and the purposes of the said joint resolution, it is hereby ordered as follows:

CREATION OF THE NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD

Sec. 1. (A) There is hereby created in connection with the Department of Labor, a board to be known as the National Labor Relations Board (hereinafter referred to as the board) . . . Each member of the board shall receive a salary of $10,000 a year and shall not engage in any other business, vocation, or employment. Two members of the board shall constitute a quorum. A vacancy in the board shall not impair the right of the remaining members to exercise all the powers of the board.

(B) The board shall have authority to appoint such employees, and without regard to the provisions of the Civil Service laws, such attorneys, special experts and examiners as it deems necessary for its own functions and for the functions of such regional industrial and special boards as may be designated or established in accordance with subsections 3 (a) (1) and 3 (A) (2) of this order. The power, however, shall not be construed to authorize the board to appoint mediators, conciliators, and statistical experts when the services of such persons may be obtained through the Secretary of Labor in accordance with sub-section 4 (A) of this order.

Original Jurisdiction of the Board.

Sec. 2. The board is hereby authorized:

(A) To investigate issues, facts, practices and activities of employers or employees in any controversies arising under Section 7 (a) of the National Industrial Recovery Act or which are burdening or obstructing, or threatening to burden or obstruct, the free flow of interstate commerce; and,

(B) To order and conduct elections and on its own initiative to take steps to enforce its orders in the manner provided in Section 2 of Public Resolution 44, Seventy-third Congress; and

(C) Whenever it is in the public interest, to hold hearings and make findings of fact regarding complaints of discrimination against or discharge of employees or other alleged violations of Section 7 (a) of the National Industrial Recovery Act and such parts of any code or agreement as incorporate said section; and

(D) To prescribe, with the approval of the President, such rules and regulations as are authorized by Section 3 of Public Resolution 44, Seventy-third Congress, and to recommend to the President such other rules and regulations relating to collective bargaining, labor representation and labor elections as the President is authorized to prescribe by Section 10 (a) of the National Industrial Recovery Act.

(E) Upon the request of the parties to a labor dispute, to act as a Board of Voluntary Arbitration or to select a person or agency for voluntary arbitration.

Relation to Other Labor Boards.

Sec. 3. (A) The board is hereby authorized and directed:

(1) To study the activities of such boards as have been or may hereafter be created to deal with industrial or labor relations, in order to report through the Secretary of Labor to the President whether such boards should be designated as special boards and given the powers that the President is authorized to confer by Public Resolution 44, Seventy-third Congress; and,

(2) To recommend, through the Secretary of Labor, to the President the establishment, whenever necessary, of "regional labor relations boards," and special labor boards for particular industries vested with the powers that the President is authorized to confer by Public Resolution 44, Seventy-third Congress; and

(3) To receive from such regional, industrial and special boards as may be designated or established under the two preceding subsections reports of their activities and to review or hear appeals from such boards in cases in which (1) the board recommends review or (2) there is a division of opinion in the board or (3) the National Labor Relations Board deems review will serve the public interest.

(B) The National Labor Board created by Executive Order of August 5, 1933, and continued by Executive Order No. 6,511 of December 16, 1933, shall cease to exist on July 9, 1934; and each local or regional labor board, established under the authority of Section 2 (B) of the said Executive Order of December 16, 1933, if it is not designated in accordance with Subsection 3 (a) (1) of this order, shall cease to exist at such time as the National Labor Relations Board shall determine. The National Labor Relations Board shall have authority to conduct all investigations and proceedings being conducted by boards that are abolished by this subsection; and all records, papers and property of such board shall become records, papers and property of the National Labor Relations Board. All except $100,000 of the unexpended funds and appropriations for the use and maintenance of the National Labor Board shall be available for expenditure by the N.L.R.B. and such regional, industrial and special boards as may be designated or established in accordance with Subsections 3 (a) or 3 (a) (2) of this order. The remaining $100,000 of such unexpended funds and appropriations shall be transferred to the Secretary of Labor for the use of the conciliation service in the Department of Labor. All employees of boards that are abolished by this subsection shall be transferred to and become employees of the National Labor Relations Board at their present grades and salaries, but such transfer shall not be construed to give such employees any civil service or other permanent status.

Sec. 4. (A) The board is hereby authorized:

(1) To request the Secretary of Labor to exercise the power conferred upon him by Section 8 of the Act entitled "An Act to Create a Department of Labor" (Ch. 141, 37 Stat. 738) to appoint commissioners of conciliation; and,

(2) To request from time to time the Secretary of Labor to direct officers and employees of the Department of Labor to render services and furnish information and otherwise to aid the board in the performance of its duties.

(b) The board shall at the close of each month make, through the Secretary of Labor, to the President, a report in writing of its activities and the activities of such regional, industrial and special boards as have been designated or established in accordance with the recommendations of the board under subsections 3 (a) (1) and 3 (a) (2) of this order. Such reports shall state in detail cases heard, decisions rendered and the names, salaries, and duties of all officers and employees appointed under the authority of this order and receiving compensation directly or indirectly from the U.S.

(c) The National Labor Relations Board may decline to take cognizance of any labor dispute where there is another means of settlement provided for by agreement, industrial code, or law which has not been utilized.

(d) Whenever the National Labor Relations Board or any board designated or established in accordance with subsection 3 (A) (1) or 3 (A) (2) of this order has taken, or has announced its intention to take, jurisdiction of any case or controversy involving either Section 7 (A) of the National Industrial Recovery Act or Public Resolution 44, Seventy-third Congress, no other person or agency in the executive branch of the government, except upon the request of the National Labor Relations Board, or except as otherwise provided in subsection 3 (a) (3) of this order, shall take, or continue to entertain, jurisdiction of such case or controversy.

(E) Whenever the National Labor Relations Board or any board designated or established in accordance with subsections 3 (A) (1) or 3 (A) (2) of this order has made a finding of facts, or issued any order in any case or controversy involving Section 7 (A) of the National Industrial Recovery Act or Public Resolution 44, Seventy-third Congress, such finding of facts and such order shall (except as otherwise provided in subsection 3 (A) (3) of this order or except as otherwise recommended by the National Labor Relations Board) be final and not subject to review by any person or agency in the executive branch of the government.

(F) Nothing in this order shall prevent, impede or diminish in any way the right of employees to strike or engage in other concerted activities.

This National Labor Relations Board has now been functioning since July 9, 1934. All cases of violation of Section 7 (a) are centered in this board unless special Labor Relations Boards have been created in the industries concerned.

In its first monthly report to the Secretary of Labor, the National Labor Relations Board published a statement of policy which largely coincided with the precedents laid down by the National Labor Board. The report stresses the importance of the adjudication of controversies arising under Section 7 (a) of the NRA as its most important task.

The following paragraph summarizes the approach of the National Labor Relations Board to the program:

While the old National Labor Board in the course of its 258 opinions established a number of principles which are so clear as to require no further discussion, these principles must constantly be applied to new situations in which the facts may be either in dispute or so different in texture from any preceding situation as to leave room for doubt or argument. In addition, questions are arising and will continue to arise under Section 7 (a) which have not been passed upon in any form by any tribunal. There is then no short cut. If Section 7 (a) is to be enforced, and it must be enforced, some agency of the government must pass authoritatively upon each unsettled case as it arises, and that we take to be the duty of this board.

In the short time in which the board has been in operation, it has moved with dispatch and decision to establish certain fundamental principles in industrial relations. Chief among such principles is that which establishes the right of the majority union to bargain and contract for all employees in a given craft or establishment. In the case of United Automobile Workers Federal Labor Union No. 18838 and the Houde Engineering Corporation, the National Labor Relations Board, on September 1, made known its decision that the majority union shall be considered the exclusive bargaining agency. In addition, the board further ruled that, when requested by the union, the company should enter into negotiations and endeavor in good faith to arrive at a collective agreement, covering terms of employment.

This decision, which follows that of the former National Labor Board in the Denver Tramway case, will make it impossible for companies to continue to bargain with collective unions when the bona fide trade unions can show that they are chosen by a majority of the employees as the collective bargaining agency. The board has acted definitely and promptly in a number of cases of discrimination for union activities. There is every indication that the National Labor Relations Board is going to be an effective agency for the enforcement of Section 7 (a).

The Regional Labor Boards set up under the former National Labor Board are continued under the new board, but are being reorganized as rapidly as possible. These boards are responsible to the National Labor Relations Board and will, of course, follow the policies adopted by the National Board. The tendency is to coordinate not only the Regional Boards, but labor relations boards for special industries under the National Labor Relations Board.

In addition to the provisions of Section 7 (a) on collective bargaining, there was a second portion of the National Recovery Act which gave definite promise to the workers that collective bargaining would be encouraged by the Administration. This is Section 7 (b) which provides that:

The President shall, so far as practicable, afford every opportunity to employers and employees in any trade or industry or subdivision thereof with respect to which the conditions referred to in clauses (1) and (2) of subsection (a) prevail, to establish by mutual agreement the standards as to the maximum hours of labor, minimum rates of pay, and such other conditions of employment as may be necessary in such trade or industry or subdivision thereof to effectuate the policy of this title; and the standards established in such agreements, when approved by the President, shall have the same effect as a code of fair competition, approved by the President under subsection (a) of section 3.

The intent of this clause is to create a set of labor standards in addition to the absolute minima written into the codes as adopted. This provision, if included in codes, would give the most effective incentive to a peaceful settlement of the problems between the management and the workers. Section 7 (a) provides a basis of collective bargaining which is to result in collective agreements. Section 7 (b) widens the scope of such agreements to give Labor the needed protection on a voluntary basis over and above the minimum requirements in the codes which cover only a fraction of the industrial labor. Standards worked out in this way would be the only possible means of extending the purposes of the National Recovery Act to cover the groups of skilled workers who have in many instances suffered considerably from low standards established in the codes or from the lack of any standards which would give them economic protection. Through this means it would be possible to place Labor on an equal basis with industry which has been encouraged and even forced to organize under the NRA.

This section has been included in one major code, that for the construction industry. In that industry, maximum hours of work, minimum rates of pay, and other working conditions are being determined through collective agreements approved, after hearing, by the Administration.

The following provision in the code establishes the principle of collective agreements on a regional basis:

Section 1. In each division or subdivision of the industry, as defined in the chapter incorporated in this code relating thereto, truly representative associations or groups of employers and employees respectively concerned, after proper notice and hearing and as a result of bona fide collective bargaining, may establish by mutual agreement (when approved by the President as provided in Section 7 (b) of the Act), for a specifically defined region or locality, the standards of hours of labor, rates of pay, and such other conditions of employment, relating to the occupations or types of operations in such division or subdivision, as may be necessary to effectuate the policy of Title I of the Act. For the purposes of this Section, the entire United States may be defined as a region. The terms of such an agreement between the employers and employees of a division or subdivision of the industry shall not be binding upon the employers and employees of any other division or subdivision of the industry.

After the President has approved any such agreement arrived at within any such division or subdivision, and after proper notice of such approval, it shall be deemed prima facie unfair competition for any employer in such division or subdivision to fail to comply with the standards of maximum hours of labor, minimum rates of pay, or other conditions of employment so approved and prescribed by the President, in respect of the performance within the defined region or locality of the types of operations concerned; and the failure of such an employer to desist from such unfair competition, after being given due notice and opportunity to be heard, shall constitute a violation of the requirements of this code.

(1934, pp. 106, 366, 472) There have been two distinct phases in the development of machinery for the settlement of disputes. When the National Recovery Act was first adopted, a general board was created by order of the President for the settlement of complaints involving Section 7 (a) and all disputes involving strike or lockout. This was the National Labor Board. It was without power. Its ability to settle disputes or to enforce the law lay entirely in its ability to mediate and conciliate. It had no power to hold elections, unless the company involved voluntarily agreed to such a decision, though a later Executive Order of the President attempted to extend this power to the board. The National Labor Board was created on August 5, and its original authority was to "consider, adjust and settle" disputes that might arise under the President's Reemployment Agreement.

At about the same time provision was made for a National Industrial Relations Board for the cotton textile industry. This board was an outgrowth of the "stretchout" investigation committee named during the code hearings. Devoid of statutory power and limited in the enforcement procedure by its close relationship with the Cotton Textile Code Authority, the Cotton Textile Board was impotent in any of its attempts to bring about effective enforcement of collective bargaining provisions of the law. Settlement of any labor controversy in the industry, under the procedure established by the board, is first to be attempted by the local factory committee and then by the state board with right of final determination of facts resting in the National Board. The enforcement of the law, however, in any case where Section 7 (a) is found to have been violated is limited to conciliation and mediation procedure. In cases of code violations, enforcement is effected by the Cotton Textile Code Authority or the NRA Compliance Division. "Good offices" of the board to mediate the nationwide dispute in the industry in September, 1934, were declined by Labor representatives, and a special board was created on September 4 under the Public Resolution 44, to take jurisdiction over the textile dispute.

The code for the bituminous coal industry established a National Bituminous Coal Labor Board consisting of the members of six regional boards. The National Board may act to decide matters of general policy affecting the public or the industry as a whole or to adjust disputes in more than one of the six divisions. Any controversies concerning hours, wages, conditions of employment or compliance with the Labor sections of the code are adjusted by negotiations between representatives of employers and employees meeting in mine or district conferences as provided in the collective agreement in force in the industry. If the dispute cannot be settled in this manner and "threatens to interrupt, or has interrupted, or is impairing the efficient operation of any mine or mines to such an extent as to restrain interstate commerce in the products thereof," it shall be referred to one of the six Regional Coal Labor Boards. The decision of the regional board "is to be accepted by the parties in dispute as effective for a provisional period of not longer than six months to be fixed by the board. The procedure established under the coal code approaches more nearly than any other instance the enforcement technique provided in the Railway Labor Act.

The Automobile Labor Board was created in March, 1934, as a result of the compromise settlement arrived at on March 25, through the mediation offices of the President of the United States. The unions of automobile workers realized fully that the settlement of March 25 was a compromise settlement, which they considered it their patriotic duty to accept, because they were asked to do so by the President. The board appointed by the President consists of a chairman, and one member representing the automobile companies and one representing the American Federation of Labor unions.

The jurisdiction of this board is limited to matters of discharge, discrimination, and representation. The board was authorized to set up a plan of proportional representation, which fortunately it has not done. Any such plan is in direct opposition to the principles expressed in the Executive Order of the President creating the Steel Labor Board, and to those established by the National Labor Relations Board in the Houde decision.

Because of the compromise nature of the board and of its limited powers, there has been created in the automobile industry a very unsatisfactory situation. The board has failed completely to encourage real collective bargaining between the unions and the employers; its action in regard to cases of discrimination has been slow and has lacked definiteness. The board has proceeded on the assumption that all questions arising between the unions and the employers could and should be settled through mediation and conciliation. To this end the board has consistently refused to make decisions. The workers in this industry have, in fact, received little benefit from the Automobile Labor Board, and under the President's settlement they are denied the privileges accorded to other unions under Joint Resolution 44.

Two other boards with real powers have been set up and have gone far toward a solution of the industrial relations problems involved in the industries. One of these was established in the petroleum industry.

A Labor Policy Board was first appointed by Petroleum Administrator Harold L. Ickes on November 24, and reorganized by him on December 22. As originally constituted, the board consisted of three representatives each of Labor and employers, with an impartial chairman. Inasmuch as one of the Labor representatives appointed was a spokesman of a company union, the American Federation of Labor refused to recognize this board, and it never became operative. The board was reorganized to consist of three impartial public representatives. The Petroleum Board was first to make a decision that the union representing the majority of the employees must be looked upon as the exclusive bargaining agency. This ruling was contained in the decision in the case involving the International Association of Oil Field, Gas Well and Refinery Workers of America vs. The Magnolia Petroleum Company of Fort Worth, Texas. This decision set a precedent which has been consistently followed by the Petroleum Board, National Labor Board, and was recently reiterated by the National Labor Relations Board in the Houde case.

The Petroleum Board has also secured a number of important adjustments in labor disputes, including the agreement reached in the case of the Consolidated Oil Corporation. This agreement provides that when differences cannot be adjusted amicably, the matters in dispute are to be referred to the chief executive officer of Consolidated Oil Corporation and chief executive of A. F. of L. If they are unable to effect a settlement "they shall agree upon a method of procedure of arbitration for the settlement of such dispute or grievance," the award to be binding upon both parties.

In the case of the Phillips Petroleum Company, the board has set an important precedent by invalidating a company-supervised election held for the purpose of establishing a company union.

"It is the deliberate policy of the Phillips Petroleum Company to interfere actively with the employees' right to organize for collective bargaining and to control the choice of representation of its employees," the board said.

"We are of the opinion, therefore, that the action of the company in actively promoting its company employees' union through meetings managed by the employer is in violation of Section 7, Article 2 of the petroleum Code, and Section 7 (a) of the National Industrial Recovery Act, and the company is asked to cease these activities.

"It is for the employees freely to choose such an organization if they prefer it," the board said, "in discussing the company union, and any election that purports to give employees an opportunity to express their choice must provide an opportunity for the employees to vote on as many organizations or representatives as the employees may want to choose from and must not be confined or restricted to a vote on the employers' proposal alone.

"The election should be by secret ballot, and must not be conducted by an agent of the company. It should be supervised by an election committee chosen by the employees and representatives of different organizations among them, or by a neutral party agreed upon by all parties.

"If this cannot be arranged, the Petroleum Labor Policy Board will conduct the election. Only in this manner can a fair and free choice of the employees be secured as to the organizations or individuals they desire to represent them in collective bargaining.

"With respect to the specific disputes, the board will, on receipt of a proper petition from the employees, order such an election."

In formulating the master code for the construction industry, the NRA conformed more closely than in other instances to the fundamental purposes of the Recovery Act—"To induce and maintain united action of labor and management under adequate governmental sanctions and supervision."

This is accepted through a provision for mutual agreements and for equal representation on the National Construction Planning and Adjustment Board, as well as on similar Regional Boards.

In the provision relating to mutual agreements, the code states that in each division and subdivision of the industry truly representative associations or groups of employers and employees concerned, as a result of bona fide collective bargaining, may establish by mutual agreement for a specified area the standards of hours, rates of pay and other conditions of employment relating to occupations or type of operation. The provision for any such agreement when approved by the President becomes a part of the code. This procedure provides a firm basis for collective bargaining resulting in agreements on a regional basis.

With collective bargaining machinery thus established, such boards, consisting of one representative of Labor and one of employers under an impartial chairman, are set up to supervise and investigate the enforcement of these mutual agreements. Each board is to give notice and opportunity to be heard to each complainant and respondent and to report its findings to the administrator to enforce the provisions of the code. In this respect, the code broadens the application of the law by including in its provisions the mandate of Section 7(b) which states that the President shall afford every opportunity to employers and employees to establish by mutual agreement the standards of hours, wages, and the working conditions necessary to effectuate the policy of the Act. Labor has long advocated the enforcement of this section of the statute and its adoption under the construction code has set a precedent of outstanding importance.

A National Construction Planning and Adjustment Board has been also established under the code. Its fundamental purpose is industrial planning and development of policies that would further the spirit of cooperation in all matters relating to the relations between employers and employees in the industry. This board is also designed to conciliate and adjust by voluntary arbitration all disputes relating to wages, hours, and working conditions.

The decisions of the National Construction Planning and Adjustment Board are final and binding on all parties in interest, but subject to review by the administrator. Thus the enforcement machinery provided in the construction industry stands out as far more effective than in the majority of industries operating under codes.

Most of such boards, set up without definite statutory powers, without the ability to make and enforce decisions, and based only upon the consent of the employers and the employees concerned, have in the short space of a year been proven entirely inadequate to meet the situation. The assumption that employers want to comply with the law as regards collective bargaining, upon which assumption the old National Labor Board was created, has long since broken down. There has never been more widespread or determined opposition to any law than to the collective bargaining portion of the Recovery Act. The Cotton Textile Board and the Automobile Labor Board have failed completely to solve any of the problems which led to their creation. Indeed, they have brought so many new problems that the workers in the industries concerned are harmed, rather than helped, by their existence. The former National Labor Board has gone out of existence with full recognition on the part of all concerned in it that it was unable to meet the situation, with the limited powers it was given.

With this recognition of the fact that the first approach to the enforcement of Section 7(a) was not adequate, Congress passed Resolution No. 44. Under this Resolution the President issued two executive orders, one creating the National Longshoremen's Board to settle the Pacific Coast dispute in the shipping industry, and the other creating the National Steel Labor Relations Board. Immediately following the creation of these two special boards, the President issued an executive order on June 29, 1934, establishing the National Labor Relations Board to supersede the old National Labor Board.

These boards are statutory. They operate under powers conferred upon them by law; they have definite duties and responsibilities. In the short time they have been in existence they have acted with courage, promptness, and definiteness, to resolve some of the most weighty problems in industrial relations. The National Labor Relations Board has already been discussed. The Steel Labor Board has made one very important ruling in the West Virginia rail case, which states that employers have no legal interest in the organization of their employees; that they cannot, either directly or indirectly, interfere with the selection of employees' representatives for collective bargaining.

A contrast between the boards set up in the rather vague, uncertain situation which prevailed in the first months of the NRA and those set up recently under the new law leaves no doubt as to the desirability and even the necessity of reconstituting on a statutory basis boards like those in the textile and the automobile industries.

(1935, p. 37) Our first great experiment in national planning, which was launched as the National Recovery Administration, was brought abruptly to a close on May 27, 1935, when in the

Schechter case, the Supreme Court of the U.S. ruled that "such a delegation of legislative power is unknown to our law and is utterly inconsistent with the constitutional prerogatives and duties of Congress."

At this time, therefore, it behooves us to consider certain outstanding issues in connection with this attempt at federal control of our production and distribution facilities. To what extent were the desired results obtained? What were the principal shortcomings which developed? When a sound program has been devised, based on the 1933-35 experience, what steps must be taken to enable us to go forward with the program without interference from the Supreme Court?

As a basis for an analysis of the degree of success which was achieved we must look closely at the general policy on which the National Industrial Recovery Act was based.

1. To promote the organization of industry.
2. To induce and maintain united action of labor and management under adequate governmental sanctions and supervision.
3. To eliminate unfair competitive practices.
4. To promote the fullest possible utilization of the productive capacity of industries.
5. To avoid undue restriction of production.
6. To increase the consumption of industrial and agricultural products by increasing purchasing power.
7. To reduce and relieve unemployment.
8. To improve standards of labor.
9. To otherwise rehabilitate industry and conserve natural resources.

(p. 441) The A. F. of L. solemnly warns the country that if recent developments continue there will be two results. First, the present recovery will be halted and second, the ground will be prepared for another collapse like that of 1929. The latest gains in recovery, the report shows, are one-sided and destined to be temporary. While re-employment in private industry is stagnant and total wage payments are advancing scarcely as fast as the cost of living, profits are increasing by leaps and bounds. This is a new development and a reversal of the sound if slow recovery of 1934 which was based on an effort to hold profits down and to direct an increased share of industrial income to wage earners and so to build up mass purchasing power, the basis of prosperity and recovery.

The A. F. of L. points out that this effort to launch us on the way to permanent recovery at first promised to be successful. The industrial wage earners' share of the national income, which in 1932 had fallen to 14½ per cent, rose in 1934 to 18 per cent. But it still has far to go, for even in 1929 the wage earners' share was 22 per cent and that was so insufficient that the failure of mass buying power to keep up with production brought on the collapse of 1929 and the depression.

But this brief period of sound recovery seems at an end and the "unhealthy" developments of 1923-1929 are starting all over again. Again all figures show that production is increasing "faster than either employment or wage payments" and so again unless this development is checked, the share of labor as a group in the income of industry must decline.

It will be remembered that much of the profits of industry has been made possible by the expenditure of fabulous sums of public money, without a reasonable return in the form of an increased wages bill by industry. The maintenance of the present economic momentum is made impossible by such fallacious economic policy.

But these forces, if allowed to operate unchecked, produce an unbalanced industry, a shortage of consuming power, because Labor's income increases less rapidly than production. The A. F. of L. believes not only that such a development if continued must within a few years bring on another recession but that we cannot count upon a healthy development of business in the next few months unless workers' buying power can be maintained and further increased in proportion to industrial income as business rises.

(p. 580) The A. F. of L. in convention assembled, reaffirms its belief in the principle of the NIRA legislation and calls for the widest study to determine the extent to which former code labor provisions have been and are being destroyed, and for which purpose it extends its complete cooperation.

The A. F. of L. pledges its assistance to the permanent continuation by Federal legislation of the principles of NIRA, with adequate labor participation in code making, code administration and code reformation.

North American Treaty Organization

(NATO (South America Program))

(1951, p. 58, 467) The Executive Council reported on U.S. participation in two regional arrangements for mutual assistance: (1) North Atlantic Treaty Organization; and (2) the Mutual Security Program for South America.

The convention committee which considered these subjects made the following report which was adopted:

Your Committee has carefully examined and noted with approval the section of the Executive Council Report dealing with the problems of Mutual Military Assistance as met by our government through our country's membership in the NATO and our nation's support of the Mutual Security Program for Latin America.

We recognize that only the first beginnings have been made by the democracies of Europe and the New World toward effective collective security. But we appreciate these beginnings as a sign of the real awakening of the free peoples and their governments to the extremely grave danger of Soviet imperialist encroachment and aggression against their national existence, human freedom, and world peace. In this spirit Ottawa was recently the seat of the first international rearmament conference ever held in peacetime.

The Convention fully endorses the policy of our government in arousing the free nations to a fuller realization of the menace of Soviet aggression and the overriding urgency of mobilizing promptly sufficient military strength to assure world peace and national survival for the free peoples.

In heartily supporting our Nation's vigorous defense program, we recognize that there can be no painless rearmament. But we also realize that it is better to have rearmament with pain and peace than no armament which brings war, defeat, and disaster. We are aware that sacrifices will have to be made by all freedom-loving nations to maintain their liberties and enjoy the benefits of peace. However, we firmly reiterate our insistence that this urgently needed rearmament must be realized on the basis of equality of sacrifice within our own and all other democratic countries and on the basis of each member nation of the NATO contributing its best toward the attainment of invincible collective security.

While our country, as the leading and strongest democratic power, must naturally assume the heaviest share in a speedy fulfillment of an adequate defense program, it would be fatal folly to have America bear the entire burden of rearmament. America should play the role of loyal and helpful partner and not be the sole contributor or patron. Toward assuring equity in the bearing of rearmament burdens and toward reducing and easing the costly impact of rearmament on the weaker economies of our allies, we propose that:

1. NATO take steps to utilize to the maximum extent available plant capacity in countries like Italy and other European lands for production of military equipment and armament. This will assure more economic and speedier results.

2. The principle of fuller collaboration should also be extended to the friendly and free raw material producing countries, Latin America, Asia (Indonesia), and Africa so that they receive a fair price for the commodities they make available to the NATO members.

3. The A. F. of L. recognizes the necessity of American government departments and private corporations engaging in building certain defense projects in allied lands. But we strongly urge that in all such instances the American authorities and employers pay a higher wage than the usually inadequate scale prevailing in these areas (Turks Island, B.W.I.). Such a policy would present a truer picture of our country and its economy than the workers have hitherto had. It would also stimulate the raising of the general levels of pay and purchasing power of the workers in these communities.

Only adherence to such principles of reciprocal and mutual economic aid between the free nations and equality of sacrifice within these countries can assure effective and timely rearmament and insure against the defense program undermining economic stability, dangerously depressing the living and working standards of Labor, and weakening the entire social fabric of the democratic nations.

The A. F. of L. emphasizes that without the whole-hearted support and participation of Labor, it would be impossible to carry through an effective collective security program. We, therefore, call upon our government to press for Labor representation in the NATO. We further urge the ICFTU and its affiliates to take similar action so that the voice of Labor will be heard and its interests more adequately regarded in the highest allied defense councils. The ranks of free Labor will then rally with enhanced enthusiasm and energy to the growing armies of freedom and peace under the command of General Eisenhower.

Naturalization (see: Immigration and Naturalization)

Nautical Schools—(1940, pp. 91, 408) Because of frequent complaints concerning the operation of privately-owned nautical schools, Congress has by the enactment of H.R. 9262 placed all such schools under Federal jurisdiction. The Maritime Commission, the Board of Supervising Inspectors and the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation are given special authority to regulate such schools and all laws governing the inspection of passenger vessels are made applicable to privately-owned ships operating as nautical schools. On July 1, 1940, the Maritime Commission assumed responsibility for cooperating in maintenance and supervision of four state nautical schools. Located in California, Massachusetts, New York and Pennsylvania, the schools are state institutions, subject in the first three instances to the state departments of education and in Pennsylvania to the State Navigation Commission for the River Delaware. The transfer of authority from the Navy was effected by Government Reorganization Plan IV. It includes the responsibility for furnishing government vessels and equipment for schoolships and for matching state contributions up to $25,000 for each school.

S. 4299 and H.R. 10315 (companion bills) authorize an appropriation of $10,000,000 to enable the Maritime Commission to construct new training ships as replacements for the rather antiquated ships now used by the before-mentioned State Nautical Schools. In addition, the annual Federal appropriation toward the maintenance of each of these schools is increased from $25,000 to $50,000. S. 4299 passed the Senate September 30. H.R. 10315 has been favorably reported by the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries and is pending on the House Calendar.

This legislation was favored by A. F. of L.

Naval Construction Law—(1935, p. 514) The A. F. of L. urges the President of the U.S., the Secretary of the Navy and the appropriate Congressional committees, the necessary executive and legislative action having for its purpose the inauguration of the policy of having all designs and plans for naval construction performed directly by employees of the Federal Government.

Walsh-Healey—(1938, pp. 170, 456) (Public No. 528)—All contracts for the construction of naval vessels shall be in accordance with Public Law No. 846, the Walsh-Healey Act. The law provides:

The construction, alteration, furnishing, or equipping of any naval vessel authorized by this Act, or the construction, alteration, furnishing, or equipping of any naval vessels with funds from any appropriation available for such purposes, contracts for which are made after June 30, 1938, shall be in accordance with the provisions of Public Law 846, Seventy-fourth Congress, approved June 30, 1936, unless such course, in the judgment of the President of the United States, should not be in the interest of national defense.

Navy Yards (and Arsenals)

(1930, p. 392) This convention places itself on record as vigorously opposing any displacement of American labor, and furthermore instructs the officers of the American Federation of Labor to have legislation introduced in Congress which will prevent the employment of alien workmen upon the construction of any ships the construction of which is paid for in whole or in part by any grants or financial assistance or funds of the United States Government.

(1932, p. 554) In connection with urging unemployment insurance for Government employees, the desirability of continuous employment becomes evident; because if there were no discharges or layoffs in Government establishments, there would be no necessity for unemployment insurance.

At the present time, layoffs and rotative furloughs are taking place at the New York Navy Yard because of lack of work. The rotative furloughs consist of workmen being required to lose one week's work out of every five, and all employees in the departments affected are thus subjected to unemployment to the extent of one-fifth of their working time.

While the Naval Appropriation Bill was under consideration in the U.S. Senate during the last session of Congress, Senator Homer T. Bone of Washington sought to have eliminated from the bill language inserted by the House, which authorized the Navy Department to let work to private contractors, if such course were deemed advantageous to national defense, even though such work cost more and navy yard employees, who normally would do the work, were laid off.

Following assurances given by Senators in charge of the bill, that there was no intention of letting work to contract, where it could be done at navy yards, if employees would be discharged as a result, the Bone Amendment was rejected.

Since the enactment of that legislation, it appears much work has been let to contract which should have been performed in navy yards, resulting directly or indirectly in these layoffs and rotative furloughs.

The E.C. is requested to urge the President of the U.S. to see to it that the rotative furlough at the New York Navy Yard be discontinued and the furloughed employees be put back to work, and that the two U.S. Senators above mentioned, be appealed to, to use their good offices to see to it, that work be not let to contract, to the detriment of the Government's own employees.

(1933, p. 498) The E.C. is hereby directed to urge the President of the U.S. to assign to the civilian personnel of the navy, all work which heretofore has been performed by civilians, or which does not constitute strictly military duty; or to have introduced and support legislation to remedy these conditions.

(1934, pp. 83, 399) Congress authorized the construction of 102 naval vessels and 1,100 air-crafts in order to bring the ratio up to 5—5—3. During the hearings it was estimated that it would require $660,000,000 over a period of years to carry on the work. The bill was introduced January 9, passed the House January 30, passed the Senate March 6 and was approved by the President March 27. Forty million dollars was appropriated to begin work in this fiscal year.

The first and each succeeding vessel of each category except the 15,000 ton aircraft carrier, upon which work is in progress, shall be constructed in the government navy yards, naval stations, naval gun factories, naval ordnance plants or arsenals of the U.S., except such material or parts as were not customarily manufactured in such plants prior to 1929.

After a protracted delay of several years, the special board of the Navy Department has finally completed the final allocation for this group.

In doing so, those entrusted with this work have disregarded the principle of equal pay for equal work when compared with the rates of pay allowed for similar work at the Navy Department.

The Personnel Classification Board of the Civil Service Commission is requested to review this final allocation, taking into account the provisions of the Classification Act and the precedents established for corresponding positions in the Navy Department offices.

(p. 460) The A. F. of L. adopts the following as its legislative program:

1. Restoration and extension of the 30 days' leave of absence with pay to navy yard and arsenal employes, and to other skilled trades services where this condition of employment does not at present apply, in accordance with the provisions of the Ramspeck Leave Bill, H.R. 8458.

2. Extension of the 15 days' sick leave privilege to the skilled trades services where this condition of employment does not at present apply, in accordance with the provisions of the Ramspeck Leave Bill, H.R. 8459.

3. Amending the Retirement Act to provide for optional retirement after 30 years of service, without additional cost to the employes.

4. Amending the Retirement Act to provide a pension for the widows of deceased retired Federal employes.

5. Leveling up the schedule of wages in effect at the arsenals to the rates paid at the navy yards, and seeking to have the intermediate and minimum rates of pay in the Navy Yard Wage Schedule abolished and in the case of mechanics restricted for use of apprentices during their first and second years, respectively, after having completed their apprenticeship.

6. Preventing by legislation or otherwise, Military and Naval personnel from performing work which should be performed by civilian employes.

(p. 798) Men employed in the navy yards for a considerable number of years are being laid off for lack of funds, but their places are being filled by men from the WPA. The E.C. was requested to apply their energetic efforts to the end that this unsatisfactory condition be eliminated.

(p. 799) The officers of the A. F. of L. are requested to use every effort to have established in the Navy Department a Board of Adjustment, similar to the Navy Department Wage Board of Review, which is composed of two representatives of the Department appointed by the Secretary of the Navy, and one representative of Labor nominated by the President of the A. F. of L., and appointed by the Secretary of the Navy, whose duty it shall be to hold hearings upon Navy Yard grievances, and reach decisions in relation thereto; and that the representatives of Organized Labor shall be entitled to appear before such Board to discuss pending grievances in the same manner as such representatives were, and are, entitled to appear before the Department Wage Board of Review in relation to the Wage question; also endeavor to have a similar Board established under the War Department for the adjudication of grievances arising at the arsenals and the several activities coming under the Chief of Engineers of the War Department.

The E.C. is directed to continue its efforts to prevent permanent employees of the Navy Yards being displaced by emergency workers.

(1936, p. 491) The Navy Department in instructions to Navy Yards and naval stations has stressed the necessity for conserving funds by reducing the number of first class ratings of mechanical employees and establishing a so-called Balance Work Force, which includes mechanics paid at first, second and third class ratings. These instructions are easily susceptible to interpretations which will result in first class mechanics of all the trades being forced to accept wage rates out of keeping with the qualifications of their trade and at the same time create the opportunity for the employment of competent mechanics in the government service at lower rates of pay under the maximum wage scales authorized in the schedule of wages enforced under the Navy Department.

The convention records its opposition to the principles and practices of the so-called "Balanced Work Force" which leads to wage reduction practices,

The A. F. of L. will support the Metal Trades Department of the A. F. of L. in an effort to have the rules of 1921 re-established so that the intermediate and minimum ratings for mechanics may be eliminated.

(p. 492) Maintenance and repair work is being performed by emergency employees on United States Government property endangering the continued employment of permanent employees; the A. F. of L. will continue its efforts to prevent the displacement of permanent employees by emergency workers.

(p. 567) The A. F. of L. requests the President of the U.S. and the Navy Department to establish within the Navy Department a staff of commissioned officers of the Navy competent as designers, so that the Navy Department will depend upon its own designing and construction officers instead of private interests.

(1937, p. 330) We seek the abolition of the second and third class rates of pay, officially known as the intermediate and minimum rates, respectively, in the Navy Yard service, and level up the maximum rates of pay in the Navy Yard schedule of wages to the present highest rate in effect in the Navy Yard service, within the continental limits of the United States, either by departmental regulation or by legislation.

That the Navy Yard schedule of wages as thus modified be established at the arsenals and in other industrial activities under the executive branch of our government, within the continental limits of the United States, provided that any existing higher rates of pay shall be maintained.

(p. 510) In the navy yard at Bremerton, Washington, the Works Progress allotment of funds for emergency relief, naval, are being used for the employment of men on relief to replace regular navy yard employees in the maintenance and repair in the Public Works Department, and in labor gangs in the Supply Department, the workers formerly doing this work having been discharged or demoted.

The E.C. is instructed to give its full assistance so that no employees of the United States Government, in any capacity, shall be replaced by relief workers.

(1938, p. 420) The E.C. is hereby instructed to give every possible assistance to the officers of the Metal Trades Department, A. F. of L. and the officers of the International Unions affiliated with the Department in their effort to have second and third class rates eliminated, and the establishment in their place of a single wage rate for each classification of labor employed in Navy Yards.

(1938, p. 554) The principle of unemployment insurance has been endorsed by the A. F. of L. and has been given effect by congressional enactment:

Civilian employes on a per diem basis employed in Navy Yards and similar establishments are without unemployment protection.

The officers of the A. F. of L. are instructed in cooperation with the officers of the Metal Trades Department, A. F. of L. to prepare and have introduced into Congress, legislation establishing unemployment insurance for Navy Yard civilian employes, and those employed in similar establishments.

(1939, p. 428) Existing law prohibits mechanics employed in the Government Navy Yard, Arsenals, and on the Panama Canal from receiving the proper rate of pay when substituting temporarily in supervisory positions. The E.C. is instructed to make every effort to amend existing law so that employes substituting in higher supervisory positions will receive the wage rate of such position regardless of the length of time occupied.

Nazism (also see: Communism, Fascism, Discrimination Against Jews, Labor's League for Human Rights, United Nations Relief Fund)

Nazi Atrocities, Protest Against— (1941, pp. 368, 622) The convention unanimously adopted Resolution #173 providing that the American Federation of Labor inform President Roosevelt that outrages such as those now being reported from Norway and all other countries which have been overrun by Hitler's murderous armies fully justify the present American foreign policy of all-out efforts to defeat Hitler and increases the determination of trade unionists to cooperate in every way to make this policy more effective.

(1942, p. 633) The convention unanimously adopted the following statement submitted by the Committee on International Labor Relations:

Your committee again directs attention to a state of terrorism and of barbarism practiced by Hitler and his co-conspirators never heretofore equalled in history. And in so doing affirm the solemn implication of this war for the Four Freedoms.

The American Federation of Labor has ever been the friend and champion of the oppressed and persecuted and has always been the stalwart guard of the rights of minorities whether of nations or of peoples. We would therefore again pledge our whole support to the issues of freedom for every nation oppressed and persecuted by the despicable and hateful Nazi conqueror. We again pledge our fraternal and moral support to the claims of every oppressed national minority within every land, and the claims of any persecuted, racial minorities now suffering under the yoke of the tyrant.

Traditionally the American Federation of Labor has affirmed its sympathy with one of the most unjustly and tragically persecuted of all minorities—the Jewish people. At present this unfortunate group of the human brotherhood is enduring not only the usual barbarous and detestable excuses of the Nazi toward conquered people—it is being subjected to a program of systematic extermination which puts all its past sufferings into the shade. We again reiterate and emphasize our profound sympathy with the Jewish people. We assure them of our warm support in their just claims to that moral and practical recognition which is due to any historic, ethnic and cultural group.

We deplore the incredible brutality

which activates the behavior of their Nazi oppressors. We declare our complete sympathy with the national aspirations of the Jewish people toward collective security at the end of the present war. Since a start toward such security was made in the establishment of the National Homeland in Palestine for the Jewish people, we reaffirm our belief that the United Nations owe to them the continuance and the maintenance of this Homeland as a relief from their dreadful and inhuman persecutions, as a guarantee of their cultural unity and continuity, as an instrument for their legal and international standing in the court of nations, and as a restitution for their national dignity, honor, and creative energies.

In the post-war period of world reorganization that lies ahead, when the United Nations come to the problems of restoring the integrity of nations and groups now suffering under the lash of vile tyranny, we urge that they remember also the claims and sufferings of the Jewish people, and take steps to guarantee freedom and equality to them in their adopted countries, as well as their independence under the Balfour Declaration on the soil of Palestine.

We extend fraternal greetings to the Histadruth which ceaselessly toils to build a cooperative labor commonwealth through large-scale Jewish immigration into Palestine and fosters mutual understanding with neighbors in Palestine and the surrounding countries. It looks with pride upon this pillar of democratic strength in the Middle East and believes every effort should be made to assure an early reconstruction of Jewish nationhood in Palestine and with the maximum of international aid.

Whereas—Newspaper dispatches from Europe, and the documented reports of the State Department tell a horrible story of the atrocities to which the conquered peoples of Europe have been subjected. In Czechoslovakia the destruction of Lidice was but a symbol of the calculated plans of the Nazis to break the spirit of an entire nation. In Poland the best minds of the country, the leading spirits of all classes, the leaders of the labor movement, have been executed as part of the planned Nazi policy to leave the Poles a people without leadership and without direction. In Holland the Nazis loosed their bombs on Rotterdam after the city had surrendered, and thousands of women and children were butchered to strike fear into the hearts of their fighting men. Today Nazi soldiers are bayoneting Italian civilians on the streets of Italian cities to satisfy their lust for revenge against their former ally, and

Whereas—Horror piles upon horror. Terror is the lot of all, and

Whereas—It has been reserved for the Jewish population of occupied Europe to be marked for mass extermination. History knows no parallel to the bestial cruelties by which the Nazis are carrying out their resolve to destroy the entire people. Herded into walled ghettos, they are denied food and drink until life departs from their bodies. Crowded into specially constructed gas chambers, they are asphyxiated to death by their Nazi executioners. Hunted like animals through the streets, they are shot down or clubbed to death when their torturers have tired of their sport, and

Whereas—The world has seen more than 3,000,000 Jews in occupied Europe starved, hunted, gassed, clubbed and machine-gunned. Today there remains but a tiny remnant of an ancient people in lands where their fathers and forefathers have lived for centuries, and civilized world recoils with horror at the fiendish crimes perpetrated by the Nazis on a defenseless people, and

Whereas—Civilized humanity owes it to its own conscience to undo, so far as can be undone, the inhuman plans of the Nazi barbarians and to save those who can still be saved from the fate that has been suffered by 3,000,000 of their people, and

Whereas—To this end, the American Federation of Labor calls upon the United Nations to take immediate steps to rescue the remaining Jews of occupied Europe. We call upon the United Nations, and our own country, to provide for them temporary havens in their territories. We urge that where immigration restrictions impede the work of rescue they be temporarily lifted, and that in our own country quotas be enlarged where necessary so that those Jews who can still be snatched from the bloody hands of the Nazis may find a temporary resting place until the war is over, when they may once more take up their abode in their native lands, and

Whereas—We urge that our government in the meanwhile, together with the governments of our Allies, warn the men by whose orders these inhuman deeds have been perpetrated that they will be treated as outlaws from humanity, and outcasts from the world; and that they will be punished for their crimes against the helpless and the down-trodden, and

Whereas—The Nazis, as part of their plan for world domination, have introduced into Europe a calculated chaos. They have uprooted millions of Frenchmen, Norwegians, Hollanders, Belgians, and Russians and Poles from their homeland. They have looted everything movable in every land where they have set their heel. Victory will not be complete until the monstrous skein of planned chaos is unravell'd. The United Nations, as the trustees for the conscience of civilization, must resolve that these millions shall return to their homes, shall recover their property, shall be able once more as free men to live on the fruits of their toil. And precisely because the Nazis spent their greatest efforts on the uprooting and extermination of the Jews above all other peoples, the United Nations must make a special effort to foil the Nazi plans, and enable the Jews, who have suffered most at the hands of the Nazis, to return to their former residences and occupations, with all their political, economic, and civil rights restored, and

Whereas—When all this has been done, when charity and kindness and human decency have bound up the wounds left by our enemies, there will still be those among the Jews who will have no home, no nation, to which they can return. The American Federation of Labor has in the past expressed its profound sympathy with the national aspirations of the Jewish people. And today, more than ever, the American Federation of Labor calls upon the world to fulfill its long-standing pledge to the Jewish people by enabling them to build up their own homeland, and by opening wide the doors of Palestine to the victims of the Nazi terror, and

Whereas—The American Federation of Labor has observed with admiration the reconstruction of the Jewish homeland since the Balfour declaration recognizing the special claim of the Jewish people to the soil of Palestine. It has watched with pride the great role played in the up-building of Palestine by the forces of organized labor there, and

Whereas—The world is fortunate that there exists a Jewish homeland, whose sons stood at the gateway of the East and held it against the Nazi war machine until the full forces of the United Nations could be brought to bear to expel the Germans from Asia and Africa. It is fortunate that there will exist tomorrow a Jewish commonwealth to which may turn those victims of Nazi oppression who have no other homeland, therefore be it

Resolved—That the American Federation of Labor urges upon our Government and upon the Government of Great Britain, which has a special responsibility in the matter, that the Balfour Declaration be fully implemented, that the right of the Jewish people to a national home in Palestine be reaffirmed, and that every aid and encouragement be given to enable the victims of Nazi persecution to settle upon their ancient soil and make it bloom once more as it did in the days of the prophets.

Your committee had before it Resolution No. 73 Protesting Nazi Extermination of Jews in Europe and Proposing Measures for Rescue of Survivors. In addition to recommending its adoption your Committee presents the following for your approval and endorsement:

We are saddened by the terrible atrocities which have been perpetrated by the Nazi on the peoples of conquered Europe. We call attention to the fact that successive conventions of the American Federation of Labor, even before the outbreak of war in Europe, warned the world to be on guard against the blood lust of the Hitlerian hordes. The American Federation of Labor viewed with horror the massacres of the Jews that followed Hitler's rise to power, recognizing that the total suppression of human rights by the Hitler regime, the destruction of the labor movement, the murder of the leaders of labor, and the pogroms against the Jews, were all part of a pattern which must inevitably lead to even greater violations of the laws of God and man.

The whole world is suffering today from its refusal to recognize the indivisibility of the moral law. Oppression of one group led inevitably to oppression of others: aggression against one nation led inevitably to aggression against others. Failure to act against the Nazis before they consolidated their power through brutal suppression of every instinct of humanity and decency led to the present world holocaust.

Millions of men and women and children in occupied Europe suffer unbelievable cruelties today at the hands of the Nazis. Violated, kidnapped, murdered, the peoples of Poland, Belgium, Holland, Russia, Luxemburg, France and other countries have seen their food taken away, their homes looted, their families deported, their religion mocked, their very humanity assailed and destroyed. Terror, brutal insensate terror, first used by Hitler as a weapon of politics, has become for him a weapon of war, and no one of the peoples of Europe has been spared.

But one among them suffered uniquely, for the Jews of Europe have been marked by Hitler for mass extermination. The mind reels at the thought of 3,000,000 human beings done to death, not as an incident of war, not under the guise of military necessity, but as part of an open, frank and brutal design to extirpate an entire people. New methods of killing unparalleled in their ferocity, divorced from the least vestige of humanity, have had to be designed to murder such a huge mass of human beings. Mass torture, mass starvation, mass asphyxiation, and mass shooting—these have been the lot of the Jews of Europe, and 3,000,000 of them have already been murdered in cold blood by the Hitler barbarians.

To the American Federation of Labor, which has always been the champion of the oppressed everywhere, the cry of the broken remnant of the Jewish people of Europe for rescue comes with particular poignancy. For such exceptional horror as has been suffered by the peoples of the lands invaded by Hitler, exceptional means must be adopted by civilization to rescue them from further suffering. Every effort must be made to save those that can still be saved. Free access to the territories of the United Nations must be permitted, and the victims of Hitler's persecution must be given temporary sanctuary until the war is over and the lands across the seas are once more open for their return.

It is the moral obligation of the civilized world to provide temporary havens for those Jews who can still escape from Hitler's inferno.

Meanwhile, we note with satisfaction that President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Churchill have already sounded solemn notes of warning to the Nazis and their satellites that on the day of victory they will be called to account for their transgressions against the weak and the helpless. We believe that this warning should be reiterated, and strengthened, for fear may still move those who are moved by neither justice nor mercy.

And the day of victory is approaching. Under the hammer blows of the United Nations, the edifice of hate and terror and brutality that was built up by Hitler is beginning to crumble. But military victory alone will not be enough. Civilization will still face the task of underlining the defeat of the barbarians by defeating their design to make of Europe a chaotic continent, swept by disease, racked by hunger, inhabited by millions of homeless wanderers. Frenchmen, Russians, Belgians, Hollanders, Poles—even Italians, erstwhile allies of Hitler—will need to be rehabilitated, returned to their homes, and helped to resume their occupations.

And because the Jews of occupied Europe were the victims of the utmost refinements of Nazi sadism, because Hitler in his plan to wipe 6,000,000 human beings from the face of the earth took special pains to destroy their rights, their homes, and their means of subsistence, the United Nations must in their turn take special care to assure to them full and complete restoration of their civil, their political, and their economic rights.

And in the making of the peace treaties, the right of the Jews to repatriation, rehabilitation, and equality with their fellow citizens in the lands where they have lived for generations must be guaranteed and protected, so that never again may anti-Semitism, or persecution of any racial, religious, or ethnic group be used by those who would profit from a world in turmoil to mask their designs upon freedom, democracy, and peace.

In 1941, the gravity of the plight of the Jews in occupied Europe moved the American Federation of Labor to declare, at its Seattle Convention, and it reiterates that declaration—that it is "urgent that this suffering people, the greatest of all sufferers at the ruthless hands of the enemies of freedom and democracy, be accorded real hope and aid through a restoration of rights long overdue it—rights to a full development of Palestine."

How much more urgent is the need for full development of Palestine today, how much more urgent will that need be when civilization emerges victorious over the barbarians. For Palestine is the one country in the world that is prepared to give refuge and asylum to the victims of Hitlerite oppression, not on a temporary, but on a permanent basis.

Since the rise of Hitler to power in 1936, this tiny country has welcomed and absorbed almost 300,000 Jewish refugees from Nazi and Fascist oppression. The American Federation of Labor urges that its doors be immediately opened to the countless thousands more who have no other home, no other hope, but Palestine.

We urge that the United Nations create the possibilities that will permit these victims of oppression to build their own lives anew on their own soil through their own efforts.

The American Federation of Labor welcomed from the first the Balfour Declaration of 1917 recognizing the special rights of the Jewish people to the soil of their ancient home in Palestine. At many conventions we have reiterated our profound sympathy for the Jewish people in its efforts to restore the plains and deserts of Palestine to their ancient bloom. It was in consequence of that sympathy, and as a logical outcome of our belief in the essential justice of the desire of the Jewish people to build their own commonwealth in Palestine, that the American Federation of Labor at the 1942 convention in Toronto urged that with the conclusion of the war, steps be taken "to guarantee freedom and equality for them in their adopted countries, as well as their independence under the Balfour Declaration on the soil of Palestine."

Surely, the least that the civilized world can do is to carry out the pledge so freely given by Great Britain in 1917 affirmed by the League of Nations when it accorded to that nation the Mandate over Palestine in 1922, and approved by our own American Congress in the same year. The American Federation of Labor urges that the restrictions on Jewish immigration and settlement contained in the British White Paper of 1939 be withdrawn, and that the Balfour Declaration be so implemented that the hopes and aspirations of the Jewish people to build their own commonwealth in Palestine may be realized. Thus will this ancient people be enabled to take its rightful place among the democratic nations of the world, and make its full contribution to that progressive world order which we all pray will emerge from the horrible sufferings of this global war.

The eyes of the American labor movement turn with special confidence to Palestine as a haven of refuge for the homeless Jews of Europe, because it has observed with pride the splendid role played by the organized workers of Palestine in the upbuilding of their land. The American Federation of Labor greets Histadruth, the Federation of Labor in Palestine, and expresses its pride in the accomplishments of its sister movement across the seas. We know of the magnificent part that has been played by the sons and daughters of Jewish labor in Palestine in defending the gateway to the East against the Nazis. We wish for Histadruth greater strength in a greater land, in a land which has received full justice from the United Nations, in a land where every suffering, persecuted Jew who sought refuge found it, who sought the right to toil secured it, who sought human dignity and human freedom achieved it.

Near East Relief—(1924, p. 297). The A. F. of L. commends the work of the Near East Relief and recommends that local unions and central labor bodies co-operate in this humanitarian work of saving lives of orphan children and training them for leadership in various trades in the Near East countries.

(1926, p. 299) Voted to continue to cooperate with and urge financial support to the Near East relief.

Negro Problems (see: F.E.P.C.; Discrimination, Racial; Lynching)

Neutrality (also see: European War, Foreign Policy)

International Affairs (1952, p. 112)
A most dangerous expression of frustration, despair and self-deception in the democratic world is so-called neutralism. The A. F. of L. has been unsparing in its condemnation of and opposition to "neutralism" as a conscious or unwitting ally of Soviet imperialism. Whether "neutralism" is embraced by those honestly mistaken or advocated and pushed by the dishonest and concealed enemies of world democratic unity against Soviet aggression, it plays right into the hands of the Russian warlords.

The A. F. of L. has determinedly fought "neutralism" in the ranks of labor everywhere because it is based on a number of utterly false assumptions.

Newspaper, Labor-Owned Daily

(1936, pp. 186, 614) By Resolution No. 150, the Atlantic City convention of the A. F. of L. considered the application for the establishment of a daily newspaper. The president was authorized to make a thorough investigation and submit a report to the E.C.

This report disclosed that roughly estimated the daily cost for an issue of 30,000 copies, both for editorials and production, would be approximately $550. This estimate does not take into consideration the increased cost of office personnel.

Taking all of these matters into consideration, it seemed absolutely impossible for the E.C. to arrange for the financing and publication of an A. F. of L. daily newspaper.

Until and unless the membership of the A. F. of L. provides the necessary funds with which to launch the publication of a daily newspaper, the E.C. is of the firm opinion that it would be impossible to carry out the recommendations of Resolution No. 150 which was referred to the E.C. by the Atlantic City convention.

Whereas—It is becoming more evident that most daily newspapers cannot be depended upon to present labor news in a fair and unbiased manner, a condition which is doing irreparable harm to organized labor, and

Whereas—Daily newspapers are read by a large segment of our population, and thus influence millions of voters to express themselves for anti-labor measures at the ballot box, and

Whereas—The sources of anti-labor groups have always been more numerous, persuasive and effective than those of organized labor, this being particularly true of the various mediums of propaganda such as the press and radio, and

Whereas—There are reported to be more than 7,000,000 members in the American Federation of Labor, a vast number of whom would support a more effective medium of expression such as a daily newspaper which would present labor's viewpoints to the reading public, and

Whereas—There is a great deal of talent in the various crafts of the American Federation of Labor, which could be employed to handle the various and associated journalistic and technical tasks of publishing a daily newspaper, therefore, be it.

Resolved—That the American Federation of Labor endorse the establishment of a daily newspaper.

(1948, p. 233) Res. 2 Called upon E.C. to make every effort possible and feasible to establish or to aid and encourage the establishment of such a daily paper frankly committed to publicize the viewpoint of organized labor.

(1949, pp. 344, 502) Res. 121 called for the establishment of a daily labor paper to "make available to all the people of this nation the true facts concerning organized labor and its fight for a free America." Referred to E.C. for study and appropriate action.

(1951, pp. 273, 548) Res. I proposed the founding of a national daily newspaper. Convention referred the subject matter to the Executive Council for consideration.

(1952, pp. 419, 520) Res. 143, unanimously adopted, provided:

Whereas—Organized labor, and particularly the labor press, has agitated for many years regarding the great need for the establishment of a daily newspaper, whose columns should be devoted in their entirety to the cause of labor in this country, and

Whereas—The necessity for the launching of a labor daily newspaper has been more evident in recent years, because of the increasing anti-labor editorial trend of most of the nation's daily press, and

Whereas—The International Typographical Union, one of the founders of the A. F. of L. has launched a daily labor newspaper, to be known as "LABOR'S DAILY" in the city of Charleston, West Virginia, setting a new milestone in the field of labor journalism in America, therefore, be it

Resolved—By the annual convention of the American Federation of Labor, meeting at New York City, September 1952, that we hereby go on record as commending the initiative of the I.T.U. in giving the American trade union movement a daily newspaper, dedicated to the cause of labor, and be it further

Resolved—That we pledge our individual and collective encouragement and support to "Labor's Daily," in order to insure its success and eventually bring about the spread of this publication's influence around the country, as an effective instrument in championing labor's cause, and be it further

Resolved—That copies of this Resolution be spread upon the minutes of this convention, forwarded to the officers of the International Typographical Union, the General Manager of "Labor's Daily", and also released to the press.

(1953, p. 401) Res. 27 recommended that the Executive Council explore the possibilities of a labor-owned daily newspaper of nation-wide or continent-wide circulation, to be financed, owned and managed by all bona fide labor organizations of North America which can be interested therein.

(P. 648) Convention reaffirmed action of previous convention on this subject.

News Column for Labor, Syndicated (1944, p. 472) Res. 56:

Whereas—Most of the daily newspapers in the United States carry as a regular feature syndicated articles by one or more columnists who specialize in smearing organized labor and labor unions and in fomenting and encouraging of racial and religious discrimination and prejudices, and

Whereas—The malicious and untrue propaganda contained in these syndicated columns is constantly distorted, emphasized and magnified throughout the entire nation, and

Whereas—There is a present and future need for the existence of a fair, liberal and pro-labor syndicated daily column, and

Whereas—If such a daily syndicated column were available for publication in newspapers which are willing or desirous of presenting all sides of the picture through its columns, and

Whereas—The American Federation of Labor presently having a statistical department which specializes in gathering the facts it is in a position to establish, sponsor and maintain a daily syndicated column for use by newspapers throughout the country; therefore, be it

Resolved—That the American Federation of Labor in convention assembled in New Orleans, Louisiana, November 20, 1944, go on record in favor of establishing a syndicated daily news column as provided in the next four paragraphs:

1. That the present news service of the American Federation of Labor be extended to include a daily syndicated news column.

2. That such syndicated news service be made available to all news publications wishing to purchase a syndicated labor news service.

3. That the American Federation of Labor employ an outstanding news writer to prepare a daily column for use by newspapers throughout the nation so that the working man and the public generally may have a true, unbiased and straightforward picture of the facts concerning matters affecting labor and labor unions.

4. That the American Federation of Labor do all in its power to obtain the greatest possible publication of this news column in the newspapers throughout the country.

Your committee is in approval with the purpose of the resolutions, but believes that they should be referred to the Executive Council so that the most practical means of developing our public relations should be established.

Newsprint Shortage (Labor Press) (1947, p. 665) Res. 145, and action thereon, follow:

Whereas—A flourishing and widely circulated labor press is a vital factor in the health of the American labor movement, and more necessary than ever to its defense in 1948, and

Whereas—The very existence of many a labor publication is now threatened by the newsprint shortage and the soaring newsprint prices in black market and gray market offerings, and

Whereas—The wealthiest and most bitterly anti-labor of the commercial dailies profit by the very situation which threatens to drive our labor weeklies to the wall, therefore, be it

Resolved—That the American Federation of Labor, through appropriate officers and committees, undertake immediate and thorough investigation of this problem, with a view to employing every legal and political means to induce the suppliers of newsprint to maintain the normal allocation of supply to the labor press, with normal increases in quota for 1948 at a general price stabilized below gray market levels, and be it further

Resolved—That in the event negotiations to this end appear futile, the American Federation of Labor give serious thought to financing a cooperative purchasing plan to the end that the pooled purchasing power of the Federation and the labor press be exerted to compete as far as possible with the huge purchasing power of the commercial press in the newsprint market.

Your committee, believing that appropriate action should be taken in connection with the shortage of newsprint paper, recommends that the resolution be referred to the Executive Council, A. F. of L., for study and such action as seems advisable.

The recommendation of the committee was unanimously adopted.

Niagara River Power Development (1953, pp. 450, 656) Res. 139 opposed legislation providing for State or Federal power development of the Niagara River and urged support of bill providing for electric power development of the Niagara River through private enterprise. Convention referred the resolution to the Executive Council.

Night Work Differential—(1925, p. 174) (also see: Government Employees, Wages) The E.C. was instructed to cooperate with the representatives of affiliated organizations of government employes to have the government recognize, in a practical way, appropriate to the needs of each group, the hardship and undesirability of night work.

(1928, pp. 82, 216) Congress passed a bill providing that night workers in the Post Office Department should be paid 10 per cent more than those working days. The bill was vetoed by the President. This created a furore in the House and the bill was passed over the veto by a vote of 319 to 42 or 78 votes more than the necessary two-thirds. In the Senate the vote was 70 to 9 to override the veto.

Immediately after the veto of the President of a bill granting allowance for rent, fuel, light and equipment for postmasters in the fourth class was overridden in the Senate by a vote of 63 to 17. The House by a vote of 318 to 46 passed the same bill over the President's veto.

The A. F. of L. favored both bills.

(1933, p. 475) Night work should be eliminated wherever practicable. We agree that families and friends should be given ample opportunity for joint recreational activities, but we must point out the obvious impossibility of eliminating all forms of work "in all industries and retail establishments" after six o'clock in the evening. . . . There are, of course, processes in many industries which require continuous human attention during the night, in order that the plant as a whole may operate during the day. There are industries in which more or less continuity of operation is required throughout the twenty-four hours in order to operate at all. Ships cannot put into port at six o'clock every evening. Morning newspapers cannot be published without night work. The points of public recreation very largely require the use of transportation facilities, and, by the way, would not be very satisfactory under all circumstances if neither food nor beverages could be bought at retail on the grounds.

Noise Abatement (Industrial Hazard)
Res. 113 (1954, pp. 413, 487)

Resolved—That the American Federation of Labor in Convention assembled take official cognizance of this serious situation, by instituting a national movement of corrective and compensatory legislation and by taking such steps as may be deemed expedient to compel noise abatement programs in industry, and be it further

Resolved—that copies of this Resolution be supplied to all State Federations of Labor and International Unions with the urge that these Organizations exert their utmost influence to bring about accomplishment of the purposes of this Resolution.

No-Raiding Agreement (A. F. of L.-C.I.O.) (see: Unity)

Norris-La Guardia Act

Simplex Shoe Company v. Wisconsin State Federation of Labor (1940, p. 329) This was regarded as one of the key cases in determining whether the Norris-La Guardia Act imposed the duty upon the employer to abstain from coercing his employes in their choice of representatives, also whether the employer was obliged to recognize the representative of the employes for collective bargaining purposes.

Because of its importance the following brief history of the above named case was submitted to the convention by the A. F. of L. General Counsel:

The Norris-La Guardia Act, insofar as the body of the Act is concerned, contains no provisions commanding the employer to refrain from coercion of employes or to deal with their representatives. The duties and obligations in that regard must be spelled out of the preamble. The employes, however, argued that the preamble was not what is termed substantive law.

The Boot and Shoe Workers case involved this question. It can readily be seen, therefore, how important this case was to the life and effectiveness of the Norris-La Guardia Act.

Representatives of the Boot and Shoe Workers Union called upon the Simplex Shoe Company officials at Milwaukee, as representatives chosen by the shoe company employes, to talk over wages, hours and working conditions for their members who were employes of the company. The officials of the company virtually ordered them out of the plant. The officials said they were not obliged to recognize the representatives sent and they could do whatever they pleased insofar as coercing the employes was concerned. They had coerced the employes by threatening to shut down the plant, by discharges and other acts. The company became so intolerant that it was necessary for the Shoe Workers International Union to go into court and seek to prevent the threats and coercive activities of the employer toward the employes. An extensive trial was held in which the employer attacked the Wisconsin Norris-LaGuardia Act and sought to limit its effect. However, the Wisconsin Supreme Court held:

... Under the Wisconsin Act any interference, restraint, or coercion of individual workmen, as those terms properly should be construed, or with the right of labor freely to associate, self-organize, or designate representatives of their own choosing for purpose of collective bargaining is unlawful. . . . In refusing to negotiate with a designated representative of a large number of its employes the defendant violated the declared public policy of this state.

In answer to the contention of the employer's lawyers that the preamble to the Act was a declaration of public policy and not the law, the court said:

"Whether the public policy declared in section 268.18 bestows upon laborers any new or additional rights not already given them by the majority, if not substantially all of the courts of this country, need not be specifically considered. In our view, section 268.18 is a deliberate declaration by the Legislature of the rights which labor shall enjoy in this state. When the Legislature declared, 'It is necessary that the individual workman have full freedom of association, self-organization, and the designation of representatives of his own choosing, to negotiate the terms and conditions of his employment, and that he shall be free from the interference, restraint or coercion of employers of labor, or their agents, in the designation of such representatives or in self-organization or in other concerted activities for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection,' it intended, in our opinion, that such declaration should have the force of law. To hold otherwise would amount to saying that the Legislature did not intend what it said, but merely intended to write into the statutes language pleasing to labor. We can ascribe no such motive or intention to the Legislature."

This case, fought through the courts by the International Boot and Shoe Workers, might be termed the key case or the foundation stone on which rests the legality of the rights given labor by the Norris-LaGuardia Act. Likewise, it was a declaration that such guarantees written into any enactment as substantive law were valid and binding. It gave validity to provisions which were subsequently written into the National Labor Relations Act and the various Labor Relations Acts of the states patterned after the Federal Act.

Norris-La Guardia Act—(1940, p. p. 328) After the virtual nullification of the Clayton Act, so far as organized labor was concerned, the A. F. of L. demanded of Congress that a new law be enacted. Extensive hearings were held from 1928 to 1932, at which many labor officials throughout the country testified. The Chairman of the Sub-Committee of the Senate Judiciary Committee was Senator Norris, and he was fortified by two able colleagues, Senator Walsh of Montana and Senator Blaine of Wisconsin. In the House the bill was ably sponsored by Representative LaGuardia. Competent advisers were called in by the Committee. When the hearings were closed the Committee filed its report in favor of the then pending bill.

These Committee Reports are a revelation. Never before had the judiciary, particularly the highest judiciary in the land, been castigated as they were in this report. Among other things the report said:

The proposed bill is designed primarily as a practical means of remedying existing evils and limitations are imposed upon the courts in that class of cases wherein these evils have grown up and become intolerable. This is a reasonable exercise of legislative power, and in order that the limitation may not be whittled away by refined definitions of what persons are to be regarded as legitimately involved in labor disputes, the bill undertakes specifically to designate those persons who are entitled to invoke the protections of the procedure required.

The main purpose of these definitions is to provide for limiting the injunctive powers of the Federal courts only in the special type of cases, commonly called labor disputes, in which these powers have been notoriously extended beyond the mere exercise of civil authority and wherein the courts have been converted into policing agencies devoted in the guise of preserving peace, to the purpose of aiding employers to coerce employees into accepting terms and conditions of employment desired by employers.

The bill passed both houses of Congress in 1932.

At the same time similar bills were before the legislatures of various states. Wisconsin passed an enactment which is a prototype of the federal law, even before Congress passed the Norris-LaGuardia Act. The Wisconsin Act was passed in 1931. Employers immediately commenced to attack the Act. They proceeded to do so in the same manner as they attacked the Clayton Act, that is, they attempted to limit the application of the Act to dispute between an employer and his immediate employees, and they declared that the Norris-LaGuardia Act likewise was a restraint of existing law and that there was nothing new in it. However, Congress and the Wisconsin legislature, in adopting the Acts, were careful to preface them with a declaration of public policy. The declaration of public policy is the foundation stone on which an Act rests. The declaration of public policy is to guide the judges in construing the rest of the Act. The declaration of public policy in the Wisconsin Act, which is practically the same as the federal act, reads as follows:

In the interpretation and application of section 103.51 to 103.63 the public policy of this state is declared as follows:

Negotiation of terms and conditions of labor should result from voluntary agreement between employer and employee. Governmental authority has permitted and encouraged employers to organize in the corporate and other forms of capital control. In dealing with such employers, the individual unorganized worker is helpless to exercise actual liberty of contract and to protect his freedom of labor, and thereby to obtain acceptable terms and conditions of employment. Therefore it is necessary that the individual workman have full freedom of association, self-organization, and the designation of representatives of his own choosing, to negotiate the terms and conditions of his employment. Therefore it is necessary that the individual workman have full freedom of association, self-organization, and the designation of representatives of his own choosing, to negotiate the terms and conditions of his employment, and that he shall be free from the interference, restraint or coercion of employers of labor, or their agents, in the designation of such representatives or in self-organization or in other concerted activities for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection.

The employers, at the first opportunity, sought to destroy the effect of the preamble or public policy clause. They felt that if they could remove the foundation stone the rest of the Act would crumble. The first assault upon the preamble came in the case of Simplex Shoe Company v. Wisconsin State Federation of Labor.

State Legislation

Unfair Labor Practices—(1940, p. 333) Efforts to nullify provisions of NORRIS-LA GUARDIA LAW took form of proposals to enact state legislation particularly in Wisconsin, Minnesota, Michigan, Oregon and several other states.

(Wisconsin Act also Oregon Act) (1940, p. 333) Define "unfair labor practices" and set pattern for several other proposed state Acts. Wisconsin and Oregon bills briefly as follows:

The acts, though differing in language, generally proceed upon two basic theories: (1) to limit all labor disputes to the employer and his immediate employees; and (2) to require as a condition of a lawful labor dispute that it should be approved by a majority of the employees of the employer. Thus the Wisconsin Act provides:

The term "labor dispute" means any controversy between an employer and the majority of his employees in a collective bargaining unit concerning the right or process or details of collective bargaining or the designation of representatives. Any organization with which either the employer or such majority is affiliated may be considered a party to the labor dispute.

111.06 WHAT ARE UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES. (1) It shall be an unfair labor practice for an employer individually or in concert with others:

(c) To bargain collectively with the representatives of less than a majority of his employees in a collective bargaining unit, or to enter into an all-union agreement except in the manner provided in subsection (1) (c) of this section. . . .

(2) It shall be an unfair labor practice for an employee individually or in concert with others:

(e) To co-operate in engaging in, promoting or inducing picketing, boycotting or any other overt concomitant of a strike unless a majority in a collective bargaining unit of the employees of an employer against whom such acts are primarily directed have voted by secret ballot to call a strike.

(f) To hinder or prevent, by mass picketing, threats, intimidation, force or coercion of any kind the pursuit of any lawful work of employment, or to obstruct or interfere with entrance to or egress from any place of employment, or to obstruct or interfere with free and uninterrupted use of public roads, streets, highways, railways, airports, or other ways of travel or conveyance.

(3) It shall be an unfair labor practice for any person to do or cause to be done on behalf of or in the interest of employers or employees, or in connection with or to influence the outcome of any controversy as to employment relations any act prohibited by subsections (1) and (2) of this section.

The Oregon law provides:

Section 1. Whenever in any statute or other law of this state the term "labor dispute" is used, such term is hereby defined for all purposes to mean and include only an actual bona fide controversy in which the disputants stand in proximate relation of employer and the majority of his or its employees and which directly concerns matters directly pertaining to wages, hours, or working conditions of the employees of the particular employer directly involved in such controversy. . . .

Section 3. It shall be unlawful for any person, persons, association or organization to picket or patrol, or post pickets or patrols, in or near the premises or property owned, occupied, controlled or used by an employer or employers unless there is an actual bona fide existing labor dispute between said employer or employers and his or their employees. It shall also be unlawful to boycott directly or indirectly any employer, or the business of such employer, not directly involved as a party in a labor dispute. . . .

Section 5. It shall be unlawful for any association, or organization, or person by any direct or indirect means to prevent, hinder or molest any person from seeking to engage or engaging his services to any person, firm, corporation or association desiring to employ him.

The purpose of the Acts indicates clearly that they are in truth and in fact anti-picketing enactments. Therefore the question organized labor had to meet was whether laws prohibiting minorities from having a labor dispute with an employer, and from peacefully picketing and engaging in other economic pressure in furtherance of such dispute, are legal.

Notes for Speakers—(1930, pp. 95, 284) Busy trade unionists need a handbook of labor information. "Notes for Speakers" gives a brief outline of the important articles, information, statistical facts that are gathered by our office each month and published in our other publications.

Trade union members also want facts and arguments stated briefly and clearly, so they will be readily adapted to local needs. One of the chief services of "Notes for Speakers" is to keep union members in close touch with important sources of labor information. Every month this booklet brings them educational material that can be used in speeches, publicity, articles, and in union discussions.

"Notes for Speakers" came out in May, 1930, for the first time. So warm was its welcome that we now have a mailing list of some 16,000 who have asked to receive it monthly. Some of these are union executives, but it is gratifying to note that large numbers are being distributed to union members who have expressed their interest. A large group of younger trade unionists, keen and alert to inform themselves by studying labor literature, is essential for our future leadership. Trade union members must be developed into real trade unionists. The development is education in the purposes and methods of trade unionism. Study and knowledge of past experience may help to avoid unnecessary mistakes. "Notes for Speakers" provides trade unionists with the necessary educational material they need to develop an understanding of trade union problems. This pamphlet, issued monthly, serves to help trade unionists to know what information they can get from Federation publications. Outstanding articles are summarized and pointed up by use of key sentences. The publication is widely distributed to officers and active trade unionists, and has brought many requests for our other publications and subscriptions to the American Federationist. We plan to extend the circulation of this publication during the coming year.

Nurses, Draft—(1946, pp. 197, 607) The convention unanimously approved the action of the E.C. in opposing legislation providing for the draft of nurses for the Armed Services. The A. F. of L. felt there was no need for the legislation, and it might prove an entering wedge for universal conscription.

Nye Committee (Munitions Industry) Investigation—(1934, p. 630) The A. F. of L. believes that there shall be full publicity given of all those U.S. Government representatives, commissioned officers, or enlisted personnel of the Army or the Navy, and of American manufacturers or private individuals which the investigation by the Nye Committee indicates were involved.

Office of Production Management (OPM) (also see: War Production Board)

Labor Supply, Committee on (1941, p. 419) In accord with the suggestions of the A. F. of L., the Assistant-Secretary of Labor proposed to the Associate Director of O.P.M. that a Policy Committee consisting of equal representatives of employers and workers be established for the Committee on Labor Supply. This proposal was approved and two A. F. of L. representatives were appointed by the President of the A. F. of L. to serve on the policy committee. This constructive program will doubtless be the means to the development of systematic and effective planning in the field of defense training.

We feel that the protests and suggestions of the Federation are bearing fruit.

Old Age and Survivors Insurance (also see: Social Security)

(1939, p. 632) The Executive Council reports important amendments improving this title of the Social Security Act. The date of monthly payments was changed from 1942 to January 1, 1940; the basis of calculating monthly benefits has been changed to average monthly wages earned which formula increases the benefits payable to persons becoming eligible in the immediate future; and provisions were made for the dependents, survivors of the insured persons; there is to be no increase in the tax rate; coverage has been increased.

For the self-supporting worker who becomes eligible to old age benefits, an additional amount is payable to his aged wife equal to one-half the husband's benefit, which increases to three-fourths in case of the husband's death. If an insured worker dies before he is 65 years of age, his widow and minor children in his family are eligible to benefits. We recommend hearty approval of the efforts of representatives of the American Federation of Labor in contributing to the enactment of these amendments and further recommend renewed efforts for extension of coverage to all agricultural workers covering farm laborers and employes in agricultural industries, domestic workers, all seamen and those employed in the fishing industry.

We recommend that the A. F. of L. Committee on Social Security include in its duties aid to unions in helping workers keep wage data and such records as will constitute evidence of benefits to which they are eligible.

We recommend further that the A. F. of L. Committee on Social Security study the possibility of extending coverage to self-employed persons.

We recommend that the A. F. of L. Committee on Social Security explore the possibility of a Federal unemployment compensation law. There should be uniform provisions for unemployed workers just as we have uniformity in provisions for those disabled for work by old age. The question of constitutionality which decided against a Federal system when the Social Security Act was formulated has been answered affirmatively by the Supreme Court. The organization of industry and the problem of unemployment are both national in scope. It is obvious that our provisions against this emergency should also be Federal in scope. We note with approval the efforts of our Federation to secure authorization by Congress for an Advisory Council to study unemployment compensation and to recommend changes in the Social Security Act in accord with their studies. It is particularly necessary that we find ways to put uniformity into our provisions for the unemployed workers. We recommend that the Executive Council urge upon Congress authorization of such Advisory Commission.

Pending amendment of the Federal Act we recommend endorsement of the next step in state legislation submitted by the Executive Council:

- (1) One week waiting period.
- (2) Flat benefit period—16 weeks minimum, 20 weeks preferable.

- (3) Benefit classes not to exceed 5, with benefits in round figures.
- (4) Full-time weekly earnings to be used as benefit base.
- (5) Minimum benefit not less than $5.
- (6) Simplify administration by eliminating merit or experience rating.
- (7) Partial benefits at least equal to difference between actual earnings and full time benefit.
- (8) Eliminate excessive provisions for disqualification. No cancellation of wage credits. Limit disqualification to reasonable time—not more than 5 weeks in addition to waiting time.

In addition we recommend that the A. F. of L. Committee on Social Security be charged with making special study of rulings on disqualifications of persons making application for benefits as well as decisions on appealed cases and provide guidance for unions handling these problems.

Amendments—(1942, p. 609) Res. 54 which called for an amendment to the OASI provisions of the Social Security Law to provide pension payments shall begin at age 55 and that the minimum payment be increased to $80 per month, was referred to the Committee on Social Security.

(1947, p. 607) The convention unanimously approved the program of action on Old Age and Survivors Insurance as recommended by the committee as follows:

We note that in the closing days of the first session of the 80th Congress, legislation was introduced which in large measure meets the objectives and standards adopted by earlier conventions of the American Federation of Labor. This legislation extends the coverage of the system to the large groups previously excluded, such as agricultural and domestic workers, self-employed, and employees of non-profit institutions. It makes provision for extending its protections to those employees of the states and their political subdivisions who are not protected by existing programs of their own choice. It lowers the eligibility age for women and establishes protection against loss of wages resulting from extended physical disability. Benefits are substantially improved.

This proposal in our opinion merits the active support of the American Federation of Labor and its affiliated organizations and is accordingly recommended for your approval.

The question of financing this and other phases of the Social Security System is becoming more pressing. We hold to the principle of contributory insurance financed mainly from contributions borne by both employer and covered workers. However, since all segments of our economy benefit directly or indirectly from the security afforded, it is appropriate that some share be borne out of the general revenues of the government. It is recognized also that the share to be paid out of general revenues on a pay-as-you-go basis might well vary in relation to the extent of the coverage and the need for accumulated reserves. These considerations are recommended for further study as they relate to the distribution of the entire tax burden and must be considered in their relation to other broad economic and fiscal policies.

(1948, pp. 238, 460) Res. 20 called upon the A. F. of L. to "go on record as favoring a substantial increase in old age payments."

Referred to Committee on Social Security.

(1948, pp. 324, 468) Res. 113 proposed the following amendments to the Old Age and Survivors Insurance feature of Social Security:

The American Federation of Labor in convention assembled endorses the following amendments to the Social Security Act which have been recommended by the Social Security Administration:

1. Universal coverage, including agricultural, domestic, public employees and the self-employed.

2. Adequate protection for veterans to cover their service in the armed forces.

3. Reducing the qualifying age for all persons eligible from 65 to 60.

4. Changing the benefits formula to increase benefits, particularly to the low paid worker.

5. Increase maximum amount of taxable earnings counted in the computation of benefits from $3000 to $3600.

6. Increase the amount a beneficiary may earn in covered employment and still draw benefits.

7. Benefits during extended or permanent disability.

Referred to Social Security Committee.

(1948, p. 323) Res. 109 proposed amendments to the Federal Social Security Act to increase the payments thereunder to meet the increased cost of living.

(P. 467) Referred to A. F. of L. Committee on Social Security.

(Pp. 267, 467) Res. 103 called for amendments to the Social Security Law as follows:

Resolved—That because of the miserly payments that are being paid under the Social Security Act today, and due to the high cost of living, that this convention go on record to increase the monthly payments under this Act. That those who pay in 40 quarters at a deduction on $3,000 per year shall be paid not less than $100 per month, and that the deduction from the employers' pay roll to be increased to take care of this increase in payments.

(1950, p. 324) Res. 99 called for legislation to double the present benefits and to lower retirement age to 60 years.

(P. 486) Convention referred the resolution to the Committee on Social Security.

(P. 455) Old-Age and Survivors Insurance.

1. Broaden coverage to include all farm wage earners and independent farm operators and other groups still without protection of this or other public programs.

2. Revise definition of employee suitable to social insurance purposes so as to remove artificial limitations of coverage.

3. Raise wage base for computing both contributions and benefits to $5,400 per year.

4. Restore increment factors in benefit formula to increase benefits for those with longer service.

(1951, p. 532) The convention approved the following committee report and recommendations:

Old age and survivors benefits are now received by four million persons. A sound, self-financed national insurance system is at last beginning to go into operation in the United States. The national old age and survivors insurance system needs to be strengthened and extended in many ways. We note as especially urgent the following action:

1. Provide benefits equal to retirement benefits to any person within the system, regardless of age, unable to earn a living because of physical disability.

2. Broaden coverage by including all persons now without protection for their old age, and by removing the artificial limitation now in effect by revising the present restrictive definition of "employee" in the Act.

3. Increase the wage base for computing both contributions and benefits to at least $6,000 per year.

4. Reinstate the provision for the increase in benefits in relation to each year of contributions to the insurance program.

5. To keep the effective operation of the social insurance system under constant review, initiate independent studies for the guidance of the Congress in improving the system and bringing it into harmony with changing economic conditions.

Interchange of Benefit Credits—(1953, pp. 452, 655) Res. 143:

Whereas—Present provisions of the Social Security Act, the State Employees Retirement Systems, the University Retirement Systems and pension plans maintained by political subdivisions within the framework of federal and state employment place heavy restrictions upon the movement of workers from public to private employment, and from private to public employment by denying workers the privilege of transferring benefit credits from one system to another with the transfer of employment, and

Whereas—These restrictions pose a threat to the health, morals, and spiritual well-being of workers by cancelling accrued benefits established under either system upon transfer of employment from one to the other, therefore, be it

Resolved—That the American Federation of Labor urge amendments to the Social Security Act which will permit workers in private employment to transfer benefit credits and funds established under the Social Security Act to federal and state retirement systems upon transfer of employment from private industry to public agency, and be it further eration of Labor urge amendments to the Social Security Act which will permit workers in federal and state employment to transfer benefit credits and funds established under federal and state retirement systems to the Social Security system upon transfer of employment from public to private industry.

Referred to A. F. of L. Committee on Social Security.

(1953, pp. 393, 645) Res. 7 called for an amendment to the Social Security Act to take into consideration the rising cost of living:

Whereas—The Federal Social Security Act was designed and enacted for the purpose of providing reasonable financial security for workers who have become too old to work, or who should be enabled to retire after spending most of their lives at work, and

Whereas—The enormous rise in the cost of living has rendered the amount of the benefits now payable under the Act totally inadequate to provide reasonable financial protection for eligible workers, and

Whereas—An increase in the amount of benefits in direct proportion to the increase in the cost of living, and a reduction of the retirement age of 65 years to 60 years would effectuate the original purpose and intent of the Act, and properly would enable more workers to enjoy the benefits of the Act, therefore, be it

Resolved—That this convention endorse and recommend an amendment to the Federal Social Security Act so as to increase the benefits provided for therein in direct proportion to the increase in the cost of living and reducing the eligible age from 65 years to 60 years.

(p. 645) Convention referred the resolution, together with Res. 31 with similar purpose, to the Committee on Social Security.

(pp. 180, 300, 638) Included in a comprehensive report by the E.C. on Social Security, was a section titled "Old Age Security." The convention committee which considered this portion of the E.C. Report, recommended adoption of its findings and the convention so acted:

The Old-Age and Survivors Insurance program still contains serious gaps and deficiencies which demand correction. Benefit levels need to be increased and more closely geared to current wage levels. Coverage must be broadly extended to groups now without protection. Insurance benefits and rehabilitation services for the totally disabled should be incorporated in the program, as well as a system of insurance against wage loss due to temporary disability. The American Federation of Labor must continue to press for these and other necessary improvements in the Old-Age and Survivors Insurance system.

The Lehman Bill (S. 2260), introduced by a group of liberal members of the House and Senate in the first session of the 83rd Congress, is designed to meet these objectives.

Insofar as the limited objective of extension of coverage is concerned, the Kean Bill (H.R. 6846), which embodies the recommendations of the Administration following a report by a group of consultants to Secretary Hobby represents a constructive approach to this problem. This bill is in full accord with the coverage objectives of the A. F. of L. and merits our active support in the next session of Congress.

Every wage earner has cause for grave concern over the campaigns that are currently in progress to undermine the Social Security program. The lines of attack employed in these campaigns—the Curtis subcommittee operation, the so-called "pay-as-you-go" scheme of the Chamber of Commerce, the OASI tax "freeze" proposal—are clearly outlined in the Executive Council's Report. Affiliated unions should use every means to alert their members to the dangers inherent in these attacks and should lend their full and active support to the efforts of the American Federation of Labor to repel them.

As its enemies clearly recognize, the keystone of the Old-Age and Survivors Insurance system is its financial integrity. The trust fund which guarantees benefit payments has accordingly been made the primary target of attacks upon the system. It is therefore important that the American Federation of Labor should, in defending the Social Security system and in advocating its improvement, place great emphasis upon the necessity for protecting the financial integrity of the program and for assuring a sound system of financing for all benefits, actual and anticipated, payable under the program. We strongly insist that increases in contribution rates should be allowed to go into effect as and when scheduled under the Social Security Act.

(1954, pp. 420, 468) Res. 131 proposed amendments to the Social Security Law as follows:

1. Increase the benefits.
2. Raise moderately the Social Security Tax to pay for the benefits.
3. Let retired workers earn as much as they can or wish while still receiving benefits.
4. Provide some medical benefits.
5. Have a man's monthly check more clearly reflect the amount he has paid in Social Security.
6. Gear the pensions to a cost of living commodity dollar.
7. Revise the payments once every two years to take inflation or deflation into account.
8. Eliminate the Social Security Tax on a worker's earnings after the age of sixty-five.

9. Make the time of retirement flexible since many cannot work to the age of sixty-five.

10. Put Social Security more nearly on a pay-as-you-go basis leaving the present fund for emergency.

Referred to Committee on Social Security.

Age, Reduction of Retirement—(1947, p. 630) Res. 14:

Whereas—The Federal Social Security Act is one of the most humane and progressive enactments of the Congress of the United States, and

Whereas—The present Act does not provide for old age and survivors insurance benefits to workers who have not reached the age of 65, and

Whereas—Experience has proven that because of the advanced age at which benefits commence, a substantial number of persons have been deprived of the benefits of the Act despite their inability to continue at work or to find employment, and

Whereas—The reduction of the retirement age to age 60 would alleviate the problem of providing employment for veterans of World War II, and would further the best interests of all of the people of the United States, therefore, be it

Resolved—That this, the 66th Convention of the American Federation of Labor, direct its incoming officers to incorporate in the American Federation of Labor legislative program a provision urging Congress to amend the Federal Social Security Act so as to reduce the age of payment of old age insurance benefits from 65 years of age to 60 years of age and to provide for payments to disabled workers at any age, and be it further

Resolved—That the incoming officers take the necessary steps to mobilize the active support of all labor organizations affiliated with the American Federation of Labor in the effort to bring about this necessary change in the Social Security Act.

(1948, p. 323) Reduction of retirement age under OASI proposed by Res. 110 so that benefits will begin at age 60, and to provide for payments to disabled workers at any age.

(P. 467) Referred to the Social Security Committee of the A. F. of L.

(P. 261) Res. 83 called for an amendment to the Social Security Law lowering retirement to age 60 and instructed the A. F. of L. to "use its offices to have the Social Security Act amended accordingly."

(P. 465) Referred to the Social Security Committee, A. F. of L.

(1951, pp. 287, 561) Res. 32 proposed an amendment to the Social Security Law to reduce age eligibility to OASI benefits from 65 to 55. Convention referred the resolution to the Committee on Social Security.

(pp. 308, 564) Res. 85 called for an amendment to the Social Security Law reducing the retirement age of working men from 65 to 60 years and of women from 65 to 55.

Referred to Committee on Social Security.

(1954, pp. 383, 487) Res. 32 proposed that the A. F. of L. seek legislation amending the Social Security Law to provide that the dependent wife of any person eligible for retirement benefits at age 65 be eligible for a wife's benefit at age 60; and that any woman otherwise eligible for primary retirement benefits be eligible at age 60.

(Pp. 410, 468) Res. 103 called for reduction in retirement age, i.e., 60 for men and 55 for women.

Referred to Committee on Social Security.

(Pp. 384, 468) Res. 35 proposed amendment to the Railroad Retirement Act and Social Security Act to reduce retirement age to 60 years.

Referred to Committee on Social Security.

(Pp. 409, 487) Res. 102 and 80 called for reduction in retirement age under OASI to provide eligibility for spouse at age 60.

Referred to A. F. of L. Permanent Committee on Social Security.

Benefits—(pp. 385, 487) Res. 39:

Whereas—Working people who are nearing retirement age are prone to infirmities and often lose much time due to sickness in the last few years of their employment, and

Whereas—Unemployment is a more likely hazard in later earning years, and

Whereas—The consequent lost time under the Act as now written, causes the person who falls within the above conditions to have their Social Security retirement benefits cut down, and

Whereas—This does not show a true picture of the contributions made by the individual over his earning years, therefore, be it

Resolved—That the American Federation of Labor in convention assembled go on record favoring amendment of the Social Security Act for the purpose of basing Social Security payments upon a worker's most productive years.

Referred to Permanent Committee on Social Security.

Coverage—(1939, p. 183) The difficulty of drawing a line between excluded and included employments and the obvious injustice of excluding workers once included and from whose wages payments have been deducted for old age insurance makes it even more necessary that we should extend the program to cover all workers in every type of employment. It should ultimately cover the self-employed in order that no equities in the system should be lost by a man's changing his type of work or starting in business for himself.

(1940, p. 117) In spite of the obvious gain in protection, the Social Security Act is still open to grave criticism because of the limitation of its coverage. The limited coverage is injurious in two ways: (1) it leaves millions of workers whose incomes are too low to permit adequate savings exposed to loss of income in their old age and without insurance protection for their families; and (2) it reduces the average monthly wage, and hence the retirement benefit amount, of all workers who shift from covered to non-covered employment during their working years. . . .

To rid the system of the obvious injustice of this limited coverage, the American Federation of Labor is supporting legislation which would bring about 10,000,000 more workers under coverage. We wish to see agricultural and domestic workers and employes of non-profit institutions receive the same protection now extended to industrial employes. The problems involved in providing retirement benefits for public employes, a part of whom are already under other government pension plans, are being studied by our Social Security Committee and representatives of the wage earners concerned. We want to find some satisfactory method of protecting all wage earners in their old age without diminishing the protection some groups have secured

The American Federation of Labor believes that studies should also be made looking toward some method of coordinating other retirement plans with old-age and survivors insurance in such a way that each plan would retain its individual existence and its special advantages, but that employes who pass from one type of employment to the other should be continuously protected and not be unable to meet the requirements for retirement benefits under either system.

If old-age and survivors insurance and other government retirement systems are coordinated, and together cover practically every type of employment, monthly retirement benefits would be larger on the average and there would be fewer aged persons left without an income and forced to rely on the relief program of old-age assistance. We should move toward complete coverage of the contributory insurance program as rapidly as possible.

(P. 559) We should work for old age protection for all wage earners and their families under either the Social Security or some existing public pension program.

We recommend that the A. F. of L. Committee on Social Security study the problems of providing continuous protection for persons who move in and out of covered employment or from the coverage of one type of pension plan to another, with a view to preventing loss of security to workers because of changing jobs.

(1942, p. 78) The E.C. pointed out that "no proposal has a deeper or wider appeal than extension of coverage of the old age insurance provisions of the Social Security Act to more wage earners, small salaried persons and self-employed persons. By this provision society has made it possible for workers to make their own provisions for income in their last years." "The Federation holds now, in this period of peak-time employment, is the time to extend coverage so that all who are working can make contributions to the old age insurance fund." "The widest possible coverage with economical administration makes possible the most liberal protection for all."

Cemetery Workers—(1942, p. 594) Res. 101 called for the inclusion of cemetery and memorial property workers under OASI. The convention voted sympathy with the purpose of the resolution and referred it to the Committee on Social Security.

Engineers in Dried Fruit Packing Plants—(1942, p. 590) Res. 89 called for revision of the OASI section under Social Security to include engineers, and other specified workers in dried fruit packing plants, removing these workers from the classification of agricultural workers. The resolution specifically referred to stationary engineers, and was referred to the Social Security Committee of the A. F. of L.

(1948, pp. 262, 465) Res. 84 called for extension of OASI to employees of religious, educational and charitable organizations, and was referred to the A. F. of L. Social Security Committee.

(1953, pp. 406, 417, 649) Res. 37 and 60 both dealt with the subject of extension of Social Security and specifically endorsed one legislative bill (H.R. 6846). The convention committee report on the subject was approved:

... This bill was drafted taking into account previous actions of Conventions of the A. F. of L. and is thoroughly consistent with such actions. Specifically, with respect to extension of coverage to employes of state and local governments it provides for such extension on an elective basis with a mandatory exclusion of policemen and fire fighters. Since the measure endorsed by these resolutions meets in every particular the standards and principles adopted by the A. F. of L., your committee recommends their adoption.

Financing—(1944, p. 148) There are two current proposals for financing old age insurance: one, on a contributory basis, and the other by appropriations from taxes. The American Federation of Labor has stood uncompromisingly for the contributory basis as the way to assure workers rights and equity in the system and to afford them a dignified, self-respecting way to meet their own problems. Wage earners are counting upon this insurance for the years when they are no longer able to work. If this insurance is financed out of taxes it will irresistibly be pulled down to relief standards and away from insurance for an emergency.

The responsibility of seeing to it that benefits are available as needed, rests upon Congress. For the past two years Congress has voted not to put into effect the two per cent contribution provided in the law. Some Members of Congress hold that the 1939 amendments were intended to adjust contributions to current needs, while the Social Security Board believes that this was not the case, and that the increased rate is necessary to provide the reserves to meet obligations incurred. There should be no misunderstanding on this basic issue. If the law is ambiguous, policy should be determined and the necessary amendments enacted.

The benefit load will not develop to its normal demands until after several decades of operation. Experience will indicate normal demand for benefits. We believe the rate of contribution should not be kept high just to pile up reserves when it is possible to go on a current pay-as-we-go basis. If too large reserves are frozen outside our productive economy, employment is endangered. However, the present benefit payments are low in comparison to contributions and earnings. The age at which the wife of an insured person becomes eligible for supplementary benefits should be lowered to 60. The basic primary benefit should be increased also for those who temporarily return to work and benefit rates should be recalculated on a basis of new earnings and contributions for old age beneficiaries. In addition, compensation should be provided for a related problem—permanent or long-time disability. The benefits should be the same as for old age.

(P. 596) The convention unanimously approved the report of the committee considering the broad field of Social Security, including OASI. (See: Social Security Amendments, 1944.)

Pay-as-You-Go Plan Opposed — (1953, pp. 404, 413, 651) Res. 34:

Whereas—The United States Chamber of Commerce has launched a nation-wide propaganda campaign designed to undermine public confidence in the present Social Security system, and

Whereas—The latest feature of this campaign is the proposal to eliminate the Old Age Assistance program of federal grants to the states for the relief of the indigent aged, the loading of all needy persons now over 65 who have never contributed to the Social Security fund onto the OASI benefit roles at the minimum benefit rate of $25 a month, the depletion of the trust fund which stands as the chief guarantee of the financial integrity of the Old-Age and Survivors' Insurance system and its replacement with a so-called "pay-as-you-go" plan with benefits entirely dependent upon payroll taxes and appropriations adopted from year to year by Congress, and

Whereas—The Chamber of Commerce program is a fraud against the people of the United States, inasmuch as its chief effects would be: (1) the reduction of the benefits now being received by aged persons on relief, which are now in excess of the $25 a month proposed by the Chamber of Commerce; (2) a shift in the cost of the old age relief program from general tax revenues to the OASI trust fund and payroll tax; (3) a drain on the trust fund built up by past OASI contributions, to relieve wealthy income taxpayers and to pay benefits to persons who have never contributed to the fund; (4) the freezing of Social Security benefits at the present level or lower; and (5) the elimination of all guarantees or security from the Social Security system, making benefits dependent upon the changing political tides and the variable whims of Congress, and

Whereas—The Chamber of Commerce campaign is a disguised tax raid upon the Social Security trust fund by big business, and a veiled attempt to destroy the principle of social insurance and to replace it with a low-level dole system, and

Whereas—The United States Chamber of Commerce, through its campaign of vicious slander against the Social Security system, has forfeited whatever right it ever had to be regarded as a responsible or well-meaning critic of the Social Security system, therefore, be it

Resolved—That the American Federation of Labor through every medium of information available, including radio, the Labor press and educational facilities, make known to the American people, and especially the wage earners, the insidious nature of this scheme to raid the funds held in trust for the benefit of the people of the United States, and be it further

Resolved—That the American Federation of Labor oppose this scheme or any portion of it being enacted by the Congress.

Acting jointly on Res. 34 and 51, convention approved its committee recommendation as follows:

Resolutions 34 and 51 both deal with the vicious and ill-disguised attack of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce against the Social Security system. The chamber scheme is designed to destroy the essential character of our contributory Old-Age and Survivors' Insurance system and substitute for it a system of relief based on a needs test. This program has been reviewed by the Social Security Committee of the A. F. of L. and condemned. The resolutions, in effect, reaffirm our existing policy and your committee recommends their adoption.

(Reserve Funds, Attacks Condemned)—(p. 413) Res. 51:

Whereas—President Eisenhower in his campaign speech in Los Angeles on October 9, 1952, is on record as saying that "The Republican platform affirms that we must do more than just keep our Social Security program—we must improve it and extend it," and

Whereas—Although this pledge was placed on the President's list of urgent legislation to be acted upon in the 1952 Session of Congress, and

Whereas—The Congress has resorted to delaying tactics under the old pretext of needing further time to "study" the program, and has adjourned without taking any action to improve it, and

Whereas—The United States Chamber of Commerce has proposed sweeping changes in the Social Security system, and

Whereas—Spokesmen for this organization have denounced the Social Security reserve fund as a "constant temptation to raid it for more immediate benefits" and as "an excuse for those who proposed that benefits be increased," and

Whereas—The Chamber of Commerce would seize this 17-billion-dollar Social Security reserve fund built up in part from workers' payroll deductions and use it to reduce taxes for the wealthy and for corporations, and

Whereas—In eliminating this reserve fund, they would also abolish the present federal grants to the states for aid to the aged, blind, needy children and physically handicapped, and include these non-contributing categories of assistance under the contributory system financed by payroll deductions, and

Whereas—This would mean a drastic reduction in public assistance to these needy people to a flat grant of no more than $25 a month, and

Whereas—The financing of these categories of outright assistance from payroll taxes rather than from the general revenues of government would mean a corresponding reduction in benefits to contributing participants in the program, therefore be it

Resolved—That the American Federation of Labor denounce this selfish attack on the welfare and security of the nation's working people in their declining years, and be it further

Resolved—That the officers of the American Federation of Labor be instructed and authorized to use every possible means to influence the President and the Congress to preserve and protect these hard-earned benefits from those who would deliberately wreck the Social Security program, and be it further

Resolved—That the President and Congress be reminded of their campaign pledges to improve and extend this program and their moral obligation to honor these pledges accepted in good faith by the American people.

(Trust Fund)—(pp. 445, 655) Res. 127 called for support of A. F. of L. in preventing legislation freezing contributions to Social Security Trust Fund.

Referred to A. F. of L. Committee on Social Security.

(Trust Fund, Solvency)—(uu. 441, 655) Res. 117 favored scheduled increase in contributions to the Social Security Trust Fund and opposed any attempt to amend the law in order to postpone or freeze the contribution rate.

(Trust Funds, Investment)—(pp. 442, 655) Res. 120:

Whereas—There are now nearly 18 billions of dollars held in trust for the payment of future benefits under the Old Age and Survivor Insurance program established under the Social Security Act, and

Whereas—This fund represents the accumulation of contributions deducted from the wages of workers, together with matching contributions paid by employers which latter represent, in fact, deferred wage payments, and

Whereas—Under the contribution rate increases scheduled in the present Social Security Act it is anticipated that in the future the funds which will accumulate will total nearly 80 billions of dollars, and

Whereas—Critics of the Social Security system have created certain lack of confidence in the present program of holding the reserves in U.S. Government Bonds as required by law (though this lack of confidence is not shared by the working people nor those who understand the true nature of these reserves), therefore, be it

Resolved—That the 72nd Annual Convention of the American Federation of Labor request its President to direct the appropriate agency within the American Federation of Labor to undertake a study of possible alternative means of investing the reserves of the Social Security Trust Fund with the following objectives:

1. Protect funds against loss of value due to inflation.
2. Protect funds against diversion to purposes other than payment of benefits to wage earners who have contributed.
3. Provide secure investment in real assets that will both yield income and meet immediate social needs—such as workers' housing, and be it further

Resolved—That in event such study reveals practical alternative methods of investing the Social Security reserve funds, the A. F. of L. President prepare and present to the Congress the necessary implementing legislation.

Referred to A. F. of L. Committee on Social Security.

Old Age Assistance (also see: Soc. Sec.)—(1939, p. 182) Labor believes that pensions should be adequate for decent living standards. It believes that the extremes in pensions reflect economic capacity of the states to make provision for their old people, rather than differences in need in various sections. The aged people of the poorer states should be given more income. We believe that federal grants-in-aid to the states for all of the assistance programs of the Social Security Act should be on a variable basis, a larger proportion of the total expenditure for the assistance of each individual being supplied by the federal government in those states whose per capita income is below the national average than in those whose income is above that average in order that the poorer states may pay pensions more nearly adequate than at present.

While Labor is firm in its belief that the person who is past his years of productive service is entitled to a reasonable income and security for his old age, we would see the social security program developed as a coordinated whole with security for young and old, unemployed and incapacitated, being expanded at an even pace. We are against extravagant programs for one group at the expense of all wage earners who must provide for themselves and their families through many years on wages often too low. We must guard against increasing too sharply the burden of taxes on those wages.

(1939, p. 631) To assist in caring for needy aged persons, the Social Security Board may make grants-in-aid to states whose laws have been approved by the Board on a 50-50 basis. Congress raised the maximum Federal contribution from $15 to $20 in its last session, raising the total with-in which it would match the state contribution up to $40.

The Executive Council points out, however, that liberalizing the Federal contribution means no more security for the needy aged unless the state increases its payment. Only one state — California — has been paying an average pension of $30 or more; payments in eight states average less than $10 even with Federal aid; in one state the average amount paid was $6.05. Although these small sums cannot be called social security, they reflect the economic capacity of the states concerned to meet the problem.

We therefore recommend approval of the position of the Executive Council in urging variable grants so that for those states with less wealth and lower per capita incomes the federal government shall pay a larger percentage of individual pension paid to needy aged.

We recommend hearty concurrence with the warning of the Executive Council against extravagant programs. Security must be provided out of national income. Promises that must be met by taxes must be in proportion to capacity to pay and in proportion to the full security program.

We further urge central labor unions and state federations of labor to consult the President of the American Federation of Labor before giving their endorsement to proposals for change.

age assistance grants in many states, much of the criticism of such grants which helps promote unreasonable demands for pensions for everyone based on right, not on need, arises from onerous and unnecessary requirements for eligibility for pensions. A number of states have unnecessarily multiplied the difficulties of a needy old person in securing a pension.

We recognize the practical problem involved in paying uniform pensions to all persons of any specified age, regardless of need. We know that many extravagant pension plans would handicap tax-paying wage earners and prevent a sound development of a well-rounded plan of social security. We therefore recommend that we work for improvement and expansion of the Social Security Act rather than its replacement by any extravagant pension plan which is not on a sound financial basis and which concentrates on only one part of the total problem of social security—that of the aged person.

(1947, p. 609) We urge the adoption of a unified public assistance program to meet the needs of those not protected by the social insurances. Such a program should provide grants-in-aid to the states adjusted to their relative needs and ability to pay. We urge support of the legislation which has been introduced and designed to meet these objectives.

Special attention is directed by the Executive Council to the curtailment of its Labor Information Service. The important service of acquainting workers with their rights and of informing them in cooperation with their union organizations of their duties under the Social Security Act, is essential. We need this service and want it continued.

(1951, p. 532) The following committee report and recommendations unanimously approved:

Constant pressures are being exerted to curtail public assistance services and to cut federal and state appropriations for public assistance programs. Labor must stand guard against the disruption and crippling of these essential services.

We must also stand firmly against the attempts in certain states and in the Congress for disclosure of information about recipients of public assistance, in defiance of the basic principles written into the law by the Congress. We especially commend the Federal Security Administrator for his courageous fight against the attempts of certain state officials to breach the law and exploit the dire needs of the poor.

(1952, p. 202) Welfare needs of the nation have been intensified in the last generation. Lack of adequate housing and sound community planning is one of the most important contributory causes to family instability and multiplying welfare needs. Labor should stand watchful guard to make sure that the essential public assistance programs are adequate, that they are soundly administered so that the welfare of those in need is properly safeguarded.

(1953, pp. 301, 639) The Executive Council Report on the broad field of Social Security included a section on "Family Security and Public Assistance" (Old Age Assistance). The convention unanimously approved its committee report and recommendations:

The Old Age Assistance program, providing aid to the needy aged through a system of Federal grants to the States, is an important and necessary backstop for the Old-Age and Survivors' Insurance program. Until such time as the OASI system is expanded and its benefit structure improved so as to enable all persons reaching the age of retirement to qualify for a decent level of benefits, the relief program must be continued and strengthened for the benefit of those in need of financial assistance.

To abandon the system of Federal grants-in-aid and to blanket Old Age Assistance beneficiaries into the insurance program at a $25 a month minimum benefit, as is now advocated by the Chamber of Commerce, would do irreparable injury both to persons on relief and persons who have contributed to the OASI fund and have a stake in the preservation of its financial integrity. Public assistance payments to the needy aged are, on the average, well in excess of $25 at the present time. Since many of the States would not pick up the load if Federal grants were abandoned, this would result in complete destitution for those helpless aged persons and a return of the old county poorhouse.

A Presidential Commission has been established to study the entire field of Federal-State financial relationship, including the system of Federal grants-in-aid. Although this Commission is supposed to be made up of all segments of the community, we have not been accorded representation on it. This Commission, unbalanced as it is in its make-up, is not constituted to inspire confidence in its findings and recommendations called for in the public interest. We must therefore be especially on guard against the threat of elimination of Federal grants and other moves detrimental to national welfare. Those whose welfare depends upon the maintenance of Federal aid programs must not be abandoned to the tender mercies of the individual States—most of which either cannot or will not undertake to meet the need unaided by the Federal government. This would be an economic catastrophe for millions of American citizens.

The public assistance program has already been seriously weakened by attacks at both the State and Federal level. It needs to be strengthened and improved, with more effective minimum national standards, and not weakened further. Labor must be constantly on its guard against new efforts, either through so-called "study" commissions or in Congress, to damage or destroy the public assistance program.

We further recommend that efforts be continued to secure the repeal of the notorious Jenner amendment requiring disclosure of public relief rolls.

Older Workers (Discrimination)— (1928, p. 274) A rule is being applied in the manufacturing industries of North America to eliminate workmen forty-five or more years of age and in many instances reject men over forty years of age who seek employment; and as this rule or policy is becoming more prevalent and applied by larger numbers of employers making it increasingly more difficult for those in middle age to secure satisfactory positions and as this condition has been intensified in many establishments because employers have inaugurated group insurance for their employees, a condition has been created which intensifies the evil of unemployment.

A most unjust hardship has been placed upon the workers who have given the best years of their lives in assisting to produce the nation's wealth. Group insurance has been used to tie men to their jobs, particularly those advancing toward middle age. If collective action to redress an injury is taken by the workmen collectively and a strike occurs, re-employment of the middle-aged man is made difficult if not impossible. A condition has developed through the ulterior uses which are being made of group insurance which makes it necessary that a thoroughgoing investigation should be made of the subject. The A. F. of L. denounces the practice of denying employment to those who have reached middle age and the growing practice by employers of using group insurance for ulterior purposes, condemning it as inhuman.

(1929, p. 94) The rapidity and the extent of industrial change in the recent past have been accompanied by great human wastes. We were accustomed to the expression "this is an age of young men." It was accepted that new industries and new methods necessitate new workers — workers without experience in the old ways. Just what sort of a problem this practice was developing was not at first apparent.

.. Many industrial undertakings have adopted policies fixing the age at which workers could be employed. Without very much consideration or study and no technical information, they assume that younger workers are more profitable than older ones. Some industries have fixed the age limit at 35, others 40, others 45, etc.

(P. 288) Discrimination against older workers presents an instructive picture of that ruthless practice of commerce and industry under which the worker as he reaches the period of middle age and full development of family life finds difficulty in securing employment because of his age. Not only is there a widespread practice on the part of firms and corporations in all sorts of business to place an arbitrary limit upon the maximum age in the hiring of new employees, but there is also evidence that many such concerns have no hesitancy in discharging older workers even after years of service. Industry as a whole must be made to understand that economic arrangements must be made whereby every person who desires employment must have an opportunity to work, or, failing in that, society, through its various political divisions, must make arrangements whereby those who are discarded by industry must be cared for at public expense. One course or the other is inevitable. A steadily widening knowledge of the rules of health is lengthening the span of human life. Not only must ample opportunity be given for the continued employment of the middle-aged, a need so apparent that it should require neither explanation nor argument, but places must be made for those who are entering upon that period which was formerly regarded as near to the end of the human trail. The average man of sixty years today is stronger and healthier and more alert than was the average man of some years younger a few decades ago. Through physical and mental hygiene, sanitation, medicine, surgery and safety regulations in commerce and industry, man is securing a firmer hold upon life.

The E.C. is instructed to continue its investigation and study of this important question with a view to formulating some definite plan whereby the discrimination against older workers may be brought to an end.

(1930, pp. 89, 271) The problem of the older worker is not a new one, but under present day conditions it has become serious. In most families, it is necessary for adult members to make a contribution to the family income. In earlier periods, these contributions could take the form of work around the house, in the garden, sharing in household activities. The organization of the modern home has eliminated practically all of these activities and older people are forced to seek gainful employment outside the home.

Repeatedly reports come from these older workers that arbitrary hiring limits make it practically impossible for them to find employment, and their experience and abilities are not made useful. Although these reports are numerous, there is practically no dependable information as to the facts or scope of the problem.

(1931, p. 128) Resolution No. 2 of the Boston convention called attention to the age limit which applied to applicants for government employment and asked that the convention declare for an extension of the age limit. The convention directed the E.C. to confer with officials of all organizations having members in the government service for the purpose of endeavoring to formulate a new policy appropriate to the needs of each group of government workers. That conference was duly held with full and free discussion of all interested parties. As a result thereof we recommend to this convention that a clear and definite declaration be made in opposition to the government setting any maximum age limit in the applicants for appointment to government service.

When we oppose the age limit policy of private employes we are met with the position of the government as support for their position.

(P. 303) After much discussion the entire question of the practice of limiting the ages at which persons would be given employment was referred to the E.C. for further investigation.

(P. 137) Business depression has added to the difficulties of older workers who have found industry ready to discard them rather than consider plans to help them adjust themselves to meet industrial changes. We have repeatedly called attention to the social injustice and economic waste of discarding workers with industrial experience and work judgment just at a time when their maturity has become a valuable asset.

The returns from the April 1930 unemployment inquiry — summarized under the section on unemployment— shows that of the workers over 20 years of age reporting 34 per cent were over 45 years of age and 16 per cent over 55 years. This means that unemployment falls heavily upon workers most likely to have dependents and financial commitments.

We urge that planning to take care of the unemployed shall include provisions for older workers and that state bureaus of labor statistics shall continue inquiries to get the facts of employment on older workers and to develop constructive plans.

(P. 351) If industry is going to continue to discard men who have reached the ages of 45 and 50 years, then we must have a readjustment in the wage system that will permit of a saving wage ample to allow for retirement of wage workers at the new age limits now arbitrarily set by industry, and we recommend that in negotiating wage scales in the future all local unions demand that wage scales be made on this basis.

(1933, pp. 93, 425) The policy of establishing an age limit for hiring workers is a grave menace to the older worker. Developments of the last few years have brought no relief. In fact, this policy is, if anything, becoming more widespread. It had at the start a definite connection with the spread of employee benefit plans financed by the employer, such as group insurance or old-age pensions; but age limits have now extended far beyond the field of such benefit plans. The practice is so general that workers over 45 in many localities find it practically impossible to get a job, and workers of 40 and even 35 are also finding age limits applied against them. The far-reaching effect of this injustice to the worker is not fully realized. Men who have spent their lives in honest, conscientious work for an employer, who have developed skill and experience with the years, may be laid off and literally thrown on the scrap heap at 40 or 45. By the time a man has reached this age, his children are at the age when education and preparation for the future will determine the course of their lives. If he loses his job and income, the children are forced to leave school and go to work. Many a young man of ability has thus been forced to abandon the trade or career for which he was training and has never again been able to rise out of drudgery.

The age limit also means a loss to industry, in that it eliminates workers who have reached an age of responsibility and who have twenty or thirty years' training in industrial work. Experience and responsibility are essential in any work where the quality of the product is concerned.

The A. F. of L. is opposed to discriminating against workers in industry on a basis of age as well as in other unfair discriminations. We also oppose the Government's setting any maximum age for applicants for employment. The employment or retention of workers should be based upon competence to perform work, and not on arbitrary age limit.

(1934, p. 414) The U.S. Civil Service Commission provides a maximum age limit of 48 years for new employees in all departments. The A. F. of L. urgently requests the regulations to permit of the employment of capable and able workers on temporary jobs, changing the maximum age limit to not less than 55 years.

(1937, pp. 161, 317) Representative Mead of New York has introduced a Joint Resolution in the House of Representatives directing the Secretary of Labor to investigate and report to Congress upon the nature and effect of any economic conditions or statutory provisions which tend to produce unfair or inequitable discrimination on the basis of age in obtaining and retaining employment in public service and private industry.

The resolution states that the rapid mechanization of industries and other factors beyond his control make it increasingly difficult for the older worker to obtain and retain employment. It also states that this condition affects materially the well-being and comfort of a considerable number of our citizens and threatens our social structure so that its alleviation and correction has become a matter of public concern.

Members of Congress are very much disturbed by evidence submitted at many committee hearings that workers in private employment over forty years of age find it difficult to retain their jobs or obtain new ones. In order to express the opposition to such methods the Senate passed S. 714, which forbids any age limit being fixed by the Civil Service Commission. Any applicant who passes an examination and is later appointed to a position in the classified Civil Service shall be eligible to retire under the Retirement Act if he has served fifteen years or more. The House failed to act. Agitation for elimination of the age limit, however, caused the Civil Service Commission to make radical changes.

(P. 436) The E.C. is requested to take up with the Department of Labor the question of having a study made of age discrimination in employment and submit a report at the earliest possible time.

(1938, pp. 171, 547) H.J. Res. 453 proposed to determine the nature and effect of economic conditions or statutory provisions tending to produce unfair discrimination on the basis of age in obtaining or retaining employment in public service and private industry, failed of passage.

It provided that the Secretary of Labor investigate and report to Congress upon the nature and effect of any economic conditions or statutory provisions which may tend to produce unfair or inequitable discrimination on the basis of age in obtaining or retaining employment in public service or private industry; the extent to which age is a factor in determining the efficiency of men and women and the effect of the pension systems and group and workmen's compensation insurance upon the employment of the older worker.

The question of discharging workers after reaching a certain age or of refusing them employment because they had an objectionable age has been the cause of great concern for many years.

The E.C. favors such an investigation and it is the intention to have the resolution reintroduced at the next session of Congress.

(P. 174) The 1937 Convention of the A. F. of L. directed the E.C. to request the Secretary of Labor to make a study of the problems of those workers who, in increasing numbers, in their fifties, forties, and even their thirties, were being denied employment. A committee, composed of representatives of employers, of organized labor, and of the public which was appointed by the secretary, has held several meetings and has appointed subcommittees which are now preparing their conclusions and recommendations on various topics, such as age limits in civil service, the effect of pension plans, group insurance, and compensation for accidents and disease on employment policies, and the relative efficiency and susceptibility to accidents of younger and older workers.

Meanwhile a legislative committee in New York State has been holding hearings at different points throughout the state, and has issued a preliminary report. Funds have been voted to continue the inquiry another year. The International Labor Office, at the instance of the American Labor delegate, has moved to launch an international study of the question.

Whatever reasons these studies may disclose for the difficulties that older persons experience in regaining employment once they have lost their footing in the present highly competitive labor market, the great loss in productive manpower through this discrimination is fully apparent. Whatever individual employers think they may gain from refusing to hire those who have passed an arbitrary age limit, it is clear that society is losing the services of many experienced and competent workers, and that the families of these workers are foregoing their earning power just when it should be at its prime.

Among the proposed legislative remedies, the laws enacted this year by New York and New Jersey merit attention. These laws attempt to eliminate all maximum age barriers from civil service examinations and appointments, whether state or municipal, except for certain positions having unusual physical requirements—for instance, firemen, policemen, and prison guards.

(1940, p. 530) Protest was voiced by the convention against existing practice of discriminating against older workers in private and government shipping departments. The resolution on this subject, unanimously adopted, contained the following:

Whereas—Happiness can only be secured by giving all men an equal opportunity to work and live the American way; and

Whereas—There is in general little correlation between age and ability, because both experience and superannuation are functions of age, the result of such conflict is usually dependent upon the individual involved; and

Whereas—That ability, not age, must be maintained as the criterion for employment. Not only is ability a more realistic basis, but age can be arbitrarily used as a weapon of discrimination against members of various labor organizations; now, therefore be it

Resolved—That the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor petition the President, Congress and United States Maritime Commission to take steps to enact legislation that this discrimination, especially on subsidized vessels, be discontinued.

(1949, pp. 343, 501) Res. 118 provided that:

... the 68th Annual Convention of the American Federation of Labor assembled in St. Paul, Minnesota, go on record as favoring the introduction of national legislation that would make it an unfair labor practice charge for any employer to discharge any employee or to refuse to hire any applicant for employment because of advanced age unless the employee or applicant is eligible for retirement benefits either under the Social Security laws of the United States Government or a private plan or a combination of such plans.

(1950, p. 202) The E.C. reported on Res. 118 (1949 Convention) which called for the enactment of legislation eliminating discrimination against workers because of age.

It clearly points out that men and women of forty-five years of age are classified as older workers and are denied employment because of age. This is not only true in private employment but is also true in some agencies of the government and indeed in the case of police, firemen, and others in the District of Columbia, municipalities and in states, the age limit for employment is much lower than forty-five years.

The resolution requests that federal legislation be introduced making it an unfair labor practice charge for any employer to discharge any employee or to refuse to hire any applicant for employment because of advanced age unless the employee or applicant is eligible for retirement benefits either under the United States Social Security laws or a private plan or a combination of such plans.

The intent of this resolution is commendable and in our opinion workable. However, if such legislation is to be proposed in the 82nd Congress, with it should go a reduction of the retirement age under Social Security and private plans.

(Pp. 20, 459) Res. 3:

Whereas—The economic conditions of our country change from year to year, and security is becoming less stable for a great many Americans, especially among men who are reaching the winter of their life, and

Whereas—Factory and shop management are struggling to find ways and means to lay off or discharge employes of forty-five years of age and upwards, and

Whereas—Our labor papers, magazines, periodicals, pamphlets, etc., are continually pointing out that our economic system is fast becoming a monopolistic system, and pointing out instances of the above conditions and abuses, and

Whereas—Laws are made and enforced in many European countries to protect men with seniority service; therefore, be it

Resolved—That the American Federation of Labor in convention assembled at Houston, Texas, become active in attempting to secure national laws that will better protect employes past forty-five years of age.

Officers of the A. F. of L. instructed to make further inquiry into the subject.

Oleomargarine Tax—(1944, p. 169) Margarine is a wholesome, nutritious, inexpensive table fat manufactured from agricultural commodities and, as such, is necessary to low-income groups who cannot afford to purchase butter. The ten-cent per pound tax on margarine results in an unnecessary, unjustifiable price increase which is inflicted upon the low-paid masses, and the Executive Council recommends that efforts to eliminate this objectionable tax be continued.

(P. 411) Reporting on bill to repeal the tax of ten cents per pound upon colored oleomargarine, the Executive Council points out that it is a tax borne almost exclusively by low-paid workers and others in low-income groups and recommends continued efforts to secure its repeal.

The committee recommends adoption of the Executive Council's report and recommendation.

(1948, pp. 165, 409) Continued efforts to secure repeal of tax on oleomargarine was reported to the convention and previous position of A. F. of L. unanimously reaffirmed.

(1949, pp. 240, 386) For a considerable number of years, by unanimous convention action, we have favored repeal of this tax on oleomargarine and will continue our efforts.

(1950, p. 199) After many years of opposition to the oleomargarine tax on the part of Labor, the E. C. reported that the repeal became effective July 1, 1950.

Olympic Games (1935, p. 801) The A. F. of L. has in the last two conventions pledged its moral and economic force to fight Hitlerism for its destruction of the trade union movement and for its denial to its citizens of their religious liberty.

The Olympic Games, which should promote sportsmanship and good will, are being used by the Nazis to intensify hatreds and race discriminations.

The A. F. of L. reaffirms its determination to use its full moral and economic force to fight Hitlerism. In keeping with this declaration, the A. F. of L. opposes the participation of the U.S. in the Olympic Games in Berlin in 1936.

Office of Price Administration (see: Price Controls)

Open Shop—(1926, p. 46) The campaign in opposition to trade unionism expressed in the form of the open shop or American plan has spent its force. Though we have defeated and discredited the endeavor, we realize that the purpose that it expressed still persists. There are certain types of minds which seek benefits for themselves by taking advantage of others. Employers of this class will continue to oppose trade unions.

This is an age of collective or group activity. Our undertakings are on a much larger scale and cooperation has largely replaced individual responsibility. From this at once is apparent the deceit of the cry for the protection of the individual to contract for his services with an organized unit of capital.

In addition organization is continuously necessary in meeting production problems which management must take up with the workers. It is the only way through which decision can be reached and the workers assured definite responsibilities. It is essential to industrial justice and stability.

Time and experience have demonstrated the broad vision displayed by the workers in their insistence upon their unrestricted right to organization into trade unions, and the helpful and constructive policies and results that are to be furthered and secured through voluntary collective bargaining.

It is not to be assumed that the agitation for the purpose sought through the so-called open shop or American plan has disappeared from our industrial life. Our intention is only to record the fact that the promotion of this particular phase of doctrine and practice has been largely abated. Neither do we attempt to lessen the importance of the workers being alert in meeting this form of opposition. We are calling attention in other sections of this report to new forms which opposition to trade unionism has assumed and we urge that renewed efforts be made by all workers in the furtherance of trade union organization and the advancement of voluntary trade union agreements based upon the principles of equality, justice, fair play and full participation in the rewards that come from the joint enterprise of Labor and capital engaged in industrial and commercial undertakings.

(P. 304) The A. F. of L. believes there are but two fundamental policies between which management must choose in deciding its personnel relations policies: cooperation or control from the top.

Cooperation implies voluntary association of the functional groups concerned with production represented through organizations evolved by each group to deal with distinctive group problems.

Control from the top denies the right of voluntary association and either forbids all group controlled organization or substitutes a form of organization controlled by employers.

The principle of voluntary association provides opportunity for individual initiative and is in accord with the spirit and the institutions which express American ideals. The application of this principle provides continuous opportunities for developing reciprocal interests and sustained advancement of mutual interests.

The anti-union shop is based on denial of the right of voluntary association of those who use the tools and materials of production and render service. This denial makes conflict inevitable. It introduces the idea of strife instead of conference and endeavor to find a common ground.

Because the effort to promote the so-called "open shop" or "company union" or "American plan" has not abated, the A. F. of L. emphatically indorses the warning of the E.C.

Optical Instruments (Importation)—(1951, pp. 281, 549) Res. 21:

Whereas—The photographic and precision optical industry is engaged in the manufacture of shutters and precision optitcal instruments, and

Whereas—Photographic and Precision Optical Workers Local Union 24659 and Optical Workers Union 18579 have bargaining agreements with industry, under which they are seeking increased pay, and

Whereas—The cost of labor represents the largest part of the cost of the products made by the industry, and

Whereas—Foreign imports made by foreign labor, such as German and Japanese, at rates only a fraction of American wage scales, and

Whereas—Due to the foreign competition, the industry is unable to obtain the prices necessary to meet the request of the unions, and

Whereas—The industry is unable to continue full-scale production of its regular products due to governmental material restrictions while foreign competition without restriction of materials can flood the American market with these products, therefore, be it

Resolved—That the American Federation of Labor seek legislation which will remedy this condition by restricting the export of raw materials to the same extent as the use of raw materials are restricted in the United States, and also to restrict imports of such competitive products so that this highly skilled industry can survive for the protection of our country in case of aggression when its production is essential for survival, and oppose any further tariff reductions that will expose our workers further to unfair competition from foreign substandard wages and working conditions.

Organizing, Assessment for—(1937, pp. 110, 633) The organizing work of the American Federation of Labor has been carried forward aggressively and in a highly successful way. Following the decision of the Supreme Court holding the National Labor Relations Act constitutitonal, workers in all lines of industry showed both a willingness and a determination to become organized. The spirit of organization became very pronounced. The fear of discrimination and persecution has overcome when the workers became acquainted with the full meaning and import of the decision of the Supreme Court.

As a consequence of these developments the organizing staff of the A. F. of L. has been very greatly increased. These organizers are carrying on a systematic campaign of organization in every state, city and community throughout the entire country. Great progress has been made in heretofore unorganized fields such as cement, aluminum, flour and cereal milling, agriculture, packing houses and canneries, white collar groups, and other miscellaneous industries.

In addition, national and international unions affiliated with the A. F. of L. have inaugurated and carried forward most successful organizing campaigns. As a result of this joint coordinated work carried forward by national and international unions and the A. F. of L., approximately a million new members have been added to the A. F. of L. All of these are dues-paying members, men and women who show their determination to become organized through the payment of initiation fees and monthly dues.

It is the firm and determined purpose of the A. F. of L. to organize the unorganized workers who desire to become organized and associated with an organization such as the A. F. of L. which for more than half a century has championed the principles of collective bargaining, of freedom to organize and to strike, and to use every honorable and legal means in the promotion of strikes for high wages and improved conditions of employment. It is the fixed and determined purpose to go on and on in support of campaigns launched by the A. F. of L. and of national and international unions affiliated with it for the purpose of organizing the unorganized workers of the nation.

We are confident we will win this great contest. We are sure the workers of the nation will turn to a responsible organization such as the A. F. of L., firmly established for more than half a century in the economic and industrial life of the nation.

The fighting spirit of the officers and members of the A. F. of L. has been aroused as never before. The word "defeat" cannot be found in the vocabulary of those who fight and serve the A. F. of L. Our efforts to organize will be increased, our organizing staff will carry on a militant and aggressive organizing campaign. Our state federations of labor and city central bodies, purged of those who would transform them into agencies of a dual, rival organization, united in a common purpose and established upon a sound and solid A. F. of L. basis, will take such action as may be necessary in order to protect and advance the interests of the officers and members of the A. F. of L. We are going forward, determined to win. No force will stop this onward march of the A. F. of L. to organize the unorganized of the nation.

In order to continue the aggressive, militant organizing campaign which is now being carried on by the A. F. of L., the convention authorizes the continuance of the assessment of one cent per member per month, which was endorsed and approved by the conference of representatives of national and international unions which was held in Cincinnati, Ohio, May 24-25, 1937. With the financial income to the A. F. of L. which will flow from the payment of this one cent assessment we cannot only continue but can increase and accelerate the organizing campaign which has been so successfully carried on during the past year. This question is of tremendous importance.

(1938, pp. 80, 292) While the national and international organizations affiliated with the A. F. of L. have carried on organizing work within their respective jurisdictions in a highly successful way, the A. F. of L. itself has extended its organizing work among the unorganized workers in the fields outside of the respective jurisdictions of affiliated national and international unions. This action is in conformity with instructions of the San Francisco Convention of the A. F. of L. which was held in 1934, and all conventions of the A. F. of L. which have been held since that time

In order to facilitate the organizing work of the A. F. of L., an Organization Department was created and a Director of Organization placed in charge. Through such department the organization activities of the A. F. of L. were coordinated and the intensity of our organizing campaign increased.

Unorganized workers in every section have manifested increasing interest in organization and have responded to the appeals of our organizing staff to become affiliated with the A. F. of L., in a most wonderful and successful way. We have organized many thousands of workers in industries where no semblance of organization had ever before existed.

For instance, in the agricultural and cannery industries of California, on the Pacific Coast and elsewhere, thousands of workers were organized into unions directly affiliated with the A. F. of L., who had known nothing about organization before. Our experience gained in this particular field shows that these workers, notwithstanding they are employed in seasonal industries, remain loyal and steadfast to the A. F. of L. when they become organized.

The fields in which the American Federation of Labor has specialized are among those employed as office workers and those classified as white collar workers, beet sugar workers, cement workers, gasoline station attendants, and in the flour and cereal milling, fabricated metal, aluminum, agricultural and cannery, chemical, distillery and communications industries, as well as miscellaneous workers employed in other fields.

The organizing staff of the A. F. of L. has been aggressive and alert. The workers who become organized have manifested a fighting spirit and as a result, contracts have been negotiated which provide for increases in wages and improvements in working conditions. On the other hand, through the mobilization of their economic strength in well-established organizations, they have in numerous instances successfully resisted any and all attempts to impose reductions in wages. In accordance with the traditional policy of the A. F. of L. strikes have been inaugurated and supported where it became absolutely necessary in order to maintain the integrity of local federal labor union wage scales established and conditions of employment gained through organized effort and collective bargaining. State federations of labor and city central labor unions have given our organizing staff and the A. F. of L. most valuable support.

We review with a feeling of deep satisfaction the progress made in our organization work during the past year, and we are gratified, indeed, over the success which attended our efforts. The workers everywhere are turning to the A. F. of L. They are learning through experience and by contrast with a dual, seceding movement, more and more of the real value and worth of the A. F. of L. Public opinion, which develops but slowly in favor of or against movements which are launched in the economic, social and political life of the nation, has crystallized in support of the A. F. of L. We have more real friends outside the A. F. of L. than we ever before had in all the history of our great movement.

The call for assistance and help coming from the unorganized workers of the nation is increasing and the demands made upon us for organizers to perfect organization among unorganized workers, is greater than ever before. We have found it impossible to respond as fully as conditions demand to the appeals which have been made for field workers, organizers, and assistance. It is the purpose and policy of the A. F. of L. to cooperate with all national and international unions affiliated with the A. F. of L. in carrying on their own organizing campaigns, and in addition concentrate our efforts in carrying on organizing work among those employed in the industries named in this report and in the miscellaneous industries where little or no organization has ever existed.

The A. F. of L. has gone to the limit of its financial ability in carrying on organizing work in all sections, industries and communities. We will continue this policy. Every appeal for organizing assistance and help will be met so far as our financial resources will permit. In order to do this and to carry on our organizing work in a bigger, broader and even more aggressive way, it is necessary that adequate funds be provided.

Therefore this convention authorizes and directs the continuance of the assessment of one cent per member per month, which was legally and officially levied at the Fifty-seventh Annual Convention of the A. F. of L. held at Denver, Colorado, in October, 1937, for another year. The funds provided through the payment of this assessment will enable the A. F. of L. to continue its organization policies, maintain the gains we have already made, and render additional service both to national and international unions affiliated with the A. F. of L. and to the unorganized workers of the nation.

(1939, p. 61) The Fifty-ninth Annual Convention of the A. F. of L. authorizes and directs the continuance of the one cent per member per month assessment which was first legally and officially levied by the Fifty-seventh Annual Convention of the A. F. of L. and which has continued in effect ever since. The continuation of the income of the A. F. of L., at its present amount at least, will enable us to consolidate and hold the gains we have made, to protect the legal rights of the workers through service rendered by our legal department, to adequately and properly present the cases of subordinate unions which are presented to the National Labor Relations Board, and to continue to render the high and exalted service which the A. F. of L. has always given to the workers of the nation.

Oriental Exclusion (see: Immigration and Naturalization)

Overtime (also see: Wages)

(1929, p. 378) In addition to our fundamental policy in favor of a shorter work day, work-week and an advancing rate of wages, we record it as our policy, commended to all affiliated bodies, that overtime work be abolished wherever possible and that it be resorted to only when its avoidance is rendered impossible by causes beyond the control of workers and management.

Pacific Coast, Contracts for (Government)—(1948, pp. 331, 470) Res. 126 called upon the A. F. of L. to officially request the U.S. Government to recognize western industries in awarding government contracts, and especially that immediate evidence of a fair division of contracts be given by the Maritime Commission and by the Navy to western shipyards.

Paint and Varnish Manufacture by Government—(1954, pp. 405, 488) Res. 87 protested against the manufacture of paint, varnish and lacquer at Mare Island and other government installations as contrary to American system of free enterprise.

The resolution was referred to the Executive Council for inquiry and action.

Palestine (also see: Jews, Nazi Atrocities, Israel)—(1944, p. 626) Res. 166, together with convention committee report, adopted as follows:

Whereas—The inhuman slaughter of European Jewry continues unabated, and the Nazis—intent upon completing their program to annihilate the Jewish people—are devising new and more horrible methods of mass murder. The documented reports of the unparalleled crimes committed in the death camps of Maidanek, Oswiecim and Treblinka, in the ghettos of Poland, in the market places of Roumania and Hungary, have outraged civilized humanity. To date, approximately 4,000,000 innocent Jewish men, women and children have suffered horrible death by shooting, asphyxiation, starvation, strangulation and fire, and

Whereas—We are determined that those Jews who have survived the holocaust shall be rescued and rehabilitated by the United Nations, and are equally determined that such rescue and rehabilitation shall conform to the particular needs and problems of uprooted European Jewry, and

Whereas — Decisions affecting the future of the homeless Jews of Europe are being made daily by international agencies, such as the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration and the Intergovernmental Committee on Refugees, agencies which derive their authority from the peoples of the United Nations, and

Whereas — The people of the United States have demonstrated their wholehearted sympathy with the plight of Europe's Jews and have expressed America's determination to bring about a just solution of this most pressing of human problems — a solution which will take into account the real needs and desires of the Jewish people. During the past year the American people have called for the fulfillment of the pledge contained in the Balfour Declaration. An overwhelming majority of our people desire the opening of Palestine's doors to unrestricted Jewish immigration and colonization, and the re-establishment of Palestine as a free and democratic Jewish commonwealth. These sentiments have been voiced through the forthright Palestine planks included in the platforms of both major political parties, and through the notable statements endorsing Jewish aspirations in Palestine made by a large majority of the membership of both Houses of Congress, and

Whereas — The President of the United States, in an historic declaration made on October 15, 1944, reaffirmed our country's traditional policy of support for the Jewish National Home in the following words: "I know how long and ardently the Jewish people have worked and prayed for the establishment of Palestine as a free and democratic Jewish commonwealth. I am convinced that the American people give their support to this aim and if re-elected I shall help to bring about its realization," and

Whereas — The American Federation of Labor has followed a policy of staunch and unwavering friendship for Jewish Palestine and has throughout the years supported the Jewish National Home and admired the magnificent accomplishment of Palestine Jewry, and

Whereas — The American Federation of Labor has always had deep respect for and a feeling of kinship with the Histadruth, the General Federation of Labor in Palestine, and has during the past year supported the program so admirably carried out by the American Jewish Trade Union Committee for Palestine, and

Whereas — Jewish Palestine has demonstrated its willingness and its ability to rehabilitate Europe's persecuted Jews and has, despite the Chamberlain White Paper of 1939 and other obstacles, fought the war against the common enemy with almost unparalleled devotion to democratic cause, and

Whereas — Resolutions, reflecting America's conviction that at long last justice must be done to the long suffering Jewish people, have been introduced into both Houses of Congress: These bi-partisan measures H.R. 418-419 and S.R. 247) call for the free entry of Jews into Palestine and full opportunity for colonization, so that the Jewish people may ultimately reconstitute Palestine as a free and democratic Jewish commonwealth, and

Whereas — The Secretary of War has recently announced that no military reasons stand in the way of action on the Palestine resolutions, therefore, be it

Resolved—That the American Federation of Labor, in convention assembled, urges the passage at the earliest possible moment of the pending Palestine resolutions, and, be it further

Resolved—That the American Federation of Labor calls for the reconstitution of Palestine as a free and democratic Jewish commonwealth and urges upon the Government of the United States to take speedy and definite action on the Palestine question—action which will be in conformity with the historic, but as yet unfulfilled, pledges made to the Jewish people, and with the present needs of the persecuted Jews of Europe.

Your committee, in reporting favorably upon this resolution and recommending its adoption, submits the following comments and observations:

While the armies of the United Nations are fighting their way into Germany, the butchery of the Jews in Nazi-occupied Europe continues with unabated ferocity. Eye-witness accounts which began to reach this country a number of years ago, have now accumulated in sufficient quantity to prove beyond a shadow of a doubt the determination of the Hitlerite gangsters that, come what may, the Jewish people shall disappear from the face of the earth. Latest reports are that 4,000,000 Jews were executed in the ghastly death camps. The horrifying photographs from the Maidanek camp near Lublin provide visual proof of the systematic and coldly scientific methods by which Nazi officials use the ashes of Jews destroyed in the slaughter ovens to fertilize their fields. They sort the garments and toys of murdered Jewish infants and send these to the Reich.

The American Federation of Labor is determined that every effort shall be made to salvage the remnants of European Jewry, and that nothing shall stand in the way of the rescue and rehabilitation of a people which has suffered indescribable agony and torture at the hands of the enemy, a people which has been singled out for total annihilation by the godless Nazis.

In order to implement the firm resolve we have made that the Jews be saved through all means at the disposal of the United Nations, we demand that the existing avenues of escape be utilized and those which have been closed be re-opened. We repeat our demand that immediate action be taken to realize the tremendous possibilities which Palestine, the internationally-sanctioned Jewish Homeland, offers for mass rescue and rehabilitation.

Day by day it becomes clearer that decisive action on Palestine must be taken if the homeless Jews are not to be consigned to a lifetime of wandering and discrimination.

The American Federation of Labor has time and again gone on record as demanding the withdrawal of the White Paper policy and its replacement by a program which will lead toward the establishment of Palestine as a Jewish commonwealth. It has done so because the plight of Europe's homeless and stateless Jews demands rehabilitation in a free, undivided, Palestine and it has done so because the nations of the world, including the United States of America, have guaranteed the Jewish National Home in Palestine. The A. F. of L. has included in its recorded resolutions a tribute and testimony to its sister federation in Palestine, the Histadruth, which has done so much toward the realization of the hopes and aspirations of the Jewish people for the establishment of the Jewish homeland, and toward raising the general standard of living in Palestine and in the neighboring countries.

In conformity with the pronounced declarations and policy of the A. F. of L., President William Green stated in June 1944, that: "We intend to press with all power and influence at the Peace Conference for the permanent establishment of Palestine as the Jewish National Homeland . . . We have appealed, we have expressed, we have petitioned, we have begged . . . Now the time has come when our nation under the pressure of Labor and its friends must say to Great Britain: 'You must now open the doors to Palestine, wide open—not for thirty days, for sixty or ninety days out of the year—but for 365 days.'"

During the past year there has been a heartening indication that the position the American Federation of Labor has taken is supported by the people of the United States. The great majority of the members of Congress of the United States have, in public statements, expressed their approval of Jewish aspirations in Palestine. Strong pro-Palestine planks, calling for unrestricted Jewish immigration into Palestine and the rededication of that country as a free and democratic Jewish commonwealth were incorporated into the 1944 platforms of both major political parties.

The Palestine Resolutions in Congress, H. R. 418-419 in the House, and S. R. 247 in the Senate, evoked nationwide approval at the time they were introduced. Because those vital measures, which were deferred last Spring at the request of the military authorities, may now be acted upon, and because the remnants of European Jewry are threatened with extinction, the American Federation of Labor urges immediate, definitive and decisive action on Palestine, action which will be consistent with the needs of the hour and the aspirations of the century.

In his statement in October 1944, President Roosevelt recognized the historic continuity and justice of the desires of the Jewish people, in these words: "I know how long and ardently the Jewish people have worked and prayed for the establishment of Palestine as a free and democratic Jewish commonwealth. I am convinced that the American people give their support to this aim, and, if re-elected, I shall help bring about its realization."

Your Committee, therefore, urges that the Palestine Resolutions now pending in Congress be passed without delay. The problems of persecution, discrimination and homelessness which have plagued the Jewish people of the Old World for centuries must be solved in our time, else our expressions of sympathy and our solemn pledges shall have been in vain.

We further recommend that the President of the American Federation of Labor be instructed to call upon the President of the United States to use his good offices to the end that the declaration made concerning the establishment of Palestine as a free and democratic Jewish commonwealth be implemented, the pledges made be fulfilled, and the Government of the United States assume its share of responsibility in the carrying out of the pledges and assurances given.

(1947, p. 614) Res. 27 was introduced into the convention with specific recommendations for the solution of the problems of the Jews and the establishment of Palestine as a Jewish State. The convention, however, adopted the following special committee report in lieu of the resolution:

As this convention of the American Federation of Labor gathers, we seem to be on the verge of reaching a final solution to the age-old question of the Jewish people, a people who for 2,000 years have been without a national homeland. This tragic, historic homelessness of the Jewish people has led to grave consequences, which reached their climax during the recent war when 6,000,000 Jews were wiped out in Europe, with no government to take a direct stand on their behalf, no military force aiming at their direct liberation from the hands of the Nazi beasts.

The democratic world, including the United States, in 1917 endorsed the Balfour Declaration which promised the Jews a national homeland in Palestine. Thirty years have passed, a period in which a great deal of sweat and blood has been invested by Jewish pioneers in reviving the desolate Holy Land so that people might again inhabit it. The returning Jews have created a flourishing homeland out of a wilderness, without depriving the native population of any rights or privileges. On the contrary, the Arab people in Palestine have immensely benefited from the economic and public health activities of the Jews.

The vast tragedy of World War II, in which 6,000,000 men, women and children were slaughtered merely because they were Jews, has left a great debt which the civilized world owes and must pay to the pitiful survivors of the Hitler fury. These survivors, who have been investigated by commissions without end, have repeated their earnest, compelling desire to go to Palestine and there build a new life on a democratic, creative, dignified basis. When the problem was tossed into the laps of the United Nations by the British Government, a new opportunity was granted for an impartial study of the entire question. Through the web of tangled interests, the United Nations Special Committee on Palestine finally drafted a report.

This Report calls for the admission of 150,000 Jews into Palestine in the next two years and the creation of an independent Jewish state, in part of the country, within the same time limit. Although the Report represents a further whittling-down of the area originally promised the Jews in the Balfour Declaration and the League of Nations' Palestine Mandate, responsible Jewish organizations and representatives of the Jewish Community in Palestine have signified their willingness to consider the recommendations, with minor territorial adjustments, as a basis for the final settlement of the problem.

This convention notes with gratification that on October 11, the representative of the United States at the United Nations officially put our government on record as supporting, with some territorial modifications, the Majority Report of the United Nations Special Committee on Palestine. The American representative also stated that our government is willing to participate through the United Nations, in providing aid to meet "economic and financial problems and the problem of internal law and order during the transition period."

This statement is certainly in line with the traditional American stand on the Palestine problem since 1917. It will be welcomed by all freedom-loving people who have always given their aid and support to the struggle for Jewish aspirations for statehood in Palestine.

The Jewish state envisaged by the United Nations Special Committee on Palestine will unquestionably be the finest example of a working democracy in the Middle East. The pioneering builders of the country are imbued with a zeal for democracy that can be expressed only by those who were threatened with extinction by the enemies of democracy. The Jewish labor federation, the Histadrut, plays a dominant role in the development of the country, assuring that the working population will enjoy the highest degree of freedom, high living standards, social security, health and educational institutions, which are desired by organized labor throughout the world and which have been achieved only in the most advanced countries thus far. The working democracy of Palestine can become the spark plug of progress in the Middle East.

The American Federation of Labor has been a champion of Jewish national aspirations in Palestine since the inception of the Balfour Declaration. We take pride in the knowledge that we have always fought racial persecution and have sought its eradication. As firm believers in democracy and justice, we hail the stand announced by the American Government. It is our hope that the other nations of the world will join in this stand so that speedy implementation of the Committee's recommendations will be assured.

Mindful of the fact that hundreds of thousands of homeless and stateless Jews still suffer great physical deprivation which requires immediate humanitarian action, we strongly urge that the recommendation of the United Nations Special Committee on Palestine with reference to the immigration of 150,000 Jews into Palestine within the next two years, be put into effect at once. As an initial step, the long-suffering 4,400 Jews of the "Exodus" who were recently forced to return to Germany after reaching the shores of Palestine should be included in the first monthly quota under the system of immigration recommended by the United Nations Committee. Thereafter, the concentration camps and assembly centers of Europe, a blot on the conscience of humanity, should be emptied of Jews as soon as possible in an orderly movement to Palestine.

It is gratifying that the majority report of the United Nations Special Committee on Palestine, representing as it does the considered judgment of a high international tribunal, again reiterates the right of the Jewish people to statehood. In view of the declared stand of the United States and other governments in favor of the majority report, it is our hope that the United Nations Assembly will take favorable action on the recommendations of the committee. Indeed, the hour of justice for the Jewish people has come if the nations of the world, following the forthright position taken by the government of the United States, will stand prepared to share in the implementation of the majority report.

We commend and heartily approve the government of the United States for its stand, and urge that our government exercise leadership in bringing about a speedy and definite decision on the part of the United Nations as a whole. We hope that an early international decision in accordance with the majority report is forthcoming and that this will be followed by speedy and complete implementation of its provisions.

American Trade Union Council for Labor—(1947, p. 633) Res. 28, unanimously adopted by the convention as follows:

Whereas, The American Federation of Labor was represented at the Emergency Conference of the American Trade Union Council for Labor Palestine in Atlantic City on May 16-18 by President William Green, and

Whereas, Sixty-four international, national, state, city, and local affiliates of the American Federation of Labor officially participated in the deliberations of this conference which considered the entire question of Palestine and the role of organized labor in the upbuilding of the Jewish national home, and

Whereas, The conference unanimously adopted a resolution calling upon American trade unions to support the American Trade Union Council for Labor Palestine in its activities; to make known to our government and to the public at large that American organized labor favors the establishment of a Jewish national home in Palestine and to raise $1,000,000 for the Histadrut program of rescue, rehabilitation and reconstruction, therefore be it

Resolved, That the American Federation of Labor, in convention assembled, greets the establishment of the American Trade Union Council for Labor Palestine, and calls upon all affiliates to channel their support to Palestine through this Council and be it further

Resolved, That all unions affiliated with the American Federation of Labor be urged to take an active part in the promotion of the program of the American Trade Union Council for Labor Palestine in aid of the Histadrut in Palestine and the establishment of a national home for the Jewish people.

Pan-American Federation of Labor
—(1924, p. 87) Pan-American relations have continued harmonious and helpful during the year. Through our affiliation with the Pan-American Federation of Labor we have been able to be of assistance to the oppressed workers of other countries in the Western Hemisphere and to cement the fraternal relations between the organized workers of the various countries.

Our friendly relations with the workers of Mexico have been materially helpful to the wage earners of both countries. In connection with the single problem of migration back and forth across our southern border, the friendship of the two labor movements has been a distinct advantage on both sides of the line. Where governmental diplomacy alone might easily enough provoke distrust and friction, the understanding possessed by the workers on both sides of the line and their confidence in each others integrity have resulted and will, we are sure, continue to result helpfully.

Our movement is at present not affiliated with any other international organization and we cannot refrain from expressing the thought that it is just as important that we should preserve this bond and develop its helpful possibilities as that we should have any other possible international affiliation, desirable as such other affiliation may be.

The Pan-American Federation of Labor, which has its headquarters in the American Federation of Labor building in Washington, D. C., and of which the president of the American Federation of Labor is also president, has during the year been helpful in many instances in Latin American countries. Good will and understanding between the American people and the peoples of many other countries have been promoted and strengthened. This is true in the case of Panama, Haiti, Santo Domingo, Cuba, Colombia, Nicaragua, Mexico and some other countries. The Pan-American Federation of Labor has several times interceded with the American State Department in behalf of better understanding and in an effort to solve misunderstanding and disputes.

With some show of reason it may be suggested that the problems of foreign relations are only remotely related to our great trade union problems, but in reality our movement is most intimately affected by our foreign relations. Every condition of labor, political and economic, in Latin America is of concern to us and has a bearing on our own domestic problems.

It is reported to us, for example, that much of the machinery in important industries in Mexico is so antiquated that it cannot be operated in such a manner as to provide a living wage for the workers. As a last desperate method of escape from such intolerable conditions the Mexican workers have resolved to desert such industries and already ten thousand have deserted the Mexican textile industry to find employment either in other industries or on the land. Our own wage earners can not escape the consequences of such a condition and they can not shirk their legitimate responsibility in connection with the resulting problems.

Still another element enters into the situation. The organized labor movements of Latin America will somewhere find affiliation with an international movement. If they can not find it with the Pan-American Federation of Labor, supported by the A. F. of L., they will seek and find it elsewhere and we shall have in all Latin America the threat of European domination—a threat which constantly looms on the horizon and which has thus far been held ineffective because of the friendship, influence and fraternal relations which the A. F. of L. offers.

The agents of radical and revolutionary European organizations have been and are at work seeking to destroy among Latin American workers their confidence in the A. F. of L. and its constructive, democratic principles and policies. They have made little if any headway, but if the A. F. of L. were to withdraw, or even to diminish its interest and activity they would find a fertile field. The result of the domination of European radical and revolutionary philosophies among the labor movements of Latin America can only be imagined, but that it would be disastrous must be conceded.

In continuing our helpfulness in this direction we are holding the line for democracy throughout the New World and it is in no sense exaggerating to say that the effect of this great effort on future world history will be tremendous.

We have faith in our principles. We know that democracy offers the one hope for all workers and we feel in duty bound to carry that faith and that hope to all who will listen. We recommend a continuance of our affiliation with the Pan-American Federation of Labor and of all possible helpful activity in every opportunity for rendering assistance to the workers of Latin America and in every opportunity for developing understanding between the labor movements, the governments and peoples of all American Republics.

(p. 302) The A. F. of L. has sought from the formation of the Pan-American Federation of Labor, to inculcate in the minds and hearts of the delegates and representatives the transcendent importance of organization of the wage earners in the trade union movement, to encourage discipline, to urge trade union activity along constructive lines, to recognize the rights and liberties of all who give service in our joint collective movement to ameliorate the conditions of the workers and of all who give service in the effort to bring about better and better living and working conditions for all concerned.

The greatest effort was centered in Mexico. The A. F. of L. may well feel proud of its record of unselfish helpfulness and devotion so freely given to the exploited people of unhappy Mexico. We were not content to adopt high-sounding resolutions, but gave that service and advice calculated to help guide the workers of Mexico and to safeguard and make for constructive, fruitful operations.

(1925, pp. 223, 371) Report of resolutions adopted by the Pan-American Federation of Labor held in 1924 as reported by the delegates of the A. F. of L.:

"The Pan-American Federation of Labor was organized for the purpose of establishing liberty and justice for those who toil in industry, and to cement the bonds of fraternity which should unite the trade union movements of the Western Hemisphere, and as the experience of the organizations composing this Federation has taught their respective members that the application of certain principles and policies is essential both to their welfare and that of this Federation

"In establishing those conditions for which we are united and in the application of our purposes and ideals, that we now declare and place upon our records those principles and policies which we consider fundamental.

"Political freedom and equality is the first step in giving liberty to those who toil, but this freedom and equality when achieved has not and cannot save the toiler from injustice and exploitation. Political institutions which enable free men to make the laws of the state which govern them, cannot serve all purposes or solve all human problems.

"So long as free men work for their daily bread, whether as employes in private industry or employes of the state, their status as workers will be determined by the strength, intelligence and activity of their economic organizations, more than by any other factor.

"The law may declare that men are free, but the existence of freedom will be found only among those who are determined to protect and to exercise this basic human right. The law may declare that industrial wrongs shall not exist, but the printed page is not sufficient. Those who toil must have within themselves the power to declare and decide that injustice shall cease. They have this power in the principles, policies and methods of the trade unions which compose the Pan-American Federation of Labor.

"We hold that the principle of self-government by free people and the principle of self-government in industry are one and identical, the first functioning through political institutions and the second through those industrial institutions which trade union movements have established. Through these two institutions each acting within their proper sphere, civil and industrial democracy is made to function continuously, so that in civil life and in industry there shall be no rule, regulation, law or authority except by the consent of the governed.

"Men are not and cannot be truly free, regardless of their full measure of political liberty, unless industry presents an equal opportunity for self-expression and self-government.

"In the same manner that men established free political institutions so that tyrants could no longer exploit them, the trade union movement established an institution of industrial freedom which enables the men and women of labor to overcome and destroy tyranny in industry and establish in its place liberty, justice, equality and fair dealing between all those who participate in the production of wealth.

"We urge upon the affiliated organizations and upon the labor movement everywhere the importance of encouraging education and of self where there is ignorance. The more highly our civilization is developed, the greater education. It is a fundamental fact that democratic civilization cannot fully express it—insisting upon a full opportunity for education to every child and every adult worker. We are convinced that education cannot reach its fullest development until the representatives of our trade union movement participate in the development and administration of the inventive genius of our people, the more highly developed our industrial processes become, the necessity for greater knowledge and understanding on the part of the workers becomes more essential. Our movement cannot succeed in its great purpose without well organized militant strength.

"It can not hope for success unless this militant strength is guided by a sound knowledge of the facts and the principles which must govern men, if equality of rights and justice is to prevail. We therefore declare it to be our solemn obligation to do all that lies within our power to foster and develop education through every legitimate channel available and to participate in the administration of public education and foster within our respective movements, in cooperation with this Pan-American Federation of Labor, educational services, which will enable the toiler to more thoroughly understand his problems.

"We regard as essential the extension of democracy in industry. We declare our unalterable opposition to interference in the problems of industry by forces outside of the industrial field and therefore incompetent to deal with its problems. We urge upon the labor movement everywhere the extension of the practice of negotiation between the workers and employers, and the entering into of collective agreements regulating the terms of employment. We hold this to be fundamental in the development of democracy in industry. We hold that in no other way can such democracy be established and developed.

"We declare our sincere desire to assist the trade union movements of all the countries and to maintain thoroughgoing, practical, fraternal relations with them.

"We hold it as a fundamental principle that the organized wage earners of each country are better qualified to determine the methods and policies most advantageous to them in extending the beneficial influences of their organization. We hold that there exists no right upon our part to interfere with the policies of the labor movement of any country. We hold it equally true in principle and in practice that the labor movement of no other country has a right to interfere or attempt to interfere with the methods and the policies which we shall adopt for the strengthening and development of our trade union movement.

"Those from other countries who have endeavored to force their policies, programs, and principles upon us have worked greater injury than the most powerful combinations of anti-trade union employers in their efforts to rouse suspicion and division. Hiding behind the hypocritical mask of friendly interest they have striven to divide and discourage. To establish doctrinaire policies they have sought to destroy the trade union movement. They have sought to destroy institutions which they lacked and the constructive ability to create.

"In defense of our rights, in defense of the trade union movement which we have established, we pledge ourselves severally and jointly to resist with all of the vigor and the resources at our command any and every attempt on the part of some other labor movement to interfere openly or covertly with our affiliated organizations, or attempt to dictate or determine the policies which shall govern us.

"We now declare that it is essential to the success of this Pan-American Federation of Labor that its policies and programs should be established only through mutual agreement.

"This Federation has a right to existence only because it will be of practical service to the workers. The aim of this Federation must be to define and establish those principles, programs, procedures and tactics upon which full and cordial agreement can be secured. Nothing could be more destructive of our purposes and our ideals than to permit the spirit of coercion and compulsion to enter into our deliberations and our conclusions. The great strength which this Federation can develop must exist wholly through the free consent of those who participate. There may be matters regarded as essential by some but not by all, and where such conditions arise, the final decision should be held in abeyance until understanding and experience have developed agreement among us. We are convinced that any attempt to force principles, policies or tactics upon minorities in an international federation of labor such as this must lead to the destruction of those fraternal bonds which now unite us. In like manner every attempt by minorities, through strategy or otherwise, to force their decisions upon majorities must be equally fatal.

"We do not base our hope upon theoretical doctrines or the doctrinaire.

"Our hope for today and the future is based upon the application of the principles and the methods of democracy, to the solution of all of the problems with which we are compelled to deal.

"These principles and policies can only be of practical value to the toilers when their trade union organizations have the strength to give them practical application. The success of this Federation will depend upon its ability to place these principles and policies into full effect. To accomplish this we must extend the influence of this Federation until it includes in its membership all those who toil. In the interests of human liberty and justice we call upon all wage earners of Pan-American countries to rally to the standards of trade unionism, to organize in unions of their trade and calling, to unite and solidify the forces of all wage earners, and under the banner of the Pan-American Federation of Labor advance the aspirations and enlarge the participation of Labor in all lands in the movement to establish industrial justice. With the object of extending the beneficial influence of this Federation, we pledge ourselves to do all within our power to set into action a vigorous campaign of organization, and to give encouragement and be mutually helpful in carrying into effect this fixed determination."

(1926, p. 61) The Pan-American Federation of Labor has concentrated on what seemed of primary importance—strengthening its organization and rendering all possible assistance to workers of other countries in understanding the principles and procedure of trade unionism. In many Latin-American groups the labor movement is yet in formative stage. Much can be done by correspondence and this has been given faithful and resourceful attention. Plans are now in progress for the next convention of the Pan-American Federation of Labor.

Our affiliation with the Pan-American Federation of Labor has been inspired by our desire to be helpful to the Latin-American organizations in such efforts as they may put forth to promote and advance their economic and industrial welfare. The formation of an effective labor movement in the Western Hemisphere is essential for proper consideration to human welfare in the formation of international policies and practices.

Our interest has been concerned purely with the welfare of wage earners of other countries. We have refrained from interference in the domestic and internal affairs of either Mexico or other Latin-American republics.

We have attempted to help other workers to understand the principles of trade unionism. Fundamental in trade unionism is the principle of trade or functional autonomy. Because we so firmly believe that those primarily concerned must have the right to decide their own affairs, the A. F. of L. has scrupulously refrained from interference in the domestic and internal affairs of any organization affiliated to the Pan-American Federation of Labor.

The principle of tolerance is so firmly embedded in our trade union practices, regardless of creed, nationality or race wage earners can unite for the promotion of mutual economic interests. But if matters which should be determined personally are injected into a movement based upon mutual-ity, cooperation for any purpose becomes impossible. Without tolerance the individual is denied his right to decide his religious affiliations. For these various reasons the A. F. of L. has not interfered in the difficult situation that developed in Mexico over religious policies. The Federation has not tried in any way whatsoever to intervene in this matter and has made absolutely no effort to influence the decisions of the Mexican Federation of Labor. We believe that the Mexican labor movement should exercise unrestricted authority to make decisions for Mexican labor and to adopt policies to be pursued in their labor problems. We believe that the principle of tolerance is the key to personal liberties and that the right of decision must lie with those immediately concerned. Obviously this principle must obtain in the policies of the Pan-American Federation of Labor. They have been scrupulously observed in our relations with Mexico.

There are many convincing evidences of the success which has attended the efforts of the A. F. of L. to influence the working people of Mexico and of the Latin-American republics in favor of A. F. of L. principles and trade union philosophy and trade union doctrines.

(1927, p. 38) The fifth congress of the Pan-American Federation of Labor brought evidence that it is an established institution. In its infancy every institution is primarily dependent upon individuals. The Pan-American Federation of Labor has passed that period and has developed a personality of its own.

As was to be expected many matters with which the Pan-American Federation was at first occupied were largely political. Many Central and South American countries do not have stable governments and free speech and free press with their guarantees of freedom. Freedom of action is necessary for the development of a labor movement.

Although the Fifth Congress of the Pan-American Federation of Labor considered many problems of political unfreedom, it expressed in very genuine terms its appreciation of the fact that its main mission is the promotion of trade unionism in Latin-America. The congress urged the development of information by which the Federation could check credentials and organizations in order to assure bona fide trade unionists for its work.

The last congress provided an opportunity for the delegation from each country to relate its major international difficulties, so that in effect it heard the voice of the peoples of those countries. Free from the limitations of official responsibilities, the envoys of the people gave information most important with regard to our Pan-American policies. The Pan-American Federation of Labor will be a power against imperialism and exploitation.

It seems definitely obvious that regional organizations and federations should bring together peoples in geographic areas representing a definite unity, and that such organizations might constitute units through which world organizations could be built.

There are definite cohesive ties that bind together the nations of the American continents, such as similarity in historic experience, geographic influences, interdependence of economic and commercial interests. These facts make important the development of the Pan-American Federation of Labor.

The Pan-American Federation of Labor in its last congress gave evidence that it had a definite role in promoting peace and good will between the peoples of Pan-America and that it was fitting itself to perform a constructive service.

Whereas—The Pan-American Federation of Labor was organized for the purpose of establishing liberty and justice for those who toil in industry, and to cement the bonds of fraternity which should unite the trade union movements of the Western Hemisphere, and as the experience of the organizations composing this Federation has taught their respective members that the application of certain principles and policies is essential both to their welfare and that of this Federation; therefore be it

Resolved—That in the establishing of those conditions for which we are united and in the application of our purposes and ideals, that we now declare and place upon our records those principles and policies which we consider fundamental.

Political freedom and equality are the first step in giving liberty to those who toil, but this freedom and equality when achieved have not and cannot save the toiler from injustice and exploitation. Political institutions which enable free men to make the laws of the state which govern them, cannot serve all purposes or solve all human problems.

Through these two institutions, each acting within their proper sphere, civil and industrial democracy is made to function continuously, so that in civil life and in industry there shall be no rule, regulation, law or authority except by the consent of the governed.

Men are not and cannot be truly free, regardless of their full measure of political liberty, unless industry presents an equal opportunity for self-expression and self-government.

In the same manner that men established free political institutions so that tyrants could not longer exploit them, the trade union movement established an institution of industrial freedom which enables the men and women of Labor to overcome and destroy tyranny in industry and establish in its place liberty, justice, equality and fair dealing between all those who participate in the production of wealth.

We urge upon the affiliated organizations and upon the labor movement everywhere the importance of encouraging education and of insisting upon a full opportunity for education to every child and every adult worker. We are convinced that education cannot reach its fullest development until the representatives of our trade union movement participate in the development and administration of education. Hiding behind the hypocritical mask of friendly interest they have striven to divide and discourage. To establish doctrinaire policies they have sought to destroy the trade union movement.

They have sought to destroy institutions which they lacked the constructive ability to create.

In defense of our rights, in defense of the trade union movement which we have established, we pledge ourselves severally and jointly to resist with all of the vigor and the resources at our command any and every attempt on the part of some other labor movement to interfere openly or covertly with our affiliated organizations, or attempt to dictate or determine the policies which shall govern us.

In like manner every attempt by minorities, through strategy or otherwise, to force their decisions upon majorities must be equally fatal.

We do not base our hope upon theoretical doctrines or the doctrinaire.

Our hope for today and the future is based upon the application of the principles and the methods of democracy, to the solution of all of the problems with which we are compelled to deal.

These principles and policies can only be of practical value to the toilers when their trade union organizations have the strength to give them practical application. The success of this Federation will depend upon its ability to place these principles and policies into full effect. With this object of extending the beneficial influence of this Federation we pledge ourselves to do all within our power to set into action a vigorous campaign of organization, and to give encouragement and be mutually helpful in carrying into effect this fixed determination.

(1928, p. 339) The wage earners of Central and South America have been and are now struggling under social and economic conditions born of centuries of oppression and repression with no rights, liberties or freedom of action obtained or granted them. Their opportunities to obtain an education and gain knowledge were limited. Organization in trade unions was and is limited and in many cases denied. Under these conditions wages were and are miserably small and hours correspondingly long and burdensome.

The A. F. of L. found under these circumstances a fertile field to lend its assistance and helpfulness in organizing these workers into trade unions. Helpful efforts were first directed to organize local unions and national and international unions in the various countries in Pan-America. Ten years ago the Pan-American Federation of Labor was formed. Rapid improvement has since that time taken place in the lives of the wage earners. Stronger and better manhood and correspondingly better social and living conditions have resulted. Greater justice, freedom and equality are taking the place of industrial and productive serfdom, all of which has resulted in the extension to and covering all lines of production, trade and commerce, finance, and the social, material and political welfare of the people in general.

The thoughts herein expressed are spoken in a friendly fraternal spirit with the hope that our longer and fuller experience may be of some value to our fellow workers in Central and South America in advancing their economic, social and material well-being. We recognize that these people have their own problems based upon environment, climate and past traditions with which they are in a position to judge for themselves what should be done and how best to do it.

(1928, pp. 94, 340) Since the Pan-American Federation of Labor was organized by the A. F. of L. ten years ago, there has been a growing realization that closer political, industrial and social relations should exist between the peoples and the labor organizations of the Western Hemisphere. The Pan-American Federation of Labor is being developed to deal with matters and policies of far-reaching importance to human relations in Latin-American countries.

Those countries already know financial, industrial and commercial enterprises, from our country. Our American investors have been interested in the exploitation and development of the natural resources of the Latin-American countries. Our industries are seeking Latin-American markets.

We believe that commercial and industrial purposes should not be permitted to dominate Pan-American internal relations and therefore we have urged and continue to urge that all groups of people and especially Labor should be represented in all international conferences and congresses that determine policies and agencies for handling Pan-American affairs.

Our A. F. of L. seeks to bring to Latin-American countries the idealism and the humanism of our people. The one hope for release for oppressed peoples is through the extension of the labor movement. The trade union movement is basically economic but there can be no free functioning economic movement in Latin-America until political despotism has been removed.

Therefore, the A. F. of L. urges at this time that a special effort be made for the continuation of the policy to draw the workers of the North, Central and South American countries more closely together in fraternal relationship, for their mutual advancement and protection.

(Pp. 95, 341) A great deal of correspondence has been received and answered through the Pan-American Federation of Labor. Most of the labor representatives of all the Latin-American countries have kept in constant communication regarding national and international questions and Labor events, especially those referring to Mexico, Cuba, San Salvador, Guatemala, Panama and other countries. Comprehensive reports in the interest of these nations have been sent broadcast to all the Labor centers of the Western Hemisphere and Europe. The presidents of various Latin-American republics have agreed to create in their countries departments of labor, dedicated to promoting and fostering the welfare of the masses of the producers of each country.

We are informed that it is not the intention of the Pan-American Federation of Labor to hold its sixth convention in July of next year, as was scheduled. Instead, it will be arranged to hold the sixth convention in February of the year 1930 in Havana, Cuba. Meanwhile, the relations of the A. F. of L. with the labor movements of the various Pan-American countries are being continued in the most friendly and helpful manner.

(1929, pp. 108, 395) The convention call for the Sixth Pan-American Federation of Labor Convention laid down the following fundamental principles which are the basis of our aims, activities, and relations with the labor movements throughout the Americas:

We hold this to be fundamental—no relations between the Pan-American countries can be permanent that are not based upon the will of the masses of the people and in accord with their concepts of justice.

We deem it an essential step toward democracy and justice that there shall be established for the masses who have hitherto been without regular agencies for expressing their views and desires, opportunities that will enable them to have a voice in helping and determining international affairs.

The labor movements of the various countries constitute the instrumentalities that can best accomplish this purpose and give expression to national ideas and convictions that have been too long inarticulate and impotent.

In the past years we have followed very closely these principles and we have had the gratification of obtaining the confidence of almost all the labor movements south of the United States. It has been a hard task for the Pan-American Federation of Labor to have its aims and purposes known and understood in Latin countries of the Western Hemisphere. There have been many forces put into action to try to undermine our influence in these countries.

Our desire is to help working people in these countries. Through a resolution approved in the Fifth Congress we have been able to bring about the creation of bureaus or departments of labor in Costa Rica and El Salvador. In Chile, Guatemala, Nicaragua, and Peru we have interested the governments in the establishment of these departments and they have the matter under consideration. In Cuba a sub-commission to study labor problems has been created.

It has always been the wish of the officials of the Pan-American Federation of Labor to send a commission to the Pan-American countries in order to be in closer contact with the labor organizations of these countries and to find the most convenient way to help them. We have had requests from all of the countries concerned to send this commission.

(1931, pp. 147, 477) By a demonstration of intelligent friendship and by continued explanation of its principles and objectives, the A. F. of L. won thousands of workers into a fraternal family of mutual trust and co-operation that laid the foundations upon which the Pan-American Federation of Labor was built and that has held our movement in close relationship ever since.

The Pan-American Federation of Labor has been in existence now for more than twelve years. Its principles, its policies and its good name are known throughout Latin America. For various reasons which have seemed unsurmountable it has been compelled to proceed slowly, often without the aggressiveness necessary to real progress and development.

A special report of 38 typewritten pages in Spanish was sent to over 300 labor centers, labor papers and dailies throughout the American continent and Europe. The report contains besides the activities of the Pan-American Federation of Labor, an exact description of the thought, ideals and spirit of the A. F. of L. The primary objective of this special report is to show once more the spirit that prevails in the A. F. of L. conventions, its resolutions and actions, representative of the organized labor movement of the United States. The report was sent broadcast, for the benefit of the labor centers throughout the Latin American Republics.

The report also contains a substantial history of the A. F. of L. and the account of the "contemporaneous labor tragedy" together with the best selections of the various addresses and statement made in the convention in defense of the noble cause of Labor that gives the greatest credit to the responsible leaders of the Federation.

Correspondence received from all the labor centers showed the appreciation for this report and many Labor and other papers have published the same.

Labor centers of two nations, Cuba and Venezuela, have requested us lately to make representations in Washington to get some kind of civil intervention on the part of the U.S., in the affairs of those countries, meaning to formulate a strong protest against its rulers.

Of course, some of the Latin-American governments are despotic and autocratic. The Pan-American Federation of Labor has been always ready to emphasize the rights of the peoples and to secure for them economic, political and social freedom. At the same time the Pan-American Federation of Labor has endeavored by every honorable means and within the limits of the powers derived, voluntarily associated every effort to secure the cooperation of the various governments of Pan-America to firmly establish the principles of protection and liberty of their own peoples.

The working people of North America besides have given to the Pan-American Federation of Labor wholehearted, personal and collective support to obtain social justice and political freedom for the workers. Unfortunately and very recently, social and political unrest arising out of widespread military revolutions and otherwise, have created a very exceptional condition that prevents the Pan-American Federation of Labor from following the requests of these labor centers that are suffering oppression and tyranny.

Requests for help coming from almost every labor center of Latin America are being addressed to the A. F. of L., in the hope that through the instrumentality of organized labor the United States will oppose dictatorships and all forms of oppressive governments.

Our generous attitude in defense of the oppressed peoples has created among them a feeling of trust in the A. F. of L., and has given it such prestige and reputation that from time to time in the past 12 years the representatives of the working peoples of several Latin American republics have come to Washington requesting the moral support of the American Federation of Labor in the protection of the civil rights of those peoples as against oppression and injustice.

In regard to the holding of the Sixth Congress of the Pan-American Federation of Labor some time in the near future, favorable answers have been already received from Mexico, Cuba, Venezuela, Guatemala, Haiti, Santo Domingo, Chile, Honduras, Puerto Rico, Colombia, Ecuador and lately the Railroad Brotherhood of Argentina for the first time says as follows:

With regard to the Sixth Congress of the Pan-American Federation of Labor we are glad to let you know that it is our desire to participate in such a great assembly. It would greatly facilitate the sending of our delegates to know with enough time in advance the date when the congress is to be held. We will appreciate it if you communicate these facts to us.

In conclusion, there is a combined service to humanity and to our own country and its institutions that can be done by the Pan-American Federation of Labor in helping these great masses to achieve real freedom. For, in bringing Labor to a position of freedom and dignity we offset the exploitation of capitalists and help to still the cry that only exploitation comes from the United States. Such work promotes good will for America and for the great idealistic concepts of the masses of the American people.

(P. 477) Latin-American countries, largely producers of raw materials, have been acutely affected by the world-wide fall of prices and financial difficulties. Revolution and political unrest have added to economic depression. In some countries the labor movement and its leaders have been wiped out. The labor movement in many countries has been the instrumentality which has sought to secure for the common people those political rights, economic and civil liberties that are necessary for the advancement of the well being of the workers and for raising the general standards of living.

In this situation we commend the responsible officials of the Pan-American Federation of Labor for their wisdom in proceeding slowly. Individual countries must first restore the normal agencies for progress before it is possible for a coordinated movement to function constructively and effectively.

We note, with approval, the circulation throughout Latin-American countries of a report explaining the principles and policies of trade unionism. We believe that such educational methods and exchange of counsel will be a constructive force in the development of national labor movements. The majority of Latin-American workers have yet to make the transition from agricultural work to industrial employment and from the spirit and practices of an effort to establish freedom to the utilization of the opportunities and responsibilities of practical freedom.

The Pan-American Federation is dedicated to the advancement of social justice and economic and political freedom of the workers of our two continents. While the Pan-American Federation of Labor can give its moral support to workers struggling against oppression and injustice, it must act with appreciation and respect for the sovereignty and responsibility of each nation. Within the limits of voluntary cooperation expressed by our movement, support and encouragement have been given to movements for political freedom.

We commend the officers of the A.

F. of L. for their procedure with reference to requests for civil intervention in political struggles in specific countries. While our sympathies are with every movement for human freedom, we recognize that civil intervention is inseparable for political intervention. We furthermore approve a policy of non-intervention in the internal affairs of Latin-American countries by the Government of the United States.

(1932, p. 115)—Our relations with the various labor movements of Latin-American nations through the Pan-American Federation of Labor have continued to be mutually satisfactory. We have been able to be helpful in numerous occasions, more than justifying our participation in the Pan-American Federation of Labor and offering conclusive reasons for its continuance and enlargement.

It has not been possible to hold a convention of the Pan-American Federation of Labor during recent years owing to existing economic conditions, continued political revolutions, and military uprisings that have taken place.

Through the Pan-American Federation of Labor we have consistently sought to develop understanding between the masses of the people of our own country and the countries to the south. We are convinced that our efforts have been fruitful.

Notwithstanding the special and economic conditions in which the Pan-American Federation of Labor is developing its activities, we are doing everything possible to help our brothers below the Rio Grande and to interest and induce the workingmen of the various Pan-American countries to organize, to federate nationally, and to combine and affiliate internationally.

It is also true that the lack of strength of the labor organizations and the recent reactionary and military revolutions and political disturbances in various countries have completely absorbed in many cases the sentiments and moral authority of the labor movements to defend themselves against new reactions and new military powers.

For years the A. F. of L. has advocated a closer relationship between the peoples of the Western Hemisphere. The Panama Canal opened new trade routes, new markets, and, therefore, new industrial and commercial opportunities, and with them the necessity for closer ideals of solidarity and cooperation.

If as a nation we have a true conception of the value of human life, we ought to make human relations of chief concern in all our plans. The Pan-American Federation of Labor was created to stand for human welfare and human rights among the various countries of the Western Hemisphere. It always has helped in the battles of the weak and cleared the path for progress in order that all the toilers of Pan-America may join in the forward movement toward freedom.

We deem it wise to urge at the present time the continuation of special efforts and policies to draw together more closely in fraternal relationship the workers of the North and South American continents.

Through the Pan-American Federation of Labor efforts have been put forth to assist and to help the labor movements in Colombia, Cuba, Mexico, Santa Domingo and other Latin-American countries. Assistance and advice have been given the representatives of organized labor in these Pan-American countries through correspondence which passed between their representatives and the president and secretary of the Pan-American Federation of Labor. Such assistance and help will be continued through personal contact and correspondence on the part of the representatives of the labor organizations affiliated with the Pan-American Federation of Labor and the officers of said organizations.

(P. 438) Military and political revolutions, together with economic depression prevailing in various countries of Pan-America have added to the oppression and tyranny to which Labor in South America is subjected. Labor in many countries is being denied the right to properly organize in trade unions or to strike to acquire economic justice, and to otherwise gain civil rights.

Some of these people suffering from oppression have requested in the name of humanity, that the Pan-American Federation of Labor should suggest and foster good will and promote civil intervention from the people of the U.S. in order to promote the establishment of justice and freedom in their respective countries.

The Pan-American Federation of Labor has attempted, to the best of its ability, to respond to these and other appeals presented to it. In this regard attention is directed to the fact that while on the one side there has been conducted venomous propaganda on the part of combined big interests against the good will and sentiments for liberation felt by organized labor of the U.S. in behalf of those oppressed people; on the other side these same combined big interests have secured for themselves a free hand in the economic and political destinies of Pan-American countries of South America, doing it to further their own interests, at the expense of the people and the prestige of the nation.

The E.C. is directed to continue to render every possible assistance and service to the wage earners and their trade unions in all Pan-American countries.

(1933, pp. 136, 539) The thought underlying the establishment and maintenance of the Pan-American Federation of Labor, has very many high purposes and high aspirations for the protection and promotion of the rights, interests and the welfare of the masses of the people of all Pan-American countries.

The success of this great movement, the permanency of the Pan-American Federation of Labor, depends, first, on the protection of the rights of humanity, the promotion of the welfare of the wage earners, the producing masses of our respective countries in all the Americas; on exerting our moral influence and our citizens' rights, that the rights of the people in our respective countries shall be protected; and upon the establishment of good will among the peoples of our respective countries, and upon our doing all that lies in our power in our own country to prevent tyranny and oppression imposed upon other peoples by their own governments and ours.

It is indeed very regrettable that owing to the general economic depression, the affiliated labor centers of Pan-America, though in great need of solidarity and help from the labor movement, have not been able in the past to finance a representative delegation that could have visited the most important labor centers of the Pan-American countries, to explain the ideals and obligations of close cooperation between the affiliated labor movements. It is more than certain that if such good-will delegation had made that visit, a better understanding of cooperation could have been obtained, the labor solidarity affecting both hemispheres would have been closer, and substantial results obtained. We have been in constant correspondence with all the labor centers and have assisted them whenever it was possible to do so.

Owing to the resolutions approved in the past, the office of the Pan-American Federation of Labor was prevented from taking action on protests from Cuban organizations which denounced the political tyranny and oppression existing in that country and from asking for a civil or moral intervention.

The office of the Pan-American Federation of Labor has been ready at all times to render all possible services in behalf of affiliated organizations of Cuba.

The Railroad Brotherhood of Cuba requested our support in their efforts for the modification of the railway and street railway pension law, which had been approved by the Senate of Cuba but not by the House of Representatives. The railroad workers claimed that the Cuban Electric and Gas Company was opposing the passage of the law and using all its influence to defeat it in the House. According to the statement of the Railroad Brotherhood the law would protect 20,000 persons who are widows, orphans and invalids.

The president of the A. F. of L. addressed an important communication to the Railroad Brotherhood, which was made public in the newspapers of Cuba, condemning the tactics of the Cuban Electric and Gas Company. He said in part:

My impression is that such a legislative measure should have the whole-hearted support of the Congress of Cuba to do justice and help the great mass of workingmen of your island.

We hope that the members of the House of Representatives will become aware of the relief that this measure will bring to their people and following the example of the Senate unanimously approve the same.

The "Free Union of Cigar Makers" with headquarters in Havana, Cuba, stated the following:

We are enthusiastic and decided admirers of the Pan-American Federation of Labor and it is our most desired ideal to be affiliated with your organization, which joins the U.S. labor movement with Latin American labor organizations with common ties of mutual affinity and affection and the same views with regard to labor problems and their solution.

In the near future we hope to form a new federation and it is our wish to become part of the Pan-American Federation of Labor.

The Mexican Federation of Labor informed us that a so-called Chamber of Labor had been created in Mexico, led by men who were expelled from the Federation, whose principal aim was to disrupt the Mexican Federation of Labor and build a new international organization of the Latin-American labor movements in opposition to the Pan-American Federation of Labor.

In this connection the Mexican Federation of Labor informed us that the Chamber of Labor, through its influence with the national revolutionary party, was seeking the appointment of one of its members to represent the workingmen of Mexico at the Labor Conference of Geneva.

The Mexican Federation of Labor requested the officials of the Pan-American Federation of Labor to meet the representatives of the International Labor Office who visited Washington and informed them of the situation of the labor movement in Mexico. The president and secretary of the A. F. of L. conferred with the representatives on the matter and they promised to cooperate with the workingmen of Mexico in order to bring about an harmonious settlement of the question of the nomination of the delegate to the International Labor Conference.

Nevertheless, Mr. Elias F. Hurtado was appointed representative of the labor movement of Mexico to the conference in spite of the objections of the Mexican Federation of Labor, on the ground that Mr. Hurtado did not represent the bona fide labor movement of Mexico.

(P. 536) We regret that the great depression, world-wide in its effect, has hampered the development of Pan-American labor relations during the year and that the sending of a mission through the Latin-American nations has not thus far been possible.

The Pan-American Federation of Labor stands as a symbol of freedom for the masses of the people of the nations on these two continents. It is an inspiration to the workers of this hemisphere. This hemisphere, we declare, is at this time the world's refuge for freedom and for the orderly working out of the destinies of peoples through democracy. The Pan-American Federation of Labor is the leader in the expression of this idealism throughout Pan-America, as the A. F. of L is the leader in that respect in the U.S. and Canada.

The officers and E.C. of the A. F. of L. will do all in their power to assist the Pan-American Federation of Labor and we commend them for their past endeavors. There is altogether too much industrial and political oppression remaining.

The Pan-American Federation of Labor can and should play a vital part in the development of understanding and of good relations between the peoples of this hemisphere, striving everywhere to destroy the evil operations of greed and exploitation. It stands in the minds of millions and it is in truth the enemy of exploitation, the enemy of Fascism and the enemy of Bolshevism. It stands for freedom and for democracy, for the rights of the wage earners, and for the lifting of their lives to new and ever higher levels.

We call attention to the forthcoming Pan-American Congress of Governmental Representatives to be held in Uruguay and to urge upon the E.C. continued efforts to secure labor representation on the delegation which will represent the Government of the U.S. These congresses must, we feel, become much more than congresses to deal with financial relations and with property interests. Their scope should be broadened that they may deal with great and grave social issues, in which only the workers can speak with understanding and authority. We urge that immediate steps be taken, as they have been taken prior to past congresses, to secure the appointment of labor representatives on the U.S. delegation.

Finally, we urge upon all delegates and upon our movement generally a continuous study of Pan-American affairs, so that we may understand the peoples of our sister nations and that we may develop a true unity of spirit and idealism with the workers of those nations. It is not too much to say that in every forward movement throughout Latin America in the last fifteen years the Pan-American Federation of Labor has been regarded as its spokesman and guide toward the achievement of the aims and objectives that characterize wage earners' movements everywhere.

(1934, pp. 169, 725) The Pan-American Federation of Labor has continued whenever possible to lend its helpful assistance to the labor movements of the Latin American countries.

We find that great interest has been aroused in the labor circles of these countries by the National Recovery

Act. The press of Latin America has widely publicized its development and ultimate effects on both labor and industry.

Cuba achieved political freedom through the overthrow of political autocracy. During the political despotism of President Gerardo Machado Cuba had no open, free labor movement. Assassinations, oppressions and imprisonments had been reported to the Pan-American Federation of Labor by labor leaders. Many labor leaders disappeared or were killed. Though this information reached us, we were powerless to help those afflicted for they would have suffered worse fate if the charges made had been given to the public. We knew that the people of Cuba would work out their own salvation. They did; and now, with the new freedom achieved, Cuba will be able to build up a great trade union movement. Already, communications received from our affiliated groups in Cuba express hope for better and greater things to be attained through the medium of labor organization.

We hope that the President of Cuba will look forward and will see his way clear to encourage the workers to organize for their mutual peace and benefit.

The Mexican Federation of Labor extended cordial invitations to the A. F. of L. and the Pan-American Federation of Labor to attend its twelfth convention. Previous engagements prevented us from attending.

Nicaragua is thriving under a democratic government. Under the able direction of the President of the Republic, Dr. Juan B. Sacasa, Nicaragua again will be able to progress socially and economically. This progress will benefit directly the masses of the people. Labor will again reorganize and federate. It will be recalled at this time that in 1926 we lent our sincere cooperation to Dr. Sacasa at the time when General Emiliano Chamorro was holding illegally the Presidency of the Republic, which he attained through a coup d'etat. Dr. Sacasa, who was then Vice-President of the Republic, had to flee from the country. He came to Washington to present a statement of facts to the Department of State with regard to the real situation of Nicaragua. Dr. Sacasa in a communication to our President stated:

With great satisfaction I have read in the press the interest that your important Federation has shown in the actual affairs of my country, and in the name of the people of Nicaragua I am glad to express to you my profound gratitude.

The agents of radical and revolutionary European organizations are still seeking to destroy the confidence which Latin American workers have in the A. F. of L. In Brazil, Cuba, Colombia, Uruguay and other countries, their propaganda is carried on in a subversive manner. The result of the domination of European radical and revolutionary philosophies among the labor movements of Latin America can only be imagined; but that it would be disastrous must be conceded.

Labor leaders from Colombia, Chile, Peru, Bolivia, Honduras, Haiti and Santo Domingo are endeavoring to reorganize the labor masses. During these years of depression, the labor movements in Latin American countries have been more or less in a stagnant state.

The Sixth Congress of the Pan-American Federation of Labor is still postponed. Labor organizations from Colombia and Chile have stated in communications that they would like the Congress to be held in their respective countries. Cuba was selected by the last Congress as the meeting place for the Sixth Congress.

(1935, pp. 160, 719) The Pan-American Federation of Labor was originally founded for the advancement of the common interests of the workers in every nation upon the American continent. In carrying out these purposes we are interested in raising the standard of life and living among working people. We wish to encourage the workers represented in the Pan-American Federation of Labor to mobilize and develop their economic strength so that it may be intelligently and constructively used in furthering their general common welfare in the interest of the men, women and children dependent upon the working people of all Pan-American countries. In this respect we differ from those Pan-American organizations formed for the purpose of promoting commercial enterprises, for the purpose of exercising financial and corporate power in an attempt to exploit the resources of nations.

We are interested in the human element in every nation and in every country upon the American continent. We want to serve in such a way as to promote the intellectual, the spiritual and the moral well-being of Pan-American men and women.

Not only have we in mind economic freedom, the exercise of the right to organize, but we also have in mind the exercise of all other phases of freedom and liberty that are the inherent right of every man and woman in all the countries of the world. Men must be industrially free, intellectually free and politically free. In this respect the organized labor movement stands fairly and squarely upon these fundamental principles. There must be freedom of the press. The press in every country must be free, free to publish such articles as are not libelous, such articles as may be educational and helpful, even though they may meet with the opposition of special interests.

At the request of the government of Chile, the International Labor Office is planning a regional conference to be held in Santiago, Chile, within the coming year. In this conference issues and problems of the International Labor Office are to be discussed and the nations which are members of the International Labor Office will be invited to participate. The nations of Latin-America have rarely availed themselves of their opportunity to send a full delegation to Geneva. Inasmuch as the industrial development within these nations is coming rather rapidly, it is necessary to establish good labor standards in these countries so that their output will not come into the world market to the disadvantage of those countries where higher standards prevail. The fundamental purpose of the conference is to create a more understanding interest in the work of the International Labor Office and to insure more representative participation. The Chilean conference is in no way in conflict with the activities of the Pan-American Federation of Labor.

The affiliated labor centers of Pan-America have been and are in great need of moral solidarity and mutual help from the labor movement, but we have not been able in the past to finance a representative delegation that could have visited the most important labor centers of the Pan-American countries, to develop and strengthen close cooperation in the defense of our common cause between the affiliated labor movements. It is certain that if such good-will delegation had made that visit, a better understanding of cooperation could have been obtained, the labor solidarity affecting both hemispheres would have been closer, and substantial results obtained. But American labor representatives never had the opportunity to go further than Mexico, Cuba and Puerto Rico. We have been in constant correspondence with all the labor centers and have assisted them whenever it was possible to do so.

A situation of real unrest exists in Cuba. President Carlos Mendieta has been making every effort, so far as we can determine, to give the nation sound government and to rebuild its shattered economic fortunes. But he faces an almost impossible task, as far as the immediate future is concerned.

The Cuban government is confronted with a grave economic situation concerning the wage earning masses. This condition has created a situation dangerous to bona fide labor aspirations and to the government. We cannot fail to be concerned about the outlook for trade unionism.

The E.C. in considering the question of the possibility of holding the Sixth Congress of the Pan-American Federation of Labor in the near future, maintains that considering the financial condition of the Pan-American Federation of Labor and its constituent bodies, the opinion unanimously prevailed that the Pan-American Federation of Labor is not prepared to hold a convention at the present time.

(1936, p. 196) The spirit of the Pan-American Federation of Labor, a Federation founded for the advancement and defense of the workers in every nation of the American continent, is living in the souls of hundreds of thousands of wage earners who hope that their big brother, the A. F. of L., might perform the miracle, and relieve them of the oppressive and tyrannical dictators and employers who are exploiting and preying upon the workers' helpless position, and who also are being sustained by their own imposed governments.

The circular letter sent in February, 1936, to all the labor centers of the Latin American countries upon the holding of the Sixth Congress of the Pan-American Federation of Labor, received enthusiastic response from the labor organizations of Argentina, Colombia, Chile, Costa Rica, Ecuador, El Salvador, Guatemala, Venezuela, Mexico, and Cuba. In these countries the workers feel the need for discussion of their problems in organization, unemployment and legislation with their brother workers in other countries.

In a few of these countries, unfortunately, oppressive tactics are still used by the government to smother workers' organizations. The Pan-American Federation of Labor has tried through correspondence and public statements, at the request of these workers' organizations, to bring to the government officials and public opinion the plight of the workers.

Workers are still suffering persecution and oppression in Cuba, according to the reports received from labor sources. It is reported there are two hundred "political prisoners" still in prison, in spite of the fact that the Congress approved an amnesty law. The President of the A. F. of L. made an earnest request through the Ambassador from Cuba to the Cuban government in behalf of the workers of Cuba asking for complete amnesty for political prisoners and freedom for workers organizations. The workers have asked our cooperation in their efforts to abrogate Decree Law No. 3, regulating strikes, which in reality is a law practically abolishing the right to strike and the right to organize, cessation of intervention of military authorities in labor matters, reorganization of the Department of Labor, and selection of men to head the Department with genuine knowledge of labor problems, and granting amnesty to all strike-law violators.

The labor movement in the Dominican Republic has been practically wiped out. The former affiliate of the Pan-American Federation of Labor, the Dominican Confederation of Labor, is no longer in existence. The country is now under the dictatorship of General Rafael L. Trujillo, who is charged with antagonism toward any form of organization of workers. It is impossible for labor leaders to organize workers. The government has forced agricultural and industrial workers to return to work after striking for higher wages.

From Venezuela the report came that with the end of the era of oppression under the late General Vicente Gomez, labor leaders are looking hopefully to the organization of a strong labor movement. It is gratifying to know that at last Venezuela is free of tyranny and oppression and that workers will again resume their normal rights in the economic and social life of the republic.

In Colombia, the Tropical Company, whose parent is the Standard Oil Company, is carrying on terroristic activities against workers identified with trade unions. The organized labor movement of Colombia is fully aware of the importance of holding the Sixth Congress at the present time, and has earnestly appealed to the Pan-American Federation of Labor to select a date in the very near future.

The organizations in the western hemisphere are still hopeful that the Pan-American Federation of Labor will send a representative mission of good will to all the important labor centers in those countries which will culminate in the celebration of a representative Sixth Congress of the Pan-American Federation of Labor.

It is expected that labor delegates will be invited to attend the next Pan-American Conference which will be held in Buenos Aires, Argentina, in the very near future. At the Sixth International Conference held in Havana, February 7, 1928, the following motion, introduced by the Mexican delegation, was approved:

The Sixth International Conference of American States recommends to the governing board of the Pan-American Union, that it shall include as a topic of coming conferences, beginning with the Seventh Conference, for their study and resolution, the problems relative to the material improvement of workmen, their standard of living and the standards of living in the states of the American continent.

(P. 688) As an affiliate of the Pan-American Federation of Labor we pledge to it our continued support and we send, through it, our warning to dictatorship, whether Fascist, Naziist or Communist, our warnings that there must be no encroachment upon the free nations of the Americas, for in the Americas freedom must find its permanent home.

To the oppressed of those nations which are for the time being undergoing oppression, including Haiti, Colombia and the Dominican Republic, we send fraternal greetings and the message that freedom must come. We shall not forsake our pledges nor forget our ideals. America, North and South, must mean freedom and a challenge to tyranny everywhere.

We concur in the A. F. of L.'s report and we do so with a pride in its stern adherence to the libertarian idealism with which it has carried forward the battle for human freedom and justice.

This convention records its commendation of the mission of the President of the U.S. to the Pan-American Conference in Buenos Aires, to further the cause of international understanding in the Western Hemisphere; it should prove of help in the furtherance of peace and good will among the other nations of the world. It is our hope further that at the Buenos Aires Conference consideration can be given to the "material standards of the workers, their standard of living in the states of the American Continent," as proposed in the Sixth Labor Conference held at Havana in 1928.

(1938, pp. 199, 524) We should consider the immediate advisability of reorganizing the Pan-American Federation of Labor, as an instrumentality of labor unity and best understanding among the peoples of the Western Hemisphere.

Many of the so-called free governments of Central and South America deny the laboring man freedom to organize and better his working conditions. Indeed these governments can claim very little of freedom and democracy, and in fact are no less oppressive than military dictatorships.

It is therefore imperative and necessary that the experience in labor problems, the principles and methods of the A. F. of L., be extended to our less fortunate brothers below the Rio Grande, even in those countries utterly revolutionary or reactionary.

Free labor movements cannot be distinguished by correspondence alone and therefore the Pan-American Federation of Labor should send an exploratory commission to ascertain where and which are the free labor movements in all these countries even in the lands of the most tyrannical of the dictators.

Then, when the commission becomes satisfied as to how many free labor movements there are and where they are, we should proceed immediately to call the Sixth Convention of the Pan-American Federation of Labor to band, strengthen and revive the labor movements of the three Americas.

Raising the standard of living of the workingmen in all these countries to the American level is what the Pan-American Federation of Labor is striving for. However, before this can be accomplished, a strong and sane labor movement has to be organized in each country, in order that it may fight successfully its own labor problems.

The Pan-American Federation of Labor should render all possible and effective assistance, cooperation and guidance to these workers in the organization of their own labor movements.

(1939, p. 224) In accordance with recommendations of the last Convention and the E.C. of the American Federation of Labor, President Green called a meeting of the Executive Committee of the Pan-American Federation of Labor which was held at the headquarters of the American Federation of Labor last May.

The Committee held two sessions to give consideration to the distinctive problems of each country and the situation of the labor movements in the Western Hemisphere. Consideration and study were given to all matters concerned with the well-being of all those peoples.

The paramount question, most carefully considered, was to ascertain what were the best methods to pursue to effect the reorganization of the Pan-American Federation of Labor.

The organized working people of the United States are firmly convinced that cordial and friendly relations can be established and maintained between all countries represented in the Pan-American Federation of Labor through the development of a perfect and sincere understanding of all the labor movements of the Western Hemisphere.

The working people in the Pan-

American countries should be guaranteed the right to organize and to cooperate within their respective countries in the furtherance of their legitimate, social, industrial and economic interests. The right of free speech, free assemblage and free press should not be abridged. Liberty, democracy and justice should triumph over autocracy and unfreedom in any form.

After careful consideration and discussion of the aforesaid subject it was recommended by President Green and unanimously approved that a general and careful survey should be carried on throughout the most important labor centers of the twenty South American republics to know their actual standing on the principles and activities of the Pan-American Federation of Labor. The work is to be started by correspondence and followed by a representative commission to those countries.

After such a survey has been made a call will be issued to hold the Sixth Congress of the Pan-American Federation of Labor, to perfect the organization, to improve fundamental and important cultural standards of life and labor of the masses of the people, in all those countries.

All suggestions were approved by those present, giving the President the power to decide regarding the proper time and best way to carry out the recommendations adopted.

(1939, p. 678) At this time of world crisis it is inevitable that both movements and nations should look to their own defenses. As the twenty-one nations which make up the Pan-American Union meet in Panama to build a defense in the Western Hemisphere against involvement in the present conflict by closer collaboration, so the labor movements of the Americas should be prompt to recognize the importance of closer cooperation. The Pan-American Federation of Labor was the creation of the American Federation of Labor. It grew out of the necessities of the time. For many years Samuel Gompers was its president and moving spirit. Its service to the workers in the Central and South American Republics was distinctive and helpful. Every reason that called it into being originally is now reinforced by the events of recent months.

Your committee notes with satisfaction that the Executive Committee of the Pan-American Federation of Labor held a meeting in May of this year; that it explored the effective methods of reorganizing the Pan-American Federation of Labor and establishing a closer bond of unity between the workers in the Western Hemisphere. One of the direct results of this exploration was the decision on the part of the Executive Committee to approve a careful survey of labor conditions in the twenty South American Republics, to learn more definitely the state of the labor movement in these countries and the best way in which they could be brought into closer collaboration with the Pan-American Federation of Labor. It was the further decision of the committee, when such a survey had been completed, that a congress could convene in Havana or Washington to lay the basis for a vigorous reorganized program of the Pan-American movement.

Your committee wishes to underline the general conclusion of the Executive Committee of the Pan-American Federation of Labor and to point out the special urgency of the present crisis. It makes any effort for international cooperation in the Western Hemisphere a matter of pressing importance. We, therefore, express the hope that President Green will take it upon himself to inaugurate such a study of the Central and South American Republics and carry forward such a program as will make possible a convening of the Sixth Congress of the Pan-American Federation of Labor either in Washington or Havana some time in the near future.

(1940, p. 218) The activities of the Pan-American trade union federation during the preceding year were briefly reported to the convention. The importance of a strong Pan-American federation was emphasized in the statement adopted by the convention which follows:

(P. 670) Today, as never before, America is striving to unite all the many ties that link us with the 21 republics of the Western Hemisphere. The new continental defenses of the United States look toward a more adequate protection of the entire Western Hemisphere. The Declaration of Havana to which our nation was a signatory brings to a focus previous declarations made by the governments of the 21 republics at Montevideo, Lima and Panama. America as a nation is resolved that the policy of the Good Neighbor shall be implemented by political, financial, and cultural aid.

To American Labor, this policy of our government reflects in part the broad purposes for which the Pan-American federation was founded. We have sought that implementation by uniting in common effort the workers of these countries for the common purpose of elevating living and working standards and the promotion of social justice.

Candor compels us to admit that our Pan-American federation has not functioned during this last year as it should. To help revive it we sent Brother Iglesias on a Good Will Tour less than ten months ago. We are prepared to cooperate in rebuilding the Pan-American federation to something of its former effectiveness. That means the bona fide trade union movements in these countries must be helped to function more vigorously. It is not, however, our purpose to dictate to our brother trade unionists in these other republics. We do not desire to do anything in any of these countries which would in effect mean "we'll tell you what to do and help you to do it." A strong, free trade union movement must be born out of the sacrificial services of Labor, free from dictation from without as well as within the nation. With this in mind, we shall urge that the American Federation of Labor continue to do all it can to foster and develop the closest constructive cooperation with the citizens in each of the Central and South American countries. If any time any bona fide trade union organization seeks our help and cooperation then we shall stand ready to answer their call.

We do feel that if we are to be in a position to cooperate with our friends to the south, we should seek continuously, to inform ourselves fully of their activities, their problems, their interests, and in turn to make available for their information, similar data concerning us.

To begin with, we must realize that we can say "South Americans—." Each country is distinct and distinctive; in each there are problems—social, economic, cultural, political, born of that soil.

On only a few points can one generalize at all:

1. Each of these countries is still essentially rural.
2. Industrialization in each of these countries started long after Europe and North America had passed through the industrial revolution.
3. The rise and development of trade unionism in each of these countries is of relatively recent origin.
4. The political independence of each of these countries is of a somewhat later date than ours, and in many of these countries when they gained political independence from their European mother country, they kept the same practice of governmental administration to which they were accustomed under their former rulers—a form, strong traces of which, in certain instances, still is clearly in evidence; this in spite of constitutions written in forms closely resembling our own.

5. Social and economic patterns of their earlier history still strongly persist in each country, and on and in these patterns a present-day complex industrial system of conflicting ideologies is being constructed by and for these people.

6. Most of these countries are very rich in natural resources; some are fabulously rich. Oil, gold, silver, copper, tin, rubber trees, nitrate, hardwood of all kinds, fruits in abundance, coffee, cocoa, leather, livestock, precious and semi-precious stones, coal, iron, cotton—just about everything nature can give man, is to be found in this hemisphere, in abundance. The land is rich; but the majority of the people are poor.

7. A small number of large land-owners, an agricultural economy in which the worker is intimately attached to the land on which he works, absentee ownership of corporate holdings, a distinct cleavage between urban and rural groups, are basic factors which confront worker organizations in each country—even before they seek to organize and obtain a degree of social and economic security in their work.

8. The high rate of illiteracy which is a problem being courageously attacked in many of these countries, as it was by some of our own people, is in many of these countries, born of an inherited old world concept of education for a few—and that education to be of the very best. Let us not for one minute think that these nations despise formal education and the fine arts. They revere them. In fact we are mindful of the fact that the oldest university in the Americas is the University of San Marcos in Lima, Peru, which is almost a century older than our own Harvard in the North and William and Mary in the South. Their problem is not one of developing a feeling or appreciation of learning and beauty, but of making their cultural life available to larger numbers.

9. There is religious freedom for each citizen in each of these countries regardless of the functions of any church.

10. The people of practically all of these countries have at some time or other (a number right now) lived under a dictator, but they have never had a totalitarian government in any Latin-American country at any time. And even the most flattering courtships of Nazi and Communist agitators during the last few years, has not resulted in any union being solennized at any time.

11. The people are warm, cordial, colorful, kind, be they of Spanish or Portuguese origin, or of pure or mixed Indian descent, or of the Negro group, which is quite thoroughly assimilated there. And indeed, their kindness and warmth, their credulity makes one fear if some of them today may not be treacherously 'captured.' As 'Stout Cortez' destroyed the credulous and noble Aztec chief and as Pizarro destroyed the kindly, trusting Inca ruler—so today the invader is carrying a Pandora box of Nazi or perhaps Communist slogans—what's the difference. But, so far, these people have not fallen victim to these attacks, for the most part they have realized they have problems enough of their own, born of their own soil and their own inherited traditions, problems which they must solve for themselves and by their own methods.

Your committee recommends that there be established a means of exchanging information, of promoting cooperation among the free trade union groups of the Americas; and that the Executive Council be empowered to take such steps as may promote the best and closest steps among the peoples of the Americas. . . .

We recommend further that this convention record again our determination to uphold the rights of all workers in the Western Hemisphere to independence of choice and freedom of the trade union organizations and activities without the domination and interference of governments and recommend that whenever or wherever such attempts come to our attention that we so advise these governments and do whatever we can to protect the rights of workers to self-organization.

We would likewise urge the re-establishment of old contacts through the Pan-American Federation of Labor and in making of new connections with the trade unions in Latin-America. To that end we recommend that the officers of the Pan-American Federation of Labor undertake to make a survey of trade union conditions in the Latin-American countries and consider the holding of an early conference of the Pan-American Federation of Labor and all bona fide trade unions.

Your committee would call attention to the historic fact that in 1942 we celebrate the four hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the discovery of the New World. We believe the American Federation of Labor should take the initiative in calling the governments of the Western Hemisphere together to properly celebrate this great event. We would urge that at the same time and place there be a great conference of the Pan-American Federation to celebrate the solidarity and service of the trade unions in helping to build constitutional democracies in the New World.

(1941, pp. 215, 702) Giving due consideration to the comprehensive and factual report with regard to the Pan-American Federation of Labor and its problems, the convention adopted the following recommendations:

To give practical expression to the principles herein set forth, and as contained in the report of the Executive Council, your committee recommends that Labor officials from each of the countries of the Western Hemisphere be asked to meet informally, to consider the basis for a more formal conference of the Pan-American Federation of Labor; to discuss not only broad general terms of social welfare, but include specific means and processes through which to give practical expression to these ideals.

As a first step in promoting closer functional relations between the U.S. and our sister republics, a representative of the A. F. of L. went to Mexico City as a fraternal delegate to the Mexican Federation of Labor. He extended our fraternal greetings and bade them to play a major role in helping to bring about the actual functioning of a vitalized Pan-American Federation of Labor. The President of Mexico assured our representative of his earnest desire to cooperate in a program which the Mexican workers might initiate. He assured him of sympathetic support looking to the development of the Pan-American Federation of Labor. In view of the progress made your committee is prompted to recommend that the effective work which has been begun by the Executive Council, through our representative be continued and extended with all possible support from the American Federation of Labor.

Your committee further recommends that the data on labor laws, social trends, economic problems, and threats to our democratic ideals relative to countries on the Western Hemisphere should be gathered, compiled, analyzed, and reports thereon distributed regularly to all of our members; and be distributed among our fellow trade unionists in other countries.

Your committee would further call to the attention of the delegates that the workers in the British possessions in the Caribbean seek now to raise their standard of living. Trade union activity in the islands is still very limited, but gives promise of sound development. The British Trade Union Congress should be advised of our interest and of our desire to serve with a British trade union committee and with the trade union leaders from each of the British West Indies to consider what may be rightfully described—our mutual problems.

Your committee also recommends that the workers of each of the countries of Central and South America should have the opportunity to derive an immediate and personal benefit from or through any loans which the Government of the United States may make to any of these countries and therefore urges that the American Federation of Labor through its president present to the Congress of the United States an appeal that all loans made to any Latin-American country for its economic development should be conditioned in such a way as to assure the workers of the country involved an opportunity to share in the benefit from the loan itself.

Then, too, your committee calls attention to the fact that the Federation has for some time urged that there be close cultural cooperation among the workers of all countries. It is our belief that the culture of a nation is expressed in every phase of its daily experience; that it is a gross error to regard the culture of a nation as limited only to its purely academic work supplemented by a limited expression by fine arts and fail to embrace the culture of the humanities. Hence we urge that exchange in the field of cultural relations be more widely extended and be not limited to persons or groups interested in a purely formal academic experience, or to an educational experience in the formal higher levels.

(1942, p. 232) Developments during the past year, due to the current war situation, make it imperative that an earnest effort be made to work out a Pan-American Labor program embracing not alone support of the war by the nations of the Western Hemisphere against the Axis powers but including as well a post-war program designed to strengthen and enrich the nations and all of the peoples of all of the Americas.

Production in the United States is more than ever directly related to the supply and transportation of raw materials from Latin-America. In addition, our government today, as well as American interests, are making sizeable investment in the developing of Good Neighbor relations with Latin-America; our government is even going to the point of sending missions of persons who have little to contribute to lasting relationship, and in developing industries with Latin-American countries, but our Government has not taken leadership in seeing to it that representation is provided in all existing Pan-American institutions.

It is of greatest importance to this country, as well as to all Pan-American countries, that mistakes of former years should not be repeated. It is equally essential that the basis for new economic progress should be the development and maintenance of labor standards similar to the best in the United States, so that these new industries shall not have an unfair competitive advantage due to low wages and unwholesome working conditions. New industries should bring to the whole of Latin-American nations opportunities for higher standards of living, with the rights and protection necessary to prevent their exploitation.

International minimum standards could and should properly be developed which will give protection to the workers and which would lift trade and economic relations between the United States and Latin-America to a level for more good neighborliness and Christian ideals. For example, capital from the United States is going into the development of the rubber industry in Brazil, but the standards of pay in that country differ little from those of forced labor along the Congo. Such a basis for business cooperation is not worthy of a supreme effort to achieve a new era of human cooperation and human welfare in the New World.

Development of labor standards could well be placed in a labor office in the Pan-American Union, so that labor progress could parallel progress in all other fields. In addition, provision for Labor representation should be included in national delegations to the meetings of the Pan-American Union and to all other like meetings. In addition, provision for adequate Labor representation should be included in all agencies and activities relating to Pan-American affairs.

It must be self-evident that the suppression of Nazi propaganda which is going on in the South and Central American Republics cannot be dissociated from the cooperation and support of the trade union movement of these countries. The effort to control prices against inflation is fast going to be realized as one of fundamental proportions and requiring the active representation of Labor in all phases of control and regulation. All of this makes imperative the working out of an Inter-American Labor program.

A sound beginning in the creating of an Inter-American Labor solidarity was made in November, 1941. At that time the representatives of the Latin-American National Labor Federations, members of the Confederation of Latin-America, met with representatives of the American Federation of Labor. They discussed with us frankly and at length their common interests in the present world crisis. The offer of friendly cooperation based upon mutual respect in all matters relating to internal problems might well be implemented now by positive action by all who participated in those conversations, including, of course, the American Federation of Labor itself.

These positive facts might well relate to those subjects which properly concern organized labor as a vital member of the American Community of Nations. Lack of cooperation between Federations of Labor on the continent has made it difficult for a proper presentation of America's war aims before the Latin-American masses. It has weakened the protection of Labor's interests in the transfer of rural labor from one country to another as in the case of Mexico and the United States. It has also deprived Labor of proper representation in the formation of plans for a maximum of necessary raw materials produced for and by Latin-America. There is no need of channels for the exchange of information among labor organizations in Pan-America. The participation of Labor in international bodies dealing with continental problems and the educating of all peoples of all the Americas to the fact that Labor is fighting for higher living standards for all, and not merely to serve selfish interests, are all problems which existed even before Pearl Harbor and have now become acute and await urgently the attention which they deserve.

The clarification of these purposes and the creation of machinery necessary to make them operative can be achieved most rapidly and effectively by the convening of an Inter-American Labor Congress. Throughout the past year we have explored the possibilities for such a Pan-American Labor Conference in order that channels for constructive consultation, collaboration and cooperation might be set up. Progress has been made in this direction. It is hoped soon that this ideal might be realized and that such a conference may be held shortly. To that end it is recommended that the officers of the Executive Council be urged to continue their efforts in that direction and, if need be, call upon the proper agencies of government to assist, financially, if necessary, in bringing about the convening of such a Pan-American Labor Conference.

A Pan-American Labor Conference could well devote its attention to the consideration of the basic and fundamental subjects of how workers of the American Hemisphere may best assist in increasing the output and transportation of the instruments of war against Axis powers. The improvement of the health and efficiency of the workers through programs of better housing, medical service and vocational training and by means of improving the economic cooperation among the American peoples to the fullest use of their industrial and agricultural resources should receive the attention of such a conference. In addition such conference will prove extremely helpful in the maintaining of Labor's gains, advance civil liberties, and improve wage and working standards, as well as further to protect the right of voluntary organization of workers into trade unions as an indispensable requirement of the democratic nature of the war aims of the American people as well as of their democratic objectives in the peace conference.

(1942, p. 631) The following convention committee report was unanimously adopted:

Active cooperation among all the Republics in the Western Hemisphere in support of the United Nations war effort has become one of the important influences for victory in the world struggle. Today that cooperation is more advanced than ever before in the history of the free republics of the Western Hemisphere. This cooperation, carried out in the spirit of the "Good Neighbor Policy" covers a wide range of military, political, economic and social activities.

A program for the development of inter-American cooperation was formulated at the Conference of American Foreign Ministers at Rio de Janeiro last January and is now going into action in many ways. South and Central American countries are assisting in the development of hemisphere resources and expanding existing production for supplies of metals, rubber, quinine, fibers, drugs and other essential war materials which were formerly obtained outside the hemisphere.

From Canada to the vital Panama Canal area, the continent is at war against the Axis. The two largest countries to the south in population, Brazil and Mexico, are war allies of the United States. Eleven of the other American Republics have declared war. All of the Americans are working together to eliminate anti-American activities, and to improve communications and bases for defense against attack by air, sea and land. As a result, there is greater unity and a more solid front against a common enemy than ever before in the history of the American Republics.

The United American Nations constitutes one of the hardest cores of resistance yet developed against the Axis bid for world domination. From our neighboring republics, the United Nations secure much essential needs. We obtain from them part or a major share of supplies of bauxite, copper, lead, zinc, manganese, nitrates, mercury and other minerals, and hope in the near future to get increasing quantities of rubber, fibers and drugs to replace our losses in the Far East.

However, the progress already achieved and the hopes for the future cannot rely solely on political co-operation. Labor has learned in its own struggle that action in the field of adequate and efficient Hemisphere relations requires a broad economic and social approach in which the workers of the Republics will play an important part. Any program which may be developed must derive its major sanction from a fundamental acceptance by the masses of people. In this connection, the field groups of tropical medical specialists and sanitary engineers who have been sent by our nation to twelve countries on projects for the protection of the health of the workers is a notable contribution.

The support of the other Americas for the United Nations war effort is the more impressive when consideration is given to the hardships those countries suffer from the wartime disruption of trade. They have lost, and are losing, much of their outlets for coffee, cotton, cocoa, grain and other export commodities essential to maintenance of internal trade and employment. They find it increasingly difficult to obtain from the United States the steel, chemicals, rayon, machinery and other imports they need to maintain employment. At a time when they need revenue most for relief of unemployment, they have suffered serious loss in revenues from import duties.

Conditions facing the trade unions in Latin America have deteriorated considerably since our last meeting. Food scarcities have provoked public demonstrations of discontent. Unions have organized nationwide protests against rising costs and the insufficiency of existing machinery to maintain ceilings as provided by law. The right of assembly for lawful trade union purposes has been curtailed in some instances. International communications among trade union leaders has been restricted. Nazi agents more than ever are attributing the sacrifices the people are required to make to the United States. Mass immigration of workers in search of better employment conditions is affecting production of vital war materials. These trends are turning for the worse from week to week, and in many instances are threatening the very existence of independent trade unions.

Although it is difficult to speculate on what kind of a world will come out of this struggle, we do know that all the republics must play an important part in shaping the post-war reconstruction for the days of peace just as they play a vital part in wartime mobilization of hemisphere resources. We shall continue to need our good neighbors, and they will need us, as much in peace as in war. We are expanding our capacity to produce airplanes, tools, light metals, steel and other products which our neighbors need most, and although because of war needs we can not supply them now, we can produce and make available these necessities when the war ends.

The other Americas are largely in tropical areas. Their products complement those of the United States. Possibilities are great for increasing inter-American trade growth from such tropical commodities as rubber, vegetable oils and fibres. These developments will make a lasting contribution not only to inter-American trade but to the foundation and maintenance of peaceful relations in the Western Hemisphere, provided of course we prevent exploitation of Latin American workers by foreign capital and capitalistic interests.

Inter-American unity and understanding can be one of the most powerful influences in the shaping of a decent world when peace returns. In the development of this unity and understanding the American Federation of Labor and the officers and members of International and National Unions can make a significant contribution in helping to harness the resources and capacity of all our peoples for the well-being of our American Republics.

We recommend, therefore, wholehearted approval of the work of the Executive Council in exploring the possibilities of a Pan-American labor conference for the purpose of developing channels of consultation, collaboration and cooperation to promote higher material standards of living with broader educational opportunities for all the workers of the whole of the American continent. We recommend that efforts to bring about a Pan-American Labor Conference be continued.

We recommend further that the Executive Council consider the advisability of creating an Inter-American Labor Council or other agency for purposes of obtaining and disseminating to labor in all of the Americas facts pertinent to the war effort, the maintenance of independent trade unionism throughout the hemisphere and to keep all labor in the Americas informed on the economic, social and material interests which they have in common.

Then, too, encouragement should be given to a policy of bringing representatives of trade union leaders from Latin America to Washington and other cities in the United States for the purpose of consulting and conferring with responsible union leaders of our country as well as with governmental officials on matters relating to vital problems of production, transportation, health, food and vocational training.

We urge also that every effort be made to have labor representatives included in national delegations to the meetings of the Pan-American Union. Indeed, we are requested to extend to this convention the greetings of the Director General of the Pan-American Union and are advised by him that he desires to stress the work initiated in the field of research, public information and assistance to trade unions and is deeply concerned and interested in working out closer relations among our trade unions in the Western Hemisphere.

The opportunities thus presented should not be permitted to pass for after all our Federation and its affiliates can make a helpful contribution toward making human welfare the end of all Pan-American Union policies and undertakings.

Pan-American Union — (1928, pp. 94, 340) Because there was no representative of Labor in the American delegation to the Sixth Pan-American Congress which met in Havana in January, 1928, the president of the A. F. of L. requested the secretary of the Pan-American Federation of Labor to attend as an observer. Two members of the E. C. happened to be in Cuba and the three labor officials held a conference with the chairman of the U. S. delegation and urged the incorporation of the following amendment to the constitution of the Pan-American Union: "That in the program of topics to be discussed at future conferences, there be included the subject of improving the material standards of life and labor of the masses of the people of the respective countries, so that by improving the conditions of labor, production is fomented and consumption increased, thereby contributing to the development of commerce."

The Pan-American Conference of Havana approved the addition proposed to the constitution of the Pan-American Union, establishing as one of its duties and functions, the study of labor problems throughout the Latin-American countries.

Panama Canal Zone (See: Canal Zone)

Panamanian Boycott (1949, pp. 270, 419) The report of the Maritime Trades Department contained reference to the practice of certain American steamship operators placing their ships under the Panamanian flag, which practice has resulted in much unemployment to American seagoing personnel. The seamen in many European countries are also adversely affected by the ship operators in their countries resorting to the same sharp practice. The convention committee in making a report on the report of the Maritime Trades Department made the following recommendation which was unanimously approved: (p. 419).

There has been referred to our Committee a section of the Executive Council's Report which deals with the nefarious practice of certain steamship owners in placing their ships under the Panamanian flag in an effort to evade or destroy the hard-won working standards for which our men have so valiantly fought through the years. The report states the matter is now before the I.L.O. Should there be any delay in effecting an equitable solution through this agency, your Committee recommends that the Executive Council be authorized to take whatever steps it can through national and international agencies, public and private to assure the stopping of the transfer of the registry of our ships to nations whose standards of working conditions are lower than ours.

Paper Makers (Label and Dept. of Justice)—(1928, p. 264) It is the duty of each craft, not only to protect the product of its union from substitution of non-union goods by deception and false claims, but also to protect the consumers of union-made goods from the penalties growing out of faulty service of the distribution system in the marketing of these union label goods.

In the performance of this duty by the International Brotherhood of Paper Makers, the Department of Justice of the U.S., upon the complaint of several persons (whose names are not yet divulged by the Department), has entered suit against the International Brotherhood of Paper Makers in the District Court of the U.S., charging violation of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act—an Act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraint and monopolies.

Should the U.S. court sustain the contention of the Department of Justice that it is unlawful for the International Brotherhood of Paper Makers to exercise its proprietary right in the control of its union label, in that it cannot take measures to prevent deception and substitution of non-union paper for union paper of designation by authority of the International Brotherhood of Paper Makers, then the decision will be used to subject the union label of every trade union to the expediency of every manufacturer in disposing of his goods be they union or non-union.

The American Federation of Labor, in convention assembled, instructs its E.C. to use the influence and authority of the Federation to protect the union label of the Paper Makers in the event of dismissal of the case against the International Brotherhood of Paper Makers. It is the sense of this Federation that trade unionists shall seek relief from any alleged unfair practices, in respect to the distribution of union label goods, through the councils of this Federation rather than to appeal to the courts, which practice places in jeopardy the very purpose for which the union label exists, "The discrimination between union and non-union goods.."

Paper Makers-Stereotypers (Juris) —(1942, p. 63) Convention was informed that no adjustment had been effected of the dispute between the named organizations over the manufacture of paper for dry mats. The Executive Council reported that at their meeting in May 1941, jurisdiction in the case was awarded the Paper Makers. The Stereotypers appealed the decision and were given a rehearing, after which the original award of the Council was affirmed.

(1942, p. 452) The Executive Council at its February meeting, 1941, appointed a Vice-President of the A. F. of L. to meet with the representatives of the International Brotherhood of Paper Makers and the International Stereotypers and Electrotypers Union in an attempt to reach an agreement on this controversy. The meeting was held in the A. F. of L. headquarters in Washington, D. C., and while the conference between the interested organizations and the A. F. of L. Vice-President decided at its May, 1941, meeting that the jurisdiction in question "the manufacture of paper used for making dry mats" was the work of and belonged to the International Brotherhood of Paper Makers.

Subsequent to this decision by the E.C. at its January, 1942, meeting, a hearing was granted to the International Stereotypers and Electrotypers Union for the purpose of their appealing from the decision of the council. At the conclusion of this hearing on their appeal, the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor reaffirmed its previous decision in giving the making of paper for dry mats to the International Brotherhood of Paper Makers.

Representatives of both organizations appeared before the committee and presented their arguments and your committee after giving due and careful consideration to the subject matter approves of the E.C. decision and recommends that President Green together with the E.C. continue their effort to have the decision accepted and applied by the International Stereotypers and Electrotypers Union.

Parcel Post (Change in Weight)—(1949, pp. 345, 391) Res. 124 proposed that the A. F. of L. "condemn and oppose the present parcel post operation and insist upon the return to the 11 pounds maximum weight per parcel, and increase the rates of same to at least cover the cost of handling same" . . . The resolution pointed out that during the period of years the post office had increased the maximum weight allowance from 11 pounds to 70 pounds, it has become an unfair competitor in the general transportation industry since in this period of time no appreciable increase in cost of parcel post rates has been affected, while of necessity rates of private and common carriers have been greatly increased and a large amount of business has been diverted to parcel post at the taxpayers' expense. Convention instructed E.C. to confer with the affiliated organizations concerned before taking definite legislative action.

Parent-Teachers' Association—(1931, p. 348) The A. F. of L. urges its members to bring this matter before local labor bodies urging on such members as are parents of public school children that they participate in the activities of the Parent-Teachers' Association of their communities to the end that this influence upon the training of the children of America shall be in furtherance of the ideals which they as trade unionists are pledged to sustain.

Parker, Judge John J. (Defeat) (also see: Yellow-Dog Contracts)—(1930, p. 101) The outstanding victory of Labor was the defeat of the confirmation of the appointment of Judge John J. Parker to be a member of the U.S. Supreme Court, mainly because of his decision upholding the "yellow-dog" contract.

(P. 324) The president and the members of the E.C. are entitled to the hearty congratulations of the entire labor movement for the effective and intelligent manner in which they successfully opposed the appointment of Judge Parker because of his anti-Labor prejudices. Of even greater significance, however, was their achievement in the use of the occasion to focus the attention of the country upon the iniquity of the "yellow-dog" contract.

It is significant that during the debates in the Senate, not a single Senator attempted any defense of the so-called "contract." None made any effort to justify its use in industry. The Senators who supported Judge Parker went no further in their arguments than to offer an excuse in the form of a claim that he had followed the decisions of other judges.

It is within reason to expect that the U.S. Senate, having had an opportunity for the fullest discussion of the "yellow-dog" contract, and finding not a single one of its members to defend the use which is made of that sort of contract, will now proceed to the enactment of legislation designed to prevent the courts from continuing the practice of using "yellow-dog" contracts as a basis for the issuance of injunctions to prevent workers from organizing.

It would seem that the Senate, after acting as it did in the Parker case, ought to proceed in this matter without further pressure of public opinion. We note with satisfaction, however, that the president and the members of the E.C. have, figuratively speaking, left no stone unturned in their efforts to enlighten the public on the subject of "yellow-dog" contracts. Immediately after the Senate had acted, they made a compilation of the Senate debate which is being given wide circulation by the American Federation of Labor. We recommend that the action of the Executive Committee in relation to the Parker case and the "yellow-dog" contract be given the hearty approval of this convention.

The "yellow-dog" contract, as used in industry, is a legalistic fraud—it is duress of a most vicious character—and should have no standing in our courts. It is not enforced at law, in that none of the parties to it can be successfully proceeded against for failure to carry out its provisions. It is used only as a subterfuge for the issuance of injunctions against organizations and persons who were not party to the alleged contract in order to prevent them from assisting the workers to organize. The alleged contract is simply a promise on the part of the worker, forcing from him as a condition of employment, that he will not remain or become a member of a trade union. If the worker disregards it, the employer has no recourse at law, for he has suffered no damage. If, however, the worker is advised of his rights in the matter and acts thereon, the persons so advising him may be enjoined and later imprisoned for contempt of court.

Notwithstanding the widespread discussion which has lately taken place on the subject of "yellow-dog" contracts, it seems that there are still many who do not understand the full scope of these so-called "contracts." It should be remembered that they are not restricted to written agreements. The alleged contract is frequently in written form, but, more often, it is simply oral and, in a great number of cases, is merely implied. In each of its phases, however, whether written, oral, or implied, it is used as a basis for the issuance of injunctions to prevent organization activities on the part of trade unions, even though, in instances, it is not referred to in the injunction when issued.

If a worker accepts employment in a non-union plant, it is assumed, under the "yellow-dog" arrangement, that he has agreed to work under prevailing conditions. Or, in other words, there is an implied contract. It is for this reason that the "yellow-dog" contract is described in the Anti-Injunction Bill as, "Every undertaking or promise hereafter made, whether written or oral, expressed or implied, constituting or contained in any contract or agreement of hiring or employment," in which the party surrenders his right to remain or become a member of a labor organization. We direct attention to this for the purpose of reminding the convention that the "yellow-dog" contract is much more widely used than many suppose.

Patent Law Adjustment—(1931, p. 128) Resolution No. 46 of the Boston Convention proposed adjustment of patent laws to offset destructive effects of automatic machinery and scientific processes.

The convention directed that the E.C. should study patent laws in relation to machinery and processes used in production and transportation with the thought in mind to recommend such changes in the laws as the result of the investigation might warrant. We submit the following:

Clause 8 of Section 8 of the United States Constitution gives to Congress the power to promote the progress of science and useful arts by securing for a limited period to authors and inventors the exclusive right to their respective writings and discoveries.

In a long series of cases, it has been decided that it is for Congress to determine what time and under what circumstances protection shall be granted. While rights are to be secured for but a limited time, Congress may extend the term upon the expiration of the time originally specified and in doing so, protect the rights of purchasers and assignees. Congress may also modify rights under an existing patent, provided vested property rights are not thereby impaired.

This power to grant a patent is not given to Congress generally but only as a means to promote the progress of science and useful arts. Hence it appears that Congress is not empowered by the Constitution to pass laws for the protection or benefit of inventors except as a means to promote science and useful arts.

Under existing law, an inventor is given a monopoly of his patent for the term of seventeen years. That can be extended only by special Act of Congress. Where foreign countries recognize American patents, the U.S. in turn extends the same courtesy.

Under the Constitution Congress has full power to legislate upon the subject of patents but this power must be used with due regard for the Fifth Amendment which provides that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty or property without due process of law.

Should Congress enact legislation upon this subject which would be held inimical to the rights of patentors, there would be nothing to prevent such patentors from securing a patent in a foreign country and under the treaty existing between such country and this have his patent protected here, provided that it was found to be new and original. If such inimical legislation were passed, there is nothing to compel a patentor to secure a patent. He may take his chances of putting it on the market and having it infringed upon.

We are not prepared to make any recommendation except that the subject be given further study.

(1932, p. 113) The last convention recommended that a continued study be given to the proposed adjustment of patent laws to offset destructive effects of automatic machinery and scientific processes. The E.C. has done this but no satisfactory solution has as yet been worked out. It is giving and will continue to give further and detailed study to this subject.

Payroll Savings Plan (also see: War Bonds)—(1947, p. 169) The American Federation of Labor emphatically endorsed permanent continuation of the Payroll Savings Plan by the Treasury Department for the purchase of U.S. savings bonds through Labor-Management cooperation on a strictly voluntary basis. This policy is based upon abundant evidence of the degree to which wage earners have learned to appreciate the virtues of systematic thrift through experience gained during the war.

As was to be expected, there was a slump in the purchase of savings bonds immediately following V-J Day. This was accompanied by an increase in the redemption of savings bonds. The reasons are obvious. Wage earners had patriotically invested all the money they could spare in government securities during the war, postponing purchases of all descriptions. Almost immediately this trend was reversed so that the redemption of savings bonds by organized wage earners is now rapidly decreasing and purchases by them through payroll savings and otherwise are on the upgrade.

We are informed that, at the present time, approximately 5½ million wage earners, most of whom are members of organized labor, are voluntarily continuing participation in payroll savings plans and that they are purchasing upwards of $110,000,000 worth of these securities every month.

(P. 679):

Resolved—That this convention of the American Federation of Labor go on record as endorsing United States Savings Bonds for the Security Thrift Program, urging all members of the American Federation of Labor to participate and urge employers to establish payroll savings plans where they do not now exist. The Executive Council is hereby empowered and instructed to prepare and distribute literature which is, in their judgment, necessary for the promotion of this nationwide plan, and be it further

Resolved—That the American Federation of Labor request all members to hold their bonds as their stake in our country's future, thus defeating the inflationary trends that are so apparent in the domestic market.

Peace (also see: Post War; Atlantic Charter; Armistice; Post War Planning).

Peace, World—(1931, p. 43) The E. C. is directed to give attention to the study of the methods of promoting world peace; the growing interdependence of men and nations, and the accomplishments to date of organized world-wide movements in the interest of human betterment.

(1937, p. 631). The Convention Committee on International Labor Relations, submitted a special report on the subject of world peace which was unanimously adopted by the 1937 convention as follows:

The A. F. of L. is gravely concerned and shocked that the Chinese nation and civilizations are threatened by ruthless warfare that attacks civilian population as well as armed forces. We are disturbed by the increasing lawlessness in the international field as evidenced by treaty violations. Democratic institutions in many countries have been replaced by the rule of force and the subordination of individual well being to state regimentation. With armed conflict already in progress in Europe and the Far East, the menace of another world war overshadows the civilized world.

Labor abhors war and knows only too well that war does not solve our problems. American Labor does not wish to be involved in European or Asiatic wars. We, as a nation, early established the policy of avoiding entangling alliances which would involve us in the toils of foreign diplomacy. We have written in the law of the land neutrality procedure to prevent our becoming involved through trade in munitions. But as to the great moral issues that developed out of violation of the integrity of a nation, barbaric attacks upon defenseless citizens, disregard of the rights of others—upon these things no free people with a sense of moral obligation to those unable to protect themselves can be neutral. But we want peace—not war. This desire lays upon us the obligation to seek peace.

Labor believes that peace is essential to the best interests of peoples of all lands and that we have a responsibility for helping to maintain peace between nations. We realize that this cannot be done by mere words or wishes but that enduring peace can result only from a positive effort toward a world order assuring justice for all, economic progress for all with special privileges for none, and cooperative action guided by the understanding that the rights of one group are the obligations of another.

Such a world order would make possible in every land peace and freedom for individual self-development and collective well being. Economic and social security cannot safely be separated from those moral standards and forces that lie at the heart of human fellowship. Without morality there can be neither cooperation nor sanctity of agreements. Without these our civilization breaks down.

Concerted action between free people to protect the world's right to peace is our only guarantee of peace. That action must be cooperation to assure justice and opportunity for national progress for all. Poverty and business depression in any one country endangers the prosperity of the others trading in the world market. Force is not our remedy but rather intelligent development of a world order in which friendliness and cooperation advance the interests of all nations with special privilege for none. Between nations as between individuals the important and enduring things in life are kindness, fellowship and cooperation.

We urge this course upon our own government and appeal to the free labor movements of all other countries to use their influence to the same ends.

(1938, p. 504) In considering the subject of world peace we must also consider the conditions that confront us and out of which may grow a world war; conditions which, even without war, are causing the most acute suffering. One phase of the great picture of injustice is that dealing with what the dictators of Europe call racial purity. Under the guise of promoting race purity, although no major race is pure and none has been pure for centuries, the totalitarian states are expelling thousands of peaceful, helpless Jewish people. Great numbers of Gentiles also have been compelled to flee for their lives, but the plight of the Jewish refugees is worst of all. Their numbers are greater and the places to which they may go to reconstruct their lives are fewer. We extend to them our full sympathy. We denounce the brutality that has forced them into exile and we believe our hatred of that brutality should be expressed at every opportunity and in the most forceful manner.

We commend the President of the A. F. of L. for the energetic action he has taken in response to declarations and decisions related to this subject. We refer particularly to the boycotting of German goods and in other forms manifesting our disapproval and condemnation of the practices being pursued by Nazi Germany. We recommend not only the continuance of the activities and policies heretofore pursued by the A. F. of L., but urge intensification of our efforts in behalf of the persecuted and oppressed minorities in Germany.

We further commend the President of the A. F. of L. for the timely and fitting cablegram, sent while we have been in session in Houston, addressed to Sir Walter Citrine of the British Trade Union Congress, protesting against narrowing the opportunities for Jewish refugees to find a haven of refuge in Palestine. We call upon the British Trade Union Congress, as a faithful and consistent defender of the institutions of democracy, to intercede with the British government, in accord with the spirit of the cablegram dispatched to Sir Walter Citrine, which we herewith quote: "Convention A. F. of L. now in session gravely concerned over reports British Government may announce new policy which in effect would greatly limit Jewish migration to Palestine. We believe complete open door for Jewish migration to Palestine should be maintained. Persecuted millions of Jewish people in Central and Eastern Europe must find new homes. In light of these facts it is inconceivable that British Government would restrict Jewish immigrants to the country which now offers them place of refuge. Will appreciate all assistance you and your associates can give in response to this appeal." He likewise requested the State Department of our Government to intercede in this matter. Finally, we believe that labor movements of the democracies should work in harmony for the protection of and the relief of the helpless refugees from the barbarism of the race-hating policies of the dictator states of Europe. We can offer no semblance of friendship to nations that defy all the laws of decency; we can have no tolerance of intolerance. We commend the officers for their work in the past year in helping to ease the burden of the refugee multitudes and for their part in helping to arouse the conscience of civilization against this most revolting expression of dictatorial barbarism.

Peace Treaty

(1941—pp. 14, 300, 301, 623) The president of the A. F. of L. in his keynote speech declared that labor must be represented in the war settlement and peace negotiations when the time comes. A number of resolutions were submitted on this subject. The convention declared that the A. F. of L. is in accord with the purpose and substance of these resolutions, and in so doing particularly emphasized that the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor name a representative from among the men of Labor and present the name of such chosen representative to the President of the United States.

(Objectives)

(1942, p. 235) The E.C. called attention to the importance of considering post-war planning even while fighting a war. Attention was directed to the fact that "an important part of winning the war is to maintain democratic institutions and procedures in operation and to state our war objectives in simple, clear terms so that they become a power in helping us to win the war".

(Labor Representation Proposed) (1942, p. 236) When the time comes for negotiation of political terms and conditions to prevail in the post-war world, organized labor of the United States must be fully and adequately represented in our national delegation that negotiates the peace treaty—with a voice in determining the whole treaty.

As representatives of the largest numerical group in all nations concerned, we maintain Labor should have representation in delegations from all countries concerned.

The workers of all countries want to use their influence for better world organization so that problems can be settled by conference instead of by war.

They want to make sure that world trade in the future does not profit financially because of sub-standard labor conditions in any industry or any country.

They want to do their part in making the world peace a treaty peace in which all nations are given equal consideration with equal opportunities for progress and pursuit of happiness.

We cannot attack problems and decisions from an emotional idealistic approach alone, but we must reinforce our ideals with exact knowledge of the forces involved and careful consideration of facts. We should not try to eliminate force from the political field, but to harness it to constructive policies and agencies.

Proposals to isolate countries, to set up buffer states, to balance powers off against each other, belong to the past. Technical progress, which eliminates space, also eliminates "isolation."

1. The principle that must be basic in that peace is "Governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed." The kind of government which other countries may choose may differ widely from the institutions of the United States, as the genius and character of one nation differs from another. The important thing is that the government shall have the approval of the governed and that there shall be no type of aggression.

2. The territorial security of all nations and opportunities for peaceful change should be assured. By such machinery we hope to work toward and to develop a world community of nations.

We realize that the basis for these must be laid to the development of regional cooperation between contiguous countries with common economic interests and, if possible, similar cultural institutions.

When we consider peace we must realize that the entire world is the scope and be mindful of relationships between the continents. The terms and agencies of peace must deal with the whole world and give ample consideration to situations likely to result in injustice and retardation in every country. No one race or continent should be dominant.

3. We further propose that as essential for participation by Labor of all countries in these world conferences and agencies, wage earners shall be guaranteed the right to membership in free unions controlled by the membership concerned. We have repeatedly witnessed the initial attack by the new despotism upon the free labor movement, because the shackling of this largest group in a democracy left other groups and interests helpless to make effective protest. We propose this basic right as essential for the world democracy for which this war is waged.

4. There must be a world agency to decide policies in which all countries are concerned, definite provisions to make decisions effective, and a world court.

5. Every political, economic and social institution must service the freedom and the welfare of human beings. The inalienable rights of free men are the ultimate end which civilization promotes.

(P. 515) Two related resolutions (Nos. 71 and 91) were before the convention calling for labor representation on all peace deliberative bodies, and for greater participation in war economy deliberations. The convention considered these resolutions in connection with the section of the E.C. report titled PEACE OBJECTIVES AND PEACE TREATY. The following report of the convention committee was unanimously adopted:

The central part and the most vital recommendation in the Executive Council's report deals with the necessity of adequate labor representation in all delegations from the countries concerned, for organized labor must have the opportunity of applying their influence for a better world when the war ends. Unless there is this adequate representation of labor, it will be impossible to negotiate a final treaty which will contain the provisions essential to a better world.

Adequate labor representation in itself is not sufficient; there must be a knowledge on the part of the American Federation of Labor of the peace objectives and policy connected with them on the part of the other trade union federations of Europe, for unless trade unionism internationally can present a unified program, the welfare of labor and the welfare of the United Nations would suffer.

For this reason your committee believes that the responsibility of the Post-War Problems Committee of the American Federation of Labor should include a thorough-going study and close contact with the Anglo-American trade union movement.

In connection with Resolutions Nos. 71 and 91, your committee is equally convinced of the necessity for adequate labor representation upon all Federal agencies dealing with the present war effort, and post-war planning.

In connection with proper labor representation provisions should be made which will assure that representatives of labor, appointed and engaged in the activities, should be protected in the continued employment from which they have been withdrawn to render outstanding service, not only to labor, but to the nation.

Your committee therefore recommends endorsement of the Executive Council's report.

(1943, p. 9) In keynote speech to the convention the President of the A. F. of L. declared—

This war has taught us that America cannot isolate herself from the rest of the world. As a nation we face a new era in international relations when the war ends. Our first objective must be to assure lasting peace. We know now that peaceful intentions on our part are not enough, that we must assume our full share of responsibility that the warlike tendencies of other nations do not break beyond bounds. To win this war against the enemies of democracy, freedom and human decency, America has allied herself with other nations. In the post-war era, America must join with other nations of good will in preserving peace throughout the civilized world.

This is the outstanding reason why labor demands full representation at the peace conference. We intend to see to it that the desire for permanent peace of the American people is not thwarted by professional international diplomats. We also will insist on the restoration of political and economic independence to those nations which have been overrun and pillaged and despoiled by our enemies. And we will not be satisfied until the guarantees of justice and democracy embodied in the Four Freedoms are established for all time throughout the civilized world.

We shall insist that the peoples of the world shall be made free—free from Prussian militarism, free from Fascism, free from Nazism and free from Japanese savagery.

It is our firm purpose and determination to serve in every way we can to establish free democratic trade unions throughout the world. That is an objective that we place high as our ideal and our goal.

In conclusion, may I state that we all realize that these are trying days. We, along with the people of the world, are living and moving in the shadows of sorrow and sadness. The clouds of adversity hang heavily over a war-torn world, and in characteristic fashion, as hope springs eternal in the human breast, we have turned our faces toward the rising sun, toward the dawn of a new day—a day when peace will come, when we can live normal lives again, a day when righteousness will triumph over injustice and wrong, when the Allied Armies will finally have won a decisive victory. These are the days we are looking for, and with scrutinizing vision we pierce the clouds and the shadows that lie between us now and the realization of that great objective.

But our slogan is victory, and we will stand with our great President, the Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States and with our Allies in the fight which is being made to achieve victory—victory for free democratic labor, victory for helpless people, victory for those who suffer from the yoke of Nazism, Fascism, and Japanese savagery, victory for righteousness, the victory that must be achieved before we quit the war.

(1944, p. 455) In his official reply to the British Fraternal Delegate, President Green included the following:

We are determined that the voice of labor, as expressed by the American Federation of Labor, shall be heard at the Peace Conference. We shall insist and demand, with all of the power at our command, that the American Federation of Labor shall be represented at the Peace Conference, wherever it is held, when victory is finally won. The American Federation of Labor will go to that conference with a program, and that program will be formulated in democratic fashion by the seven million members of the American Federation of Labor. Those who represent us will present that program, the program of American labor, to the Peace Conference, and we will fight together with any who will fight with us for the establishment of a just and lasting peace which will guarantee freedom, justice and liberty throughout the world.

(P. 279) While war has long been the major enemy of human happiness and comfort, it has been accepted as a political instrumentality necessary both for aggression and in defense of liberty. There was much hope put in the Kellogg-Briand Pact outlawing war as a political instrumentality. But we neglected to increase the procedures and agencies which a nation must exhaust before resorting to war and we neglected to lodge somewhere authority to compel appeal to decision by peaceful means. The League of Nations also was not effective in dealing with aggression.

The Second World War has mobilized all technical progress for incredible destruction so that the total labor force must be available for essential and needed work and for service in the armed forces. There is no longer possible a distinction between non-combat civilian workers and citizens in the armed forces. The whole of national life must be geared to the efforts on the fighting front. We now have the robot bombs used against the homeland of the British army—thus extending the fighting front to the whole nation.

War has become so terrifyingly efficient as to menace our whole civilization. We have every reason to seek a peace founded on justice and to help build up the agencies for the peaceful adjustment of problems and situations such as have resulted in wars.

(P. 572) We recommend concurrence in the principles which the Executive Council proposes as the basis for world peace. The nations of the world live together in what technical progress has made one community. So completely have distances been conquered and so disastrous the weapons of war that if we would have peace we must organize to deal with aggression. Yet power to deal with aggression must respect the rights of nations which in turn must assure individuals those rights which guarantee personal freedom. The United Nations must not set up new agencies through which the powerful can dictate to other nations.

As the Executive Council points out, since World War I we have experimented with some international agencies and the only one that has endured through peace and war is the agency which brought into its work representatives of functional groups of many lands—the International Labor Organization. The tripartite basis on which this agency was organized has brought into its administrative and legislative work representatives of the government, the employers and the workers of all countries affiliated with it. These representatives in turn, reporting back to the groups they represented, had a concern and responsibility for their work in their home lands as well as in the international office. We believe that by extending the representative principle to other agencies we can develop a sense of responsibility on the part of the citizens of all countries for the policies and activities of the United Nations that will make for genuine efforts to maintain the peace. It would be a serious mistake to delegate full responsibility for world peace to the diplomats and other statesmen. It is the citizenry of the world who have a burning desire to end the situation which periodically sends their young men to the battlefield. They should have a voice and a responsibility in maintaining world peace.

As the Executive Council intimates in its insistence that only bona fide trade unions shall be the agencies to designate representatives of workers, so bona fide organizations of other functional groups shall designate representatives of their groups.

(Proposals) — (P. 280) The American Federation of Labor believes that the United States has a responsibility for helping to plan and operate agencies to keep the peace between nations; to determine policies in promotion of world economic welfare; to develop an adequate body of international law with a world court of justice. Any world organization responsible for keeping the peace must have the means to prevent aggression.

The Federation believes that regional organization should be formed to deal with regional problems and to promote regional welfare covering such areas as the Pacific, Asia, Pan-America, Africa, Continental Europe or federations thereof. Federation in regional organizations would give small countries more effective protection and participation in progress.

We must safeguard the rights of individual nations while promoting international security.

The Federation believes the four fighting United Nations have a responsibility for submitting proposals to other nations and for taking the initiative in setting up such institutions as are agreed upon by representative nations.

Labor, like all other functional groups in our national life, shall need representation in those international economic conferences and agencies dealing with matters which affect our welfare.

In connection with international labor conferences or agencies under governmental auspices, we reserve the right to select our own delegates.

In organizing our bona fide international labor organization we necessarily must insist that the basis be representative, bona fide trade union organizations.

(P. 574) Several resolutions were introduced in the convention all calling for representation for Labor in delegations to outline peace terms. The intent of the resolutions was approved and the following "resolve" adopted:

That this convention of the American Federation of Labor hereby records itself in favor of insisting that duly accredited representatives of the American Federation of Labor shall be appointed to participate in the peace conferences.

(P. 469) Res. 6:

Whereas—We are today involved in a vast struggle of world-wide proportions against those who have sought to conquer the world and impose upon it tyrannical domination, and

Whereas—We are fighting in this war for the right of every man to have a voice in the government of his country; for the right of every man to live in peace and security, and to enjoy social and economic standards consistent with human comfort and human dignity, and

Whereas—It is our belief that in order to achieve these aims the old discredited system of power politics, balance-of-power manipulations and arbitrary divisions of spheres of influence must be abolished and that this modern interdependent and closely-knit world must be reorganized on the basis of collaboration among all nations, large or small, and

Whereas—It is our unshakeable belief that such collaboration cannot attain its full effectiveness unless labor is fully and adequately represented on the international councils by delegates chosen by organized labor itself, therefore, be it

Resolved—That the United States shall help to establish an international machinery with adequate power to maintain the peace against all possible future aggressors and to assure the small nations of the world security from unilateral action or domination by the bigger powers, and be it further

Resolved—That the free and democratic movements of all countries shall have direct and adequate representation on such international councils, and be it further

Resolved—That our foreign policy be directed toward support of the principles of Four Freedoms and the Atlantic Charter, and the removal of trade barriers and the encouragement of the exchange of goods among nations as a means of advancing their economic stability and collective well-being.

Your committee recommends that the second resolved be amended by inserting the word "labor" between the words "democratic movements", and further recommends that the last resolved be amended so that it will read:

Resolved—That our foreign policy be directed toward support of the principles of the Four Freedoms and the Atlantic Charter, and the promotion of commercial relations between the nations of the earth as a means of advancing their respective economic stability and well being.

Labor's Attitude (1946, p. 432) In his cable of January 10 of this year to Secretary of State Byrnes, then in London, President Green thus outlined the position of the American Federation of Labor toward the problem of world peace: "The principles of the Atlantic Charter should be the foundation for wholehearted cooperation to attain a just and enduring peace to stand on the solid foundation of the Four Freedoms." This was a reaffirmation of the position taken by the A. F. of L. during the most trying hours of the war when the hardest battles were still ahead of us. This also was the solemnly proclaimed policy of our government and our allies during the darkest days of the war when victory was still in doubt or at least distant. This remains the position of the A. F. of L. after victory, no less than before victory.

We of organized labor had great hopes that this sane and sound approach to the problem of peace would also continue as the policy of the triumphant powers after no less than before the military victory. Nothing could be more fatal to the cause of decent international relations and world security than for the victorious nations to throw overboard these guiding lines to peace. With profoundest disappointment do we report that since the defeat of the Axis some of the triumphant powers have cynically distorted and flagrantly discarded the principles of the Atlantic Charter and the Four Freedoms. That is why suspicion and distrust have spread among the allies of yesterday. That is why the world is today cursed with power politics and struggles over imperialistic spheres of influence. Here is the real reason for the costly delay in peacemaking and the drafting of treaties at the Paris Conference which, if finally adopted, will sow the seeds of new conflicts.

Foreign affairs today are no longer the business or property of professional diplomats. Today, foreign affairs are the burning concern of the great mass of the people—the workers in the factories and mines, in the fields and offices. This was a people's war and the peace must be the people's peace. Throughout the war and since its conclusion, the A. F. of L. has demanded that the voice of labor be heard and that the hand of labor be felt at the peace table. Realizing the urgency of organized labor taking an active part in helping the nation adopt and apply a truly democratic foreign policy, the Executive Council has insisted on effective labor representation in the United Nations and has made various concrete recommendations for action by our government. The A. F. of L. has won the right to have advisors to the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations. . . .

We are happy to report that these representatives have already taken the initiative in presenting the first International Bill of Rights ever proposed by any national or worldwide labor organization. This bill has won immediate extensive acclaim. It embodies a concrete and constructive program for applying the Four Freedoms in every country—victorious and vanquished alike. The A. F. of L. Bill of Rights is to be considered by the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations for incorporation into the general peace treaty.

We express the sincere hope that the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations will approve the Bill of Rights submitted by the American Federation of Labor in behalf of the workers of the world. We likewise call upon the workers everywhere to impress upon their government the necessity of approving this Charter of Rights, this Magna Carta of Labor, as the guiding rule that shall not only declare but safeguard the workers as free men and women throughout the world.

Because of the increasing importance of the United Nations Economic and Social Council and the several international organizations which have come into existence and in which the workers are deeply interested and greatly concerned, the work of our permanent International Labor Relations Committee and that of the consultants hereinbefore referred to will constantly involve greater technical requirements and demand increasing time and attention. They will also need research services and the like. It is therefore recommended that the Executive Council allocate funds for budgets submitted from time to time by this committee and by the consultants referred to.

(P. 73) The problems attendant on negotiating a peace treaty were set forth in a section of the E.C. Report under the above title. The convention committee which considered this subject reported as follows:

(P. 556) The Peace Conference in Paris has had to contend with conflicts between two basic systems of government in which democracy, freedom and administration have different and conflicting definitions. The Communist-controlled countries believe in highly centralized domination of the people governed with enforcement in the hands of the secret police with absolute power to arrest and sentence. Democratic countries believe in representative government providing majority rule with individual freedom assured by civil liberties and rule of law. The Slavic countries have operated as a bloc against democratic countries and have sought expansion and power.

The peace treaties for the five enemy nations are necessarily compromises. Decisions have not been reached upon Trieste nor upon freedom of traffic on the Danube. Decision on the trusteeship of the Italian colonies was also deferred for a year. The Soviet insistence upon sharing this trusteeship has no basis in war contributions but is part of their policy to secure "friendly" relations with Mohammedan nations. These nations could be used for an anti-European revolt, which could give the U.S.S.R. control over North Africa, most strategic in air operations. The U.S.S.R. is seeking to reopen the Dardanelles agreement, and force unilateral terms upon Turkey without consulting other interested countries.

Treaties determining the future of Germany and Austria yet to be made are even more fateful for the future of world peace and progress. As the future of Germany determines the economic life of Continental Europe and western democracies, we urge that the policies set forth in Secretary Byrnes' Stuttgart speech be the guide.

With democracy and employment, Germany and Austria will no longer be at the mercy of totalitarian armed force and there will be greater security for the Western Hemisphere. A further measure of security for Europe and freedom is recognition of Mohammedan interests in North Africa.

Peace terms have yet to be determined for Japan. Civil war between the Communists and Nationals still harries China.

We are anxious to hasten the determination of peace so that armies of occupation can be withdrawn where possible. We hope countries in the throes of desperation and poverty will not turn from freedom and orderly progress.

Our own country has a heavy responsibility for helping those who would regain freedom while our labor movement and other voluntary organizations must assist workers and employers of other countries to regain free organization.

But we must guard against letting our desire for peace lead us to forego the force and insistence that are necessary for securing the kind of peace with justice that will be lasting. We are all weary of war, impatient with regimentation and controls, and long to return to the ways of peace, but only the determined and strong can have peace with security. Appeasement of obstructions will get us nowhere for the U.S.S.R. seek domination of other people's lives and countries, not freedom. We must beware also of the agents of the Communist Party within our own country, some of whom occupy strategic positions in our Government or control them through party followers. These persons have pledged allegiance to Moscow, not our democracy, and promote policies that bring foreign disfavor to our Government.

We urge upon our Government continued vigor and firmness in insisting upon policies to promote peace through justice to all and through opportunities for democratic self-government for all.

Whereas—Since the end of World War II, it has become increasingly apparent that, while the United States has stripped down its Army and military establishments and attempted to build up a world order based on law and peaceful settlement of disputes between nations, our efforts have been undermined and opposed and our motives have been smeared, and in the world today, that is plotting world conquest and the destruction of individual liberties and national independence, on a scale and with methods that far exceed in magnitude, the zeal, brutality and incendiarism, the pernicious world conquest of Hitler and his Nazis. This force is the Soviet Government and its rulers. They have thwarted every honest effort to establish an effective United Nations. They have thwarted every effort to place the atomic bomb under international control and inspection so as to prevent its use to destroy the peace of the world. They have thwarted every effort to bring democracy and economic stability to the war-wracked countries of Europe. Instead, they have brutally extended their power through fifth-column Communist Party agents in Eastern Europe, Eastern Germany, China, Korea, Greece and Czechoslovakia. The world waits with bated breath for the next victim, and

Whereas—The American Federation of Labor supports the Government of the United States in its policy of justice and firmness in international affairs and we support the efforts of our Government to give aid and comfort to all democratic, peaceful nations who attempt to resist the new menace from the East, therefore, be it

Resolved—That we call upon our Government to go beyond this policy of mere self-defense, of mere economic aid to the Marshall Plan countries and to China. The time has come not merely to encourage their resistance to Soviet aggression and imperialism, but to give them the assurance they are seeking today that we are their true allies, ready, able and willing to give them direct military aid in the event of aggression against them. The British and the French have already welded together a military alliance of Western Europe. We must back up their efforts with a clear statement of alliance with them. The new Soviet Hitlers must be given no chance of misunderstanding our intention to go to the military assistance of our friends if they are attacked, directly or indirectly. They must be made to understand that there will be no appeasement and that we will defend liberty and peace—by arms, if necessary.

(P. 491) Convention endorsed the "spirit and aims of the resolution" and referred it to the International Labor Relations Committee, A. F. of L. for appropriate implementation and application.

Pension Plans (also see: A. F. of L. Employees Plan; Social Security)

(Non-Contributory)—(1940, pp. 116, 559)

Extravagant Pension Plans—Our present program for aged persons is based on two approaches: (1) insurance to which wage earners contribute during their working years, which provides monthly payments to the aged worker when he retires or to certain dependents if he should die prematurely; and (2) public assistance, non-contributory, granted to needy aged persons upon proof of need. There are many groups in the country who urge that the Social Security program be abandoned and replaced by non-contributory pensions for all aged persons or for all whose incomes fall below some specified amount. Several bills to this effect have been introduced in Congress, but so far none have been acted on. Several states have also had proposals before them.

If uniform pensions were paid, with no inquiry into the need of the recipient, they would have to be large enough to make supplementary relief unnecessary or they would fail to give the security aimed at. Pensions of a size to give security to those without other income would give unnecessary incomes to many persons. We can more easily finance reasonable security for those who need it if our funds are not used to contribute equally to those who individual resources are sufficient without public grants. It is clear that in our present economic state no such sums as would be needed could be raised by additional taxes levied only on wealth or the top incomes. The greatest part of the tax burden would fall on the moderate and low-income families. The hope is frequently held out by advocates of such pension plans and taxes that the increased circulation of money would vastly increase the national income and lead the country to prosperity. If, as would be the case, a large share of the taxes fall on low-income families, there would be no new demand for goods. It would only mean a shift of money from the family which needed it to an aged person who needed it. It would mean inflationary price increases damaging to the worker's budget. Until the needs of wage earners and their families are more adequately supplied, until health insurance, more adequate workmen's compensation and unemployment compensation systems, and temporary and permanent disability programs provide security throughout the worker's lifetime, we cannot endorse the use of a disproportionate share of the national income for that part of the population over 60 years of age, and we cannot approve tax systems which would bankrupt the nation and lay unwarranted burdens on the working population.

We urge, therefore, that the Social Security Act be not discarded, but amended to improve both the old-age assistance and the old-age and survivors insurance programs. The former should be amended immediately along the lines suggested above. The old-age and survivors insurance program needs to be broadened so that millions of persons now excluded may, during their working years, build up rights to monthly benefits in their old age or protection for their surviving dependents. We believe firmly that the Social Security Act can be built into a comprehensive and sound system of protection for old and young, employed, unemployed and handicapped persons—a system which fits into and enhances our democratic way of life.

(P. 559) We know that many extravagant pension plans would handicap tax-paying wage earners and prevent a sound development of a well-rounded plan of social security. We therefore recommend . . . that we work for improvement and expansion of the Social Security Act rather than its replacement by any extravagant pension plan which is not on a sound financial basis and which concentrates on only one part of the total problem of social security—that of the aged person.

Widows—(1941, p. 594)

Whereas—In the establishment of the retirement legislation, Congress acknowledged that postal salaries are not sufficient to maintain the American standards of living and at the same time to purchase annuities against the approach of old age, and

Whereas—The security of his widow is a vital concern to the postal employee, and his salary deduction is in reality a joint deduction from both husband and wife, and

Whereas—It is just and equitable that the widow or dependent as specified by the employees should receive special consideration for the deduction made; therefore, be it

Resolved—That the 61st Annual Convention of the American Federation of Labor, assembled in Seattle, Washington, go on record as endorsing H.R. 1847, which bill provides the security we desire.

Municipal and County Workers—(1950, p. 40) Res. 52:

Whereas—Many subdivisions of local government have no retirement plans for their employes, and

Whereas—State employes do have a retirement plan as well as Federal employes, therefore, be it

Resolved—That this convention of the American Federation of Labor herewith instructs its officers to seek the necessary federal legislation making it mandatory for local subdivisions of government to provide an adequate retirement plan to be eligible for Federal Aid Funds.

(P. 497) The committee concurs in the purpose of this resolution and recommends that it be adopted. The committee further recommends that, before any specific legislation is introduced, the Executive Council make a survey to determine the extent to which the resolution would apply and consult the affiliated organizations thus affected.

Proposed for All A. F. of L. Members—(1947, p. 646) Res. 29 which was non-concurred in by the convention, called for the establishment of a general retirement plan to take in all members of the A. F. of L. The resolution, and committee report thereon, follows:

Whereas—The present Federal retirement plan at the age of 65 years is inadequate, and

Whereas—Employers are today vying for help between the ages of eighteen and thirty-five, and

Whereas—Employees over the age of thirty-five and forty are experiencing difficulty in obtaining work, and

Whereas—Such plan can best be accomplished by the American Federation of Labor establishing a retirement plan for all American Federation of Labor members, therefore, be it

Resolved—That the American Federation of Labor make a study of such retirement plan for the A. F. of L.

members, whereby the members contribute monthly to the support of such plan, and that such plan provide for an earlier retirement age than sixty-five.

Your committee in recommending non-concurrence with the resolution because, among other things, it calls upon the American Federation of Labor to establish a retirement pension for the entire membership, calls attention to the fact that many National and International Unions affiliated with the A. F. of L. have established retirement pensions in connection with their collective bargaining with their employers, a practice which might well be established in future negotiations with employers where such a provision does not now exist.

Comparative Study Proposed—

Whereas—A retirement pension plan has been established by law for a large number of the employes of private industry, and

Whereas—A retirement pension plan has also been established for the employes of the Federal Government, and

Whereas—Each of these plans is continuing to develop, but along different lines and at different rates, and

Whereas—An accurate comparison of the two plans as they exist today would be of great value to the participants in each as a base for determining relative progress and future development, therefore, be it

Resolved—That the 1950 convention of the American Federation of Labor make a survey of the comparative benefits and costs of each pension plan.

(P. 486) Since the subject matter had been covered in the report of the E.C. no further action required.

(1952, pp. 94, 449) The Executive Council reported to the convention that a technical pamphlet on this subject had been prepared and made available to those interested in the establishment and operation of negotiated pension plans.

The convention committee submitted the following report and comment on the pamphlet, which was unanimously approved:

This is one of the most practical service publications ever issued by any labor organization. It will be of particular benefit to Internationals, Locals or any other trade union groups that are planning to set up pension programs and to those who wish to evaluate critically those which have already been negotiated.

This booklet points out the important fact that a pension plan which may be perfectly suitable for one group may not be of any value at all to any other group. Each plan must be drawn up to meet the special needs which may arise under the particular conditions under which any group may work.

Details of any plan depend on the make-up of the group—just what the members want to get out of the plan—how they expect to finance it. These and many other factors must be given careful consideration before any group signs a pension plan contract, whether it is negotiated with employers or set up in any other pattern. All these variable factors are reviewed in the 100 pages of the Guide.

In plain, forceful, trade union language, it reviews such topics as cost factors, methods of financing and administering a plan, benefit provisions, "pension plans and the law", pension negotiations—and dozens of equally important points. It closes with a list of references for further study.

Labor's concern with pensions has spread throughout the movement. It is significant that, of the 5 million workers who are said to be "covered" by existing pension schemes, very few will actually receive a pension. By supplying this new Guide, the American Federation of Labor has taken a long step forward to cut down the number of ineffective pension plans and to help our unions establish programs which will really do what members expect them to do.

Your Committee recommends that this pamphlet be given immediate, wide circulation in our ranks and that delegates here take steps to have their unions carry reports on the pamphlet in their respective journals. They will find the study to be thorough yet simple—just what the members want.

(And Welfare Plans) — (1951, pp. 46, 410) During the last few years, unions have negotiated "fringe benefits" for their members, through pension and welfare plans.

Unions have become interested in the possible effects of such plans in relation to workers' free mobility, geographically and economically and other related aspects of this subject. As a result, a study was instituted to examine the entire subject of pension and welfare plans instituted by collective bargaining between unions and employers.

Your Committee recommends that as soon as this study is completed, copies be widely distributed among our membership, that unions be asked to study the report and submit their questions and comments to the American Federation of Labor.

This is our problem and we must give it our fullest attention.

Pension Funds—(1955, p. 232)

(As) it is the policy of the American Federation of Labor to cooperate fully with any duly constituted investigating body or agency engaged in an objective and impartial effort to determine the character, extent and source of corrupt or unethical practices in the operation of health and welfare plans, the American Federation of Labor extended its full cooperation to members and staff of the Subcommittee on Welfare and Pension Funds of the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee. This Subcommittee is engaged in the investigation of the problem of abuse in the operation of welfare plans and the need for legislation.

On March 21, the Subcommittee held a panel discussion, inviting representatives of management, labor, and the insurance and banking industry to participate. Staff members of the Social Insurance Activities department joined in the discussion and submitted a statement on behalf of the American Federation of Labor. The statement said in part that:

The sums contributed to these plans by employers are, in effect, wages paid for services rendered and are therefore the collective property of the group of workers covered. They should therefore be administered in such a way as to provide the greatest possible real benefit to the workers covered, consistent with considerations of safety and prudence. Any charge against these funds that is out of proportion, or unrelated to the value of the benefit or service derived by the intended beneficiaries conflicts with this objective—whether it be excessive or unwarranted commissions and charges by brokers or consultants, "kick-backs", malfeasance... on the part of trustees, or profiteering by medical practitioners. All of these actual or potential abuses must be avoided or corrected if the plans are to fulfill the purpose for which they were created.

In calling upon the Subcommittee to extend its field of investigation to encompass plans which are administered unilaterally by management, the statement noted:

... The fact is that such unilaterally-administered plans are more common in industry today than are jointly-managed funds. If, as is alleged, there is inadequate protection under the Taft-Hartley Act of the worker's interests in joint funds, then there is absolutely no protection of the worker's interests in management-administered funds. We know from experience that it is far more difficult for covered workers to obtain information... about the operation of such unilateral plans than is the case under jointly-administered plans—even where the workers themselves contribute directly toward the cost of the program. And we have absolutely no reason to believe that such plans, administered solely by employers, are more free of abuse, kick-backs and favoritism than are those in the administration of which unions participate—labor, after all, did not invent these practices, and condemns them now just as vigorously and sincerely as any other group.

Personnel Research Federation— (1925, p. 32) The A. F. of L. was one of the charter members of the Personnel Research Federation which has developed into an active research agency. With the opening of a permanent office and the provision for a full-time director, made possible by a modest budget, the Research Federation was incorporated and its constitution modified. The Personnel Research Federation has been able to draw to itself the necessary information and contacts to become a clearing center for personnel research and is now in position to render practical service. At its regular semi-annual meeting held in Washington, May, 1925, the chief discussion occurred on the methods employed by the Russell Sage Foundation in its study of the company unions organized by the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company. The discussion in very pointed implications indicated what Labor had to gain by keeping in touch with research studies, the methods of investigation and the interpretation of research reports. The interest in the discussion of the C.F.I. study was heightened by the fact that the investigation showed how company unions depend upon trade unions for decisions of fundamental trade standards. The May meeting provided for a small standing committee to carry forward sustained study of the technique of personnel research. The A. F. of L. is represented on this committee.

As the undertakings of the Personnel Research Federation are developed we shall endeavor to keep in close touch, so that we may counsel in the formulation of plans and policies.

(P. 271) The convention recommends continued affiliation with the Personnel Research Federation as long as in the judgment of the E.C. it finds this federation of service to labor.

(1926, pp. 60, 318) Labor has much to gain from friendly contracts with outside groups which constitute opportunities for promoting a wider understanding of Labor's problems and ideals. If public as well as industrial decisions and policy are to be determined after full consideration of wage earners views and needs in the situation, wider circles of citizens must understand labor's problems and the workings of the labor movement. Outside groups convinced of the righteousness of our cause can help us with influence and opportunities for wider contacts and information.

Relationships with the Personnel Research Federation will be continued. An increasing range of problems arising out of human relations in production are being studied from the approach of psychology and physiology and it is important that labor have representation in the organization that is serving as a national clearing center.

We note with satisfaction the report on relationships with the American Bar Association, the American Library Association and the American Legion, colleges, and universities and certain religious organizations interested in social and religious problems. We urge continuance of these friendly and helpful relationships and their extension wherever and whenever possible.

Peru (Labor Situations)—(1948, p. 330) Res. 123 requested the A. F. of L. to officially condemn and oppose the action taken by President Bustamanto and his associates and the military government against the bona fide labor movement of Peru.

(P. 492) The following special statement prepared by the Committee on International Labor Relations was adopted by the convention:

The American Federation of Labor, consistent with its long-standing tradition of uncompromising defense of the basic civil and trade union rights of the workers throughout the world, emphatically protests against the repressive, anti-labor measures taken by the Peruvian Government, including the arrest of hundreds of trade union leaders, and the confiscation of trade union properties, as a result of the revolt staged by naval and military personnel in the City of Callao, Peru, on October 3rd of this year. It protests also the abolition of constitutional parliamentary government and the advent of the military dictatorship which now rules that country, and asks for the immediate restoration of all the constitutional guarantees and civil rights.

In reference to the situation of the Peruvian labor leaders who are imprisoned by order of the military government, in spite of their repeated denials of any connection whatsoever with the Callao revolt, the American Federation of Labor asks that a fair and public trial be given them without delay in the civil courts of the country, with permission to labor organizations from other American countries to participate in their defense.

The American Federation of Labor reaffirms its solidarity with Brother Arturo Sabroso Montoya, President of the Peruvian Confederation of Labor, who is seriously ill in the Lima prison hospital, and with other victimized leaders of the Peruvian organized labor movement.

It praises their courageous opposition in spite of violent persecution and terror, against both forms of Fascist and Communist totalitarianism, and pledges full support for the recovery of their freedom and the right of their organization to exist and function without interference.

Your committee finally recommends that the International Labor Relations Committee be instructed and empowered to take the necessary steps required to carry out the manifest intent and purpose of this declaration.

Petition Rule (Congressional)—(1926, p. 66) There is urgent need for arousing all liberal minded citizens to the need of maintaining a deliberative and responsive Congress under conditions that permit of effective discussion and decision.

Rules of procedure have been adopted by the House of Representatives which can and do prevent full and free opportunity for the discussion and disposition of legislation coming before it for consideration. All these restrictive rules have been promoted under the guise of efficient and business-like administration of government and the limitation of needless discussion. The actual result of these rules has been to deny to members of the House of Representatives full freedom to consider and discuss whatever legislative proposal they might champion for the general welfare of the people.

When the 68th Congress met December 3, 1923, a small number of progressive Republicans and Democrats in the House demanded that the rules be changed so that no committee could "pigeon-hole" a bill submitted to it for consideration. After weeks of bitter verbal clashing the House adopted a rule that when 150 members signed a petition to withdraw a bill from committee the question would come before the House and a majority of those present would be sufficient to order its consideration. In previous Congresses a few men were able under the rules to prevent consideration of any bill.

When the 69th Congress met, the first Monday in December, 1925, this rule of the 68th Congress was changed. The new rule requires a majority of the members of the House—that is, 218—to withdraw a bill from committee. This change made it possible to order a bill back from committee. This rule has given control of Congress to three men—the Speaker, the Leader of the House, and the Chairman of the Rules Committee.

Although bills are reported favorably and placed on the calendar it is impossible to have them considered by the House as long as these three men refuse consent.

To manifest our disapproval of the House rules now in effect and in order again to reestablish freedom of opportunity for discussion, consideration and action on all legislative proposals submitted to Congress, we recommend approval of the following rule for reference to and adoption by the next Congress:

After a bill has been in the hands of a committee for 30 days a motion will be in order on the petition of 125 members to withdraw the bill from committee. If a majority of those present in the House vote in favor of calling the bill back from committee it shall become unfinished business and will not require a rule from the Rules Committee for permission to act upon it. It shall be debated and acted upon before any other business is transacted.

(1934, pp. 84, 551) One of the greatest grievances of members of the House of Representatives was the practice of committees to withhold reports on bills. This became so prevalent that finally a rule was adopted that a bill could be withdrawn from a committee on the signing of a petition by 145 members. Several petitions were placed on the Speaker's desk in the last session. Every means was used to defeat the obtaining of signatures or action on the bills when the petitions were complete. The reactionary members do not like this rule and threaten the next Congress to amend it so that it will be necessary for 218 members to sign petitions. This would make it practically impossible for any petition to receive the required number of signatures. The E.C. is directed to protest the threatened change.

(1935, p. 142) The first act of the Seventy-fourth Congress was to amend the rule in the House of Representatives requiring 145 names on a petition to withdraw a bill from a committee. This permitted action on the bills that were being held up by a committee chairman.

The House, however, changed the number necessary to sign a petition from 145 to 218. The object was to eliminate petitions.

Philippines (Independence)—(1927), p. 364) The A. F. of L. heartily favors the immediate grant of independence to the Filipinos.

(1931, pp. 113, 409) The sentiment for Philippine independence is growing fast in both Houses of Congress. It was admitted, however, during the last session by the representatives of the Philippine Islands, that if the bill had passed in the last session it would have been vetoed.

In order to prevent Filipinos coming to the United States, it is necessary that the islands be given their independence. Many thousands of Filipinos are on the western coast and are gradually coming east. They are a growing menace to the standard of living of the wage earners of the U.S. and we will do our utmost in the next session of Congress to have the Philippines granted their independence.

Representative Welch of California has prepared a bill to be introduced in the next Congress recognizing the independence of the Philippines and to regulate the migration of its citizens to the United States. He believes it will have favorable support.

(1932, p. 385) The A. F. of L. urges the U.S. Senate to make the waiting time for independence as short as possible.

(1933, pp. 107, 451) The Hawes-Hare Philippine Independence Bill passed Congress but was vetoed by President Hoover. Both Houses passed the bill over the veto by a two-thirds vote.

The law provides that when the Act has been accepted by the Philippine Legislature only fifty immigrants can come into the continental United States from the Philippines until independence has been consummated. After the Philippines become independent no Filipino can come into the United States as the islands are in the barred zone and they would not be eligible to citizenship.

After the bill became a law a great uproar arose in the islands against its provisions. A large committee came to the United States to see if a law containing provisions more acceptable could be enacted.

(1934, pp. 84, 551) The political leaders of the Philippine Islands succeeded in having the independence law which was enacted by the Seventy-second Congress defeated by the Philippine Legislature. The opponents of the law appointed a commission to come to Washington to work for the enactment of new legislation. However, when they found that it was impossible to secure changes in the law they sought, they accepted the law practically as originally enacted.

Labor was interested in this measure because of the immigration question. Filipinos are neither citizens nor aliens, but they can come freely into the United States. Many thousands are now on the Pacific Coast, where unemployment has reached extreme conditions. The new law provides that after the legislature approved the law only 50 Filipinos a year could come into the United States. After complete independence, none can come as the Philippine Islands are in the barred zone and the Filipinos are ineligible for citizenship. The legislature unanimously accepted the independence Act April 30. Immediately thereafter the government issued an order restricting immigration from the Philippines to 50 each year.

(1935, p. 141) Congress enacted a law to transport at federal expense to the Philippine Islands all natives of that country who desired to return to their homeland. There are 45,208 Filipinos in the United States and of these it is expected 30,000 will return home. Most of them are on relief and the government considered that it would be to the advantage of the country if the Filipinos were returned to the islands.

Every non-citizen Filipino resident in this country or in the territories is entitled to make application for transportation at the expense of the United States Government.

Congress considered this legislation an emergency measure in order that many cities and localities could be speedily relieved of the burden imposed upon them by unemployed Filipinos who have been dependent on local charity or unemployed relief rolls. It considered that the expenditure of the money required would be an economical use of public funds and vastly more beneficial to this country than would be the withholding of this Congressional encouragement to them to seek passage. . . .

In the past few months an undercover campaign has been conducted to frighten the Filipinos into the idea that when they become independent Japan would take them over. During the discussion on the passage of the Independence Act representatives of the Filipinos emphatically denied that the Japanese had any such ambitions. They said that Japan was looking toward the continent of Asia and had no thought of taking over the Philippines.

These reports, however, have as their objective a campaign in the Philippines to repeal the Independence Act, to which the A. F. of L. should object.

(1938, pp. 169, 455) The First Deficiency Appropriation Act for the year 1937 appropriated $150,000 for all authorized expenditures necessary to enable the Secretary of Labor to provide means by which certain Filipinos may emigrate from the United States.

This law was amended to extend the time to December 31, 1938. Under the provisions of the law about two thousand Filipinos have returned to their native country.

Trade, Extension Supported—(1954, p. 587) The A. F. of L. supported recently enacted legislation which has the effect of extending the period during which goods from the Philippine Islands can enter the United States free of duty. This extension was necessary because under the previous legislation a five per cent duty would have been imposed beginning in July, 1954. Under the new law the duty-free period will continue until January, 1956, in order to allow time to work out a revised trade agreement between the United States and the Philippines.

Physical Examinations for Employment—(1940, p. 429) Several resolutions were introduced into the 1940 Convention protesting against the growing practice of requiring physical examinations as a condition of employment. Because of the importance of the subject, and the growing trend of requiring health certificates for employment in private and government work, the report of the convention committee, adopted unanimously by the convention, is given in full as follows:

The subject of physical examinations in relation to employment has never before received such widespread consideration as it is receiving now. Until a few years ago, the industries which were affected by the requirement for physical examinations were generally those in which workers were subjected to dust inhalation, contributing to diseases such as silicosis, tuberculosis, and the like. In recent times, however, the requirement for physical examinations has extended to occupations and industries such as the printing trades, building trades, and the like. The resolutions referred to call attention to the prevalence of physical examinations in these occupations. Likewise, the tendency toward physical examinations of workers is on the increase because of the adoption of laws by many states providing workmen's compensation as a result of occupational diseases.

Past history indicates the justice of the complaints made by the delegates of the Molders Union; of the California State Federation of Labor; of the Central Labor Union, Lake County, Indiana; and of the Building Trades Department. Many employers have used, and still use, the physical examinations as a means of unjust discrimination in the hiring of employees and in the retention of them in employment. It is also known that many employers in the country, and some of their insurance carriers, have utilized the physical examination as a subterfuge for dismissal of employees in a manner so as to deny them workmen's compensation benefits. This committee, therefore, agrees with the facts contained in the resolutions and on which the protests against physical examinations are made.

However, your committee is informed that the laws of certain states and the rules adopted by certain compensation commissions, provide for physical examinations of workers in one form or another. Likewise, certain legal questions present themselves in connection with requirements which seek to prohibit physical examinations as a condition precedent to employment. Likewise, certain voluntary plans of physical examinations are in operation by agreement between industry and Labor. These plans have for their base limited physical examinations surrounded with safeguards so as to assure fairness in the examination and to prevent denial of compensation benefits and otherwise to maintain a just method of procedure. Naturally, your committee has not had the opportunity of analyzing the laws of the various states pertaining to physical examination or the rules promulgated by the various compensation commissions of the country, nor has it had an opportunity to study the voluntary plans referred to.

The subject, however, is of such vast importance to organized labor that it is the opinion of your committee that a prompt, thorough and efficient study be made of the laws, regulations and plans pertaining to physical examinations and that the entire subject be explored so that appropriate and uniform recommendations may be adopted consistent with the best welfare of workers in industry and in conformance with law. To that end your committee recommends that the president of the American Federation of Labor soon after the adjournment of the convention appoint a committee of five who shall undertake the study of this subject and report to the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor, or to the next convention of the American Federation of Labor for appropriate action. In the performance of its work the committee shall have the assistance of the services of the general counsel and of the Director of Research of the American Federation of Labor.

Picketing—(1927, p. 85) In Daitch & Co., Inc., vs. Cohen et al., decided by the Supreme Court of New York County, sitting in special term, it was held that picketing a store by a labor union will be enjoined as without legal justification in the absence of a strike.

The Supreme Court of Indiana, in the case of Scofes vs. Helmar, ruled that an injunction might be issued restraining a union from picketing or in any way interfering with the employees and patrons of a restaurant. The restaurant owned by Scofes was picketed because of his refusal to sign a union wage scale. The picketing consisted of moving backward and forward on the sidewalk in front of the place of business.

The Clark Lunch Co. of Cleveland refused to enter into an agreement with the Cleveland Waiters' Union and the union thereupon employed persons to distribute printed cards informing the restaurant's patrons and prospective patrons of the attitude of the lunch company. The Court of Appeals of Cuyahoga County, Ohio, in upholding the decision of the lower court, held that a restaurant had no vested right to the patronage of persons who, knowing of the union's actions, refused to patronize it. It was also held that the union had a right in a lawful way to influence and control the patronage of its members and sympathizers in favor of themselves and those with whom it had contracts. The case appears under the title of S. A. Clark Company vs. Cleveland Waiters' and Beverage Dispensers' Local.

In the case of Jefferson & Indiana Coal Company vs. Marks, a Pennsylvania decision, it was held that marching and parading intended to intimidate workmen was as unlawful as violence, and that the spirit of the demonstrations is the thing to be looked for, not the mere marching on the highway. It was also held that in entering a decree awarding an injunction the court should not use the word "peaceful" in connection with the word "picketing."

In Ferguson vs. Peake, a District of Columbia case, the court held that the provisions of Section 20 of the Clayton Act did not apply where there was no evidence of a dispute between a union and a store in question, and no evidence that questions of wages and terms of employment were involved. Here, Ferguson was tried for a violation of the police regulations forbidding persons from remaining in front of a retail store for the purpose of inciting or interfering with prospective purchasers. It was contended that the Clayton Act was applicable in this case.

In Manker vs. Bakers, the Supreme Court of Westchester County, New York, sitting in special term, it was held that labor unions may strike and may carry on picketing in conjunction with and in furtherance of strike. It declared that picketing in front of a place of business by members carrying placards declaring the firm to be unfair did not entitle the baker to a temporary injunction.

In Exchange Bakery and Restaurant, Inc., vs. Rifkin, another New York case, it was held that labor unions may call a strike and picket the premises of an employer for the purpose of inducing him to employ only union labor, and the resulting injury is incidental and must be endured. An agreement not to join a union was held to be without consideration and but a mere promise and not a contract. Peaceful picketing was held not to authorize an injunction.

Embassies — (1937, pp. 169, 319) S.J.Res. 191 prohibits the picketing of embassies or legations of foreign governments.

It has been the practice of various organizations when they feel offended at something done in foreign countries to march up and down before the embassies and legations carrying placards intended to harass the representatives of foreign governments.

Protests have been made by foreign governments to the State Department asking that the practice be prohibited. It is contended that unless we extend such reasonable protection to representatives of other governments, we cannot hope to receive protection for our representatives abroad.

At the request of the A. F. of L., Senator LaFollette introduced an amendment which provided that nothing contained in the resolution shall be construed to prohibit picketing as the result of a bona fide labor dispute regarding the alteration, repair or construction of either buildings or premises occupied for business purposes wholly or in part by representatives of foreign governments.

The amendment was adopted and the bill passed. It then went to the House, which failed to consider the resolution.

It is our purpose and intention to secure an amendment to the amendment offered by Senator LaFollette, providing for the inclusion of cooks, waiters and musicians catering in embassies.

(1938) The embassy picketing bill became a law.

Important Cases—(1940, p. 334) While the important Thornhill and Carlson cases were being argued before the U.S. Supreme Court, the Oregon anti-picketing bill was being tested in the state courts. The lower court of the state had declared the law unconstitutional whereupon it was appealed to the Supreme Court of Oregon. Since it was a very important case, the A. F. of L., the railroad brotherhoods, and other unions joined with the Oregon State Federation in its attack upon the law. The result was outlined by A. F. of L. General Counsel in his report to the 1940 Convention as follows:

"It is clear that the entire case was decided on the basis of the pronouncements of Justice Murphy in the Thornhill case. The Supreme Court of Oregon said:

The Supreme Court, has, in the cited cases, announced a broad construction of the guarantees of freedom of speech and the press, and, applying this conception to laws aimed at picketing, has held that publicizing the facts of a labor dispute in a peaceful way through appropriate means, whether by pamphlet, by word of mouth, or by banner, is within the liberty of communication which is secured to every person by the Fourteenth Amendment against abridgement by a state. It was held, further, that the exercise of this right may not be abridged by proscribing it at the scene of a labor dispute. It has declared the streets of a city appropriate places for the dissemination of views on matters of public moment and that labor controversies come within that category.

. . . .

In the statute there is no definition of the word "picket". It is a word of "vague contours", as the Supreme Court said in the Thornhill case, and doubtless may be used to indicate conduct of a noxious character with which the state has power to deal. But it also embraces activities which the Supreme Court holds the state may not lawfully suppress. It includes, we think, the conduct of one who walks or patrols in the vicinity of a place of business involved in a labor dispute, and by word of mouth, banner or placard, undertakes to give information to the public concerning such dispute. . . . But that the activities embraced by the word "picket" were intended to include such as are free from violence, intimidation and fraud,—what is ordinarily called "peaceable picketing"—we think there can be no doubt. It follows that the very type of conduct which the Supreme Court held in the Thornhill and Carlson cases to be protected by the Fourteenth Amendment, is denounced by the Oregon statute unless engaged in incident to a controversy relative to wages, hours or working conditions, between an employer and a majority of his employees. Otherwise stated, such conduct on the part of a minority of employees, who may have such a controversy with their employer, is prohibited.

In considering constitutional questions the courts look through forms to the substance of things. It is not important, therefore, whether we call the statute one of prohibition or of regulation. That it prohibits to the minority the exercise of rights conceded to the majority there can be no question. If there are 500 employees in a plant whose employer is paying inadequate wages, either in fact or in the opinion of 249, the 249 who alone choose to make an issue of the matter may not, under this statute, exercise what the Supreme Court has held to be their constitutional right of freedom of speech, because the 251 prefer to avoid a dispute with their employer.

. . . There is not inherently a difference in picketing, either with respect to the manner in which it is carried on, or the consequences to those who may be affected by it, based on the number of employees who may be disputing with their employer. On the contrary, whether engaged in on behalf of a few or many, picketing may be peaceful or otherwise for a lawful or unlawful purpose, by a single individual or en masse, and fraught with either negligible or serious consequences to the employer and the public. . . .

The fundamental constitutional right which the Supreme Court sustained in the cited cases was declared to be secured from the 'every person'. We see no escape from the conclusion that the denial of such a right to the members of a minority is no less an unconstitutional abridgement of the right simply because it is saved to the majority.

It has now been determined by the highest court in the land, as we read its decisions, that a law of this kind, so broad and sweeping in its provisions, cannot stand as against the guaranty of freedom of speech in the Federal Constitution. . . .

Plankinton Hotel vs. Hotel and Restaurant Employees—(1942, p. 96) One of the most important labor cases decided by the Supreme Court during the year was the Plankinton Hotel case involving an affiliate of the Hotel and Restaurant Employees International Alliance. The issue involved was the constitutionality of a Wisconsin law which prohibited peaceful picketing in the absence of a majority strike vote of the employees involved; or, put otherwise, which prohibited peaceful picketing by a minority group. The Supreme Court of the State of Wisconsin had written two decisions in this case which left the meaning of the law in complete confusion. Under its first opinion the court held that a state may lawfully prohibit peaceful picketing by minority groups. In its second opinion, realizing that this ruling was in direct conflict with the doctrines pronounced by the Supreme Court of the United States in the Senn and Thornhill cases, the Wisconsin Supreme Court, without expressly admitting it, in effect overruled itself. However, the lower courts in the state continued to enjoin minority picketing and to punish those who would engage in such picketing for contempt of court. In order to clarify this situation an appeal was taken to the Supreme Court of the United States. Although the decision of the United States Supreme Court did not rule on the constitutionality of the Wisconsin 'majority rule' provision, it did hold that peaceful picketing by any minority group was valid.

This was a decided victory for the Hotel and Restaurant Employees International Alliance which immediately re-established its picket line, and the picketing has continued down to the present time.

Political Activity (also see: Labor's Education and Political League; Labor's League for Political Education; Committee for Political Education)

Political Party, Labor—(1925, p. 325) Resolution 58 proposes that the A. F. of L. form a Labor Party. If the resolution confined itself wholly to that object it would be effectively answered by referring to the established position of the A. F. of L. on that question and to the action taken by this convention on Labor's Non-Partisan Political activities. But, in addition, the resolution contains a revolutionary philosophy branded and repudiated. It demands that organized labor in its political activities associate itself with "all other political organizations of a working-class nature," undoubtedly intending thereby to advocate political cooperation with the Socialist and Communist parties; it goes out of its way unjustly to attack the LaFollette Progressive movement, a movement entirely independent of the A. F. of L.; it refers to the government as a thing apart from the American people and as having been hitherto entirely out of their control.

The motives, the reasoning and the aims of this resolution are diametrically opposed to the principles, ideals and methods of the A. F. of L.

(P. 332) Argument against Labor Party: The A. F. of L. has never declined to do what was humanly possible to mobilize the political power of the wage earners. It is a question of how that power and that influence may be best organized.

The A. F. of L. has found by experience that it is best mobilized, not by the formation of an independent political party, but rather by mobilizing that power and that influence on a non-partisan basis. The justification for that policy, for that method of organizing the political power of our people is not only demonstrated in our land but finds even validity in the activities and in the development in all other lands where we are said to have strong labor political parties, and even where these parties manage temporarily to secure control of the government.

Realize this fundamental thing, that once we divide our power economical-ly and politically into two distinctive, separate bodies we are merely disuniting our forces and we are weakening the power that we possess.

We shall not speak of the plausibility of a Labor Party here, but let us go to England, where we are told they have a strong Labor political party, and what do we find as a result of having an economic body on the one hand and a political body on the other hand? Do we find these two bodies in unison and in accord, all striving toward the common end and applying agreed methods of procedure? Observation and analysis of the experience there indicates to the contrary, as has been stated by the president of this Federation at the time that the fraternal delegates from England were addressing this convention when he pointed out that so far as international relations are concerned, the British Trades Union Congress declared for one position, one attitude, while the Labor Party declared for quite a contrary point of view.

That is true not alone as to international relations. These same bodies are also diametrically opposed, even on the economic field, for in the economic field they are beginning to realize that to entrust their safety, their welfare, and their hope for better conditions to Parliament has brought no results whatever, and the last Congress most emphatically and enthusiastically endorsed the exercise of economic power by the transport workers and others in preventing a wage reduction, and the responsible officers of the labor political party division found fault with the activities thus exercised.

And so we have this conflict of judgment, this conflict of opinion, this conflict of attitude and decision between independent Labor political bodies and Labor economic bodies.

Look to France, and the same thing has occurred in that nation, with a Socialist administration in control of the government and with its premier, and then when the wage earners go on strike immediately the political Labor party in power, in control of the government, is used to depress and repress the hopes of the wage earners as expressed by their economic power.

Who among us does not believe that if there had been a Labor government in power in England at the time the miners resisted the wage reductions that MacDonald and his government would have taken the step that a Conservative government was compelled to take? Look to the history of that Labor Party in power, and what has it achieved? What has it accomplished other than to try to repress the economic forces and power in England?

What is the situation in Russia, where a similar political power dominates that great land and where trade unionism is not permitted to exist or to express its hope or seek to right its condition by economic power?

You are bound to lead to that when you divide your economic power and your political power into two distinctive bodies, and whether we shall have it or not that will undoubtedly and always remain the case, and we believe that our concept of mobilizing our political power under the control, as we now have it, through our economic organizations, is the best destined to work out the salvation of the wage earners.

(1932, p. 376) The A. F. of L. rejected a resolution favoring an independent Labor Party, which would mean the abandonment of the traditional non-partisan political policy of the A. F. of L.

(1933, p. 452) Resolution declaring in favor of an independent Labor Party was rejected.

(1934, p. 556) Resolutions favoring a political Labor Party were rejected, the convention declaring:

We reaffirm the declarations of previous conventions on the non-partisan political policy the A. F. of L. The convention reaffirms the declaration announcing the principle of no discrimination because of origin, race, color, religious or political affiliation. Inasmuch as the members of the Communist Party have endeavored to bore within the trade union movement and establish so-called cells within local unions for the purpose of destroying the trade union movement by making it a part of the Communist political party so that the purposes and the method of applying the objectives of the Communist Party could be put into operation in the industrial field.

(1935, p. 758) Thirteen resolutions favoring an independent Labor Party were considered. The convention declared:

The A. F. of L. has repeatedly declared that members of trade unions should go to the polls and vote for Labor's friends, those whom they know will support Labor and its policies. The convention supports the frequent declarations of conventions upon the long established non-partisan political policy.

(1936, p. 648) Ten resolutions favoring the formation of a political Labor Party were rejected. The result of recent elections again emphatically demonstrates the wisdom of the non-partisan political policy of the A. F. of L.

Resolved—That the Sixty-seventh Convention of the American Federation of Labor, assembled in Cincinnati, Ohio, November, 1948, go on record as supporting the development and promotion of a national independent Labor Party, because of the failure of the old formula of rewarding friends and punishing enemies, free from the control of Communists and Fascists and dedicated to democracy and freedom and the advancement of peace and plenty, and committed to the principle of a planned and planning economy, which will nationalize the key and crucial industries in transportation, communications, mining, steel and banking, while preserving the free enterprise system and production and distribution through producers' and consumers' cooperatives in areas that a national commission of competent scientists in the fields of economics, history, sociology, physics, chemistry and cognate sciences determine to be sound and constructive.

(P. 324) The actual formation of a political party by and for Labor, based upon a program of Labor's needs and interests, was proposed by Resolution 112.

Non-Partisan Political Campaign— (1924, p. 169) Partisanship governing legislation enacted by Congress has been shattered largely through the non-partisan political policy of the A. F. of L. Up to 1906 whatever remedial legislation was enacted was secured only after the most strenuous campaigns by Labor over long periods of time.

Although the Chinese Exclusion Act was passed in 1882, it was not until 1912 that Congress finally enacted a stringent law against Chinese coolies being admitted to the United States.

The campaign against unrestricted immigration, begun in 1891, did not become in any way successful until 1907. It was not until 1913 that the literacy test was incorporated in the immigration law. And it was not until 1921, when the three per cent law was enacted, that a real effort was made by Congress to limit immigration. In 1924 the two per cent law was passed, still further protecting American wage earners and American civilization.

Although a national eight-hour law was enacted in 1868, it never was enforced and the first convention of the A. F. of L. in 1881 demanded that it be recognized by government officials. This agitation continued for years, but it was not until 1892 that Congress amended the law providing for a shorter workday for all mechanical labor on public work, whether employed by the government or by contractors. Immediately efforts were made to nullify the law, and it was not until 1906 that an executive order directed the enforcement of the law and prosecution of its violators.

The manner in which members of Congress, both in the Senate and in the House, received requests from labor for remedial legislation became so pronounced that the 1905 convention of the A. F. of L. urged all organizations to oppose the nomination and election of candidates for congressional and legislative honors who had shown themselves to be unfriendly to the interest and principles of organized labor, and to assist to the extent of their ability in the nomination and election of candidates known to be friendly to labor legislation.

Conditions had become so unbearable that President Gompers, by authority of the E.C., called a meeting of the presidents of all international unions to meet with the E.C. at Washington in 1905 to consult and devise ways and means by which the position of labor in regard to our rights and interests might be discussed and formulated. That conference was attended by 117 presidents or representatives of presidents of the international trade unions of our country, together with the Executive Council.

The conference adopted what came to be known as Labor's Bill of Grievances. All present at the conference presented the Bill of Grievances to the President, the President pro tem of the Senate, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, on March 21, 1906. The Bill of Grievances outlined labor's grievances and contained an arraignment of those who refused to legislate in favor of labor and the people or who confined their efforts to the wishes of the special interests. It concluded:

As labor's representatives we ask you to redress these grievances, for it is in your power so to do. Labor now appeals to you, and we trust that it may not be in vain. But if perchance you may not heed us, we shall appeal to the conscience and the support of our fellow citizens.

After that meeting a plan of campaign was formulated and the following procedure was adopted:

We will stand by our friends and administer a stinging rebuke to men or parties who are either indifferent, negligent or hostile.

Later, the policy was approved of having representatives of the A. F. of L. appear before the Platform Committees of the major political parties for the purpose of pressing upon them the necessity of including in their statement of political intentions declarations for legislation helpful to labor and essential to the best interests of all the people.

Following the defining of these policies, organized labor ventured into an aggressive campaign to elect such men to public office in the executive and legislative branches of government irrespective of political party and as by their records and attitudes manifested themselves to be favorably inclined to the demands made by labor in the interest of the workers and of all the people.

The congressional elections in 1910 resulted in a change of the political complexion of the House of Representatives, and organized labor was given a large measure of credit for that important change. It was realized that the non-partisan political policy of the A. F. of L. was inherently sound, practical and potent for even greater influence and power in our political life.

As the years passed on, greater advantages were secured through our non-partisan political policy. Those in control of the major political parties began to realize that labor was not seeking mere political preferment, but was concerned solely with securing legislation helpful to the economic advancement of the wage earners and the social advancement of all our people.

This high ideal in the political endeavors of our people met with ever increasing favorable response in the election to Congress of members of the major political parties who more fully and truly represented the hopes and aspirations of the wage earners and of all our people.

By 1917 practically every demand set out in the petition to Congress in the Bill of Grievances submitted in 1906 had been enacted into law. The one exception was the proposed statute to enable states to protect themselves from the competition of the products of convict labor of other states.

Since the Bill of Grievances was submitted lack of progress in securing state legislation clearly demonstrated that national legislation was indispensable if the child life of our nation is to be made secure. Since 1881 we have sought the passage of laws in the several states forbidding the employment of children in industry. In 1914 we caused to be introduced into Congress a bill prohibiting interstate transportation of products in the production of which the labor of children under certain ages was employed. In 1916 this bill was enacted into law, only to be declared unconstitutional by the United States Supreme Court in 1918. We then caused to be introduced a bill putting an excise tax of ten per cent on products coming into interstate commerce into which entered the labor of children under a certain age. This measure became a law and was also declared unconstitutional by the U.S. Supreme Court in 1922. Thereafter we caused to be introduced into Congress a constitutional enabling act authorizing Congress to prohibit the exploitation of child life. This enabling act was approved by Congress in June of this year and must now receive the approval of three-fourths of the State legislatures to become effective as part of the constitution.

In the past month the U.S. Supreme Court evidently was compelled to recognize the constitutional power and right of the legislative branch of government to modify, restrict, regulate or control the judiciary power of the government. Ever since the courts invaded the industrial life of our people by the issuance of prohibitory mandates directed against trade unions and their normal and rightful activities, we have protested against this violation of the constitutional guarantee of workers to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. Beginning with 1898 we have endeavored to secure legislation restricting the issuance of injunctions in labor disputes. After years of struggle, we finally secured the Clayton Law in 1914, only to find the U.S. Supreme Court soon thereafter emasculating the effective remedies contained in that law. This recent decision of the Supreme Court goes far to restore to the Clayton Act effectiveness of which it had been robbed. The constitutional power of Congress to regulate judicial procedure was confirmed in the decision of the U.S. Supreme Court which sustained the constitutionality of that provision in the Clayton Law which secured to everyone charged with indirect contempt a trial by jury and which deprives the courts of power heretofore considered beyond the reach of the legislative branch of government. To that extent the Clayton law has been maintained.

While labor's attention was directed primarily toward the winning of the great World War the reactionary financial and political parties concentrated every conceivable effort toward the election of a Congress that would be subservient to their interests and opposed to the people's interest after the war had ended. In this they were successful. From March 5, 1919, to March 4, 1923, two of the most reactionary Congresses of the U.S. came into power. All legislation proposed in these Congresses was so inimical to the best interests of labor and the people that in 1922 a radical change was effected in the personnel of both the House and Senate. Through our non-partisan political campaign there were defeated for the Senate eleven men to whom the word "labor" itself was abhorrent and there were elected 23 Senators who expressed themselves publicly as favoring legislation proposed by labor in the interest of the workers and of the whole people. There were likewise elected 170 members to the House of Representatives who had received the support and encouragement of labor's non-partisan political campaign and whose election was generally conceded to have been due to labor's opposition to their opponents in the campaign.

The 1922 Congressional elections produced one of the greatest triumphs of the non-partisan political policy of our Federation. In the first session of the present Congress not one measure inimical to the interests of the workers and the people was enacted into law. Approximately a dozen legislative proposals helpful to labor and the people were enacted into law. Some of these were enacted even over the veto of the President, demonstrating that members of Congress were responsive to the idealism of the non-partisan political policies of the A. F. of L.

When the 1924 national elections approached, the A. F. of L., by direction of previous conventions, followed its traditional non-partisan political campaign procedure by sending representatives to the conventions of the major political parties, presenting to them in identical form such legislative and constitutional proposals as the E.C. of the A. F. of L. considered of immediate and paramount importance to the wage earners and to the people of the United States. The statements presented to the major parties are as follows:

To the Chairman and Members of the Platform and Resolutions Committees of the 1924 Republican and Democratic National Conventions:

Out of our experience as workers and citizens of this republic American labor has reached carefully considered conclusions upon proposals that should be embodied in our national policies. As your political party is to make an appeal to the minds and consciences of the voters for support of a national program to be formulated in your party platform, as representatives of America's workers we submit for your most earnest consideration proposals that labor deems essential to continue national progress and maintenance of a genuine patriotism that comes from confidence in guiding political ideals as well as wisdom and integrity of administration.

With fully justified reasons our voters will scrutinize most critically the declarations and decisions of party conventions held this year. There is imperative need for revival of a feeling of high responsibility for maintaining political activity on a plane compatible with those ideals for which we as a republic stand. The following proposals constitute the legislative program which labor urges as imperative and eminently constructive, and insists should be included in your platform:

To promote highest material progress which is the basis for national effectiveness as well as an agency for national service, we urge that industry and commerce be freed from legislative prohibitions that restrict development in conformity to economic requirements. To this end we propose the repeal of anti-trust legislation and the enactment of legislation that will provide regulation in public interest and legalize economic organization as well as the constructive activities of trade associations.

It is unescapable that an integral part of legislation establishing this economic policy is full recognition of the right of workers to assist themselves in unions for their protection and advancement both as workers and citizens and collectively to carry on the legitimate functions of trade unions. Perversion of the injunctive process to apply to personal relations in industrial disputes must be prohibited and equity procedure returned to its beneficent service in protection of property.

It is essential for the conservation of national virility that child life be protected. We therefore urge the ratification by the states of the joint resolution passed by the Congress, to amend the Constitution empowering Congress to enact such legislation as will safeguard the future child life of our Republic.

Because the labor clauses of the Transportation Act of 1920 have proved ineffective, we ask their repeal and the enactment of legislation that will afford opportunity for the voluntary organizations of management and employees to deal with problems of industrial relations.

We demand the enactment of legislation providing that products of convict labor shipped from one state into another shall be subject to the laws of the latter state exactly as though they had been produced therein.

In order to mitigate unemployment attending business depressions, we urge the enactment of legislation authorizing the construction and repair of public works be initiated in periods of acute unemployment.

In appreciation we urge adequate provisions for the full rehabilitation of all injured in the service during the World War.

We urge proper recognition of the work of those in the civilian service of the government with adequate compensation based upon equitable classification.

We favor the enactment of more comprehensive compensation laws to provide for all workers not covered by state compensation acts. We demand more liberal provisions for those incapacitated by industrial accidents or occupational diseases.

We maintain that the Volstead Act is contrary to the desire of the majority of our citizens as well as the spirit of the 18th Amendment, and we demand that it be modified to permit the manufacture and sale of beer containing not more than 2.75 per cent alcohol.

We declare for the maintenance of freedom of speech, press, assemblage and association. We oppose any regulation to restrict these fundamental rights, believing that individuals and groups should be responsible for their acts and utterances.

We oppose conscription except as a military measure for defensive war and oppose all proposals to initiate compulsory labor under whatever guise.

In order to maintain representative government based upon the will of the people, we advocate a constitutional amendment enabling Congress to re-enact by two-thirds vote any measure declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Labor favors graduated income and inheritance taxes and opposes the sales tax as well as all other attempts to place excessive burdens on those least able to pay.

We demand that our nation identify itself with international agencies and conferences to promote world peace. We urge membership in the League of Nations and participation in the world court.

These proposals were signed by all members of the E.C.

The Republican Platform Committee granted only five minutes each to two members who were continually interrupted. This committee reported to the 1924 A. F. of L. Convention as follows:

"The Republican convention gave to Labor no better treatment than was accorded by its Platform Committee, because in the platform adopted by that convention, the hopes, ideals and demands of the progressive-minded people of the nation in general, and of Labor in particular, were almost totally ignored.

The Non-Partisan Political Campaign Committee of the A. F. of L. also appeared before the Platform Committee of the National Democratic Convention in New York City. The secretary submitted the measures which Labor deemed necessary to safeguard the interests and welfare of the workers, and the president of the A. F. of L., although suffering from a severe illness, made the argument for the ideals and demands of Labor. A courteous hearing was extended to him, and the committee was given all the time it desired for the presentation of the cause of Labor. While all the representatives of Labor were received by the Platform Committee, the Democratic National Convention, like the Republican National Convention, ignored the hopes and ideals and demands of Labor.

During the closing session of the Democratic National Convention, there was assembled in Cleveland, a group of organizations interested in promoting a movement for the furtherance of progressive political action in our national affairs. This conference resulted in the selection of a presidential candidate and the adoption of declarations of political intentions formulated in a forward-looking platform. The Non-Partisan Political Campaign Committee of the A. F. of L. did not appear at this conference meeting, or appear before any of its committees or participate in its deliberations. Subsequent to the close of this conference and the adjournment of the Democratic convention in New York City, and before the selection of a vice-presidential candidate by this progressive group, the Non-Partisan Political Campaign Committee of the A. F. of L. did present to the committee having in charge the selection of a vice-presidential candidate the same demands as were presented to the major political parties.

Subsequently our Non-Partisan Political Campaign Committee reviewed the platforms of the major political parties and of the Cleveland progressive group. It likewise analyzed the records and attitudes of all presidential and vice-presidential candidates. A most careful analysis was made, and the findings were presented to the E.C. of the A. F. of L.

The E.C. at a meeting held in Atlantic City, August 2, considered this report of the Non-Partisan Political Campaign Committee, reviewed the entire political situation and in full accord with the expressed procedure of the national non-partisan political policy of the A. F. of L. as directed by previous conventions, adopted the following declaration as Labor's position in the 1924 national presidential campaign:

"The Executive Committee of the A. F. of L. National Non-Partisan Campaign Committee presented Labor's proposals to the Republican convention.

The Republican convention gave Labor's representatives a brief and curt hearing. The Republican platform ignores entirely the injunction issue. It fails to deal with Labor's right to organize or the right of the workers even in self-defense collectively to cease work. That platform sustains the Railroad Labor Board, with all that it means in the direction of governmental coercion of wage earners. It fails to recommend the ratification by the states of the child labor constitutional amendment.

"The Republican convention nominated candidates unacceptable to Labor.

"The candidate for vice-president is one of the most outspoken enemies of Labor and is the founder of an organization dedicated to the task of writing into all political platform planks calling for the anti-union shop—an organization which also encouraged and supported the Daugherty injunction against the railroad shopmen.

"Labor's representatives submitted to the Democratic convention identical proposals to those submitted to the Republican convention. At this convention an extended hearing was granted. The Democratic platform pledges that party to legislation to regulate hours and conditions of all Labor, a proposal against which the A. F. of L. has struggled throughout its whole history. It is silent as to the injunction. It does not meet the Railroad Labor Board issue. On that point it is so equivocal that the enemies of Labor may well feel that their desires will be met. It, too, fails to recommend the ratification by the states of the child labor constitutional amendment.

"The Democratic convention nominated candidates unacceptable to Labor.

"As to the candidates and platforms, both the Republican and the Democratic national party conventions flaunted the desires of Labor, the Republican convention in an arrogant manner; the Democratic convention by that evasiveness which is the customary mark of insincerity.

"There remains the candidacy of Robert M. LaFollette and Burton K. Wheeler, the first an independent Republican; the second an Independent Democrat, running as such.

"These candidates have proffered a platform in which the economic issues of the day are met in a manner more nearly conforming to Labor's proposals than any other platform.

"This platform pledges a remedy for the injunction evil.

"It pledges the right to organize and collectively to cease work.

"It pledges protection of the rights of free speech, free press and free assemblage.

"It pledges abolishment of the Railroad Labor Board.

"It pledges a measure to annul the power of the Supreme Court to declare laws permanently unconstitutional.

"It declares for direct election of President and Vice-President and election of federal judges.

"It recommends prompt ratification by the states of the child labor constitutional amendment.

"It pledges subsequent federal legislation to protect child life.

"On international issues this platform does not conform to Labor's proposals but it does more than any other political platform to meet Labor's views in relation to domestic economic issues.

"We cannot do other than point out this fact, together with the further and perhaps more important fact that the candidates, Mr. LaFollette and Mr. Wheeler have, throughout their whole political careers, stood steadfast in defense of the rights and interests of the wage earners and the farmers.

"We cannot fail to observe that both Republican and Democratic parties, through manipulated control, are in a condition of moral bankruptcy which constitutes a menace and a peril to our country and its institutions. Machine-politicians have brought upon our country moral obliquity and unashamed betrayal. We are judging on the basis of the condition which exists and this judgment will be reversed only when the conditions upon which it is based are changed.

"Service to the people is a noble cause which demands consecration and the American Labor movement demands that there be that consecration in candidates to whom it gives support.

"Our course is clear. In pointing to the platform and records of the independent candidates, we do so with the confidence that no other course can be pursued if we are to remain true to our convictions and our traditions. Those who are hostile to Labor and to the people generally and who devoted their energies to the service of reaction and special interests, must be opposed.

"We call upon the wage earners and the great masses of the people everywhere who stand for freedom, justice, democracy, and human progress, to rally in this campaign, to the end that the representatives of reaction and special interests may be defeated and the faithful friends and servants of the masses elected.

"Cooperation hereby urged is not a pledge of identification with an independent party movement or a third party, nor can it be construed as support for such a party group or movement, except as such action accords with our non-partisan political policy.

We do not accept government as the solution of the problems of life. Major problems of life and Labor must be dealt with by voluntary groups and organizations of which trade unions are an essential and integral part. Neither can this cooperation imply our support, acceptance or endorsement of policies or principles advocated by any minority groups or organizations that may see fit to support the candidacies of Senator LaFollette and Senator Wheeler.

"In the campaign to elect men to Congress, regardless of their political group or party affiliation and deserving of Labor's support, there must be unity of purpose and method, therefore leadership must lie with the only organization having the right to speak for the entire labor movement. In this the A. F. of L. yields to none, but will maintain steadfast its leadership, guidance and direction.

"In the selection and election of men to public office within the several states, leadership must lie with our state federations of labor and in city or county elections this right must rest with central labor bodies.

"Organized labor owes allegiance to no political party or group. It is partisan to principles—the principles of freedom, of justice of democracy.

"It is the duty of trade unionists, their friends and sympathizers, and all lovers of freedom, justice and democratic ideals and institutions to unite in defeating those seeking public office who are indifferent or hostile to the people's rights and interests. It is the duty of all to support such candidates to public office who have been fair, just and outspoken in behalf of the welfare of the common people.

"We shall analyze the record and attitude of every aspirant to public office and shall give our findings the widest possible publicity. Labor's enemies and friends must be clearly known and be definitely indicated.

"In calling upon all affiliated and recognized national and international and brotherhood organizations, state federations of labor, central labor bodies, local unions, Labor's friends and sympathizers, to give united, unrestricted, loyal and active support to the non-partisan campaign now set in motion, we emphasize the imperative need of an intensive educational campaign to enable all to act with discrimination and wisdom in this election, and to stand faithfully by our friends and elect them and to oppose our enemies and to defeat them."

"This declaration was signed by the members of the Non-Partisan Political Campaign Committee.

It will be noted that by this action the A. F. of L. did not endorse what has been miscalled a third party movement. It expressed preferment for the election of Senators LaFollette and Wheeler, the independent candidates, and their platform, as more nearly representing the hopes and demands of Labor.

The E.C. also increased the membership of the Executive Committee of the National Non-Partisan Political Campaign Committee. In the campaign that followed the A. F. of L. exerted every influence of which it was capable to promote the candidacy and further the election of Candidates LaFollette and Wheeler to the offices of President and Vice-President.

From the opening of the 1924 political campaign until its close a studied effort has been made to belittle and stigmatize the Sixty-eighth Congress, when as a matter of fact it has been the most progressive and responsive we have had in recent decades.

The Non-Partisan Political Campaign Committee and the E.C. of the A. F. of L. took a leading position in the furtherance of the election of Congressional candidates who merited the support of organized labor by reason of their past favorable attitudes and records in public office. It was deemed of equal, if not of greater importance that the legislative branch of our national government should be expressive of the will of the people rather than represent the interests of a few. This effort of the non-partisan political campaign was confined in the main to candidates within the major political parties. The importance of electing a forward looking Congress was called to the attention of Labor and for this purpose the following declaration was issued by our National Non-Political Campaign Committee:

America needs a Congress for the people.

There is in your district a candidate who deserves your active support irrespective of party affiliation. There is a candidate who is for the people and against the great reactionary interests.

Take off your coat for that candidate.

See that reaction is defeated.

In 1922 the people of the U.S. followed the lead of Labor and elected 170 such members of the House of Representatives. Because of that great achievement the present Congress has enacted no law hostile to the people's interests.

This Congress stopped the flood of immigration. It blocked the sales tax gouge. It blocked the Mellon burdensome tax plan. It exposed the Veterans' Bureau graft. It forced Daugherty out. It drove Fall into retirement. It gave the people the facts about the oil scandals.

That's what a forward-looking Congress means to Labor and the people generally.

In this election it is possible to elect enough such men so that the interests of the people will dominate the next Congress. The people can easily enough elect 250 faithful members of Congress who will stand true in defense of freedom and the rights of the people. Such a majority would bring to America a real era of progress and achievement. Such an era would drive the political wolves out of public life. It would change the whole government into a machine for the service of the people.

The reactionary interests are doing everything they can to belittle Congress. They do not like Congress—and they say they do not like it—because Congress is directly elected by the people. And since the direct election of Senators and the direct primaries Congress has come more and more to be truly representative of the people. General Dawes and other reactionaries have openly attacked the progressive group in Congress which passed so many progressive measures in the last session.

The reactionaries like institutions over which the people have no control. They would like it if the Supreme Court could be given still more power and if the President's power also could be increased—both at the expense of the power of Congress. Reaction works wherever it can, through those farthest from popular control.

Congress is to be subservient to the Chief Executive. It is to be snatched out of the Constitution by political legerdemain so that there will be only two effective branches of government—the Executive and judicial.

Therefore the edict has gone forth from reactionary headquarters that all members of the Senate and House of the U.S. Congress elected in November by either of the big parties must be "dependable"—that is, they must pledge themselves to do the bidding of the Chief Executive, whoever he may be, no matter how offensive such a course would be to the electorate or injurious to our republic.

If the present Chief Executive had had a "dependable" Congress there would have been no Teapot Dome investigation.

There would have been no adjusted compensation for our boys who offered the supreme sacrifice in the great war if we had had a "dependable" Congress.

The American people should be awakened to the plot against the tried and true members of the present Congress. It is time the people of our great nation—the greatest on earth—should cast aside apathy and understand before election a "dependable" Congress is a Congress of rubber stamps.

The constitution provides for three branches of government—the Legislative, Executive, and Judicial. Should the political intriguers succeed in fooling the people so that they will vote for members of Congress who will blindly follow the dictates of the Chief Executive, then there will be only two effective branches of government—the Executive and Judicial.

We therefore urge upon all who believe that the Representatives and Senators in Congress should represent the will of the people, to vote for such candidates, irrespective of party affiliations.

Work for such candidates. Organize for them.

See that every possible vote is cast for them. No vote counts until it is cast and tabulated.

Thirty-three members of the U.S. Senate sought renomination this year.

Six of the most objectionable of the reactionaries were defeated in primaries or conventions or retired.

Every Senator supported by the workers in the primaries has been renominated. Those who had contests won by substantial majorities.

Labor is supporting progressive Democrats and progressive Republicans for the Senate in an absolutely non-partisan manner.

In nearly every state there is a progressive candidate for the Senate. Do your part and see that he is elected!

Before the last congressional election in November, 1922, there were not more than 50 pro-Labor and forward-looking Congressmen. Labor and progressive Republicans and Democrats threw themselves into the primary and election campaigns and elected 170 members of the nation's House of Representatives. These are distributed among the various parties as follows:

Democrats, 105; Republicans, 63; Farmer-Labor, 1; Independent, 1.

An increase of 120 pro-labor Congressmen in one election!

The re-election of those 120 and the election of 80 more Congressmen representing the people will bring the people a safe working majority of 250 out of a total of 435 members.

The election of 50 such Congressmen (less than half the increase of the last election) would give the people a bare majority.

Not one measure opposed by Labor was enacted into law by the present Congress.

Among the most reactionary of these defeated proposals were the schemes of Secretary Mellon and President Coolidge and the consolidated interests to untax the rich and tax the poor.

Among other vicious proposals were the sales tax, efforts to hush scandals in government departments that have been partially uncovered, the veto of the postal employees' wage bill and the veto of the soldiers' adjusted compensation.

Eleven measures that were approved by the A. F. of L. and in favor of which representatives of the A. F. of L. appeared, were passed by both houses and enacted into law.

Some measures favored by Labor secured such a large vote in the last Congress that they will be passed in the next Congress if the November election brings even a slight increase in the number of pro-Labor and forward-looking Congressmen.

The bill to abolish the Railway Labor Board and to reestablish joint negotiations and voluntary arbitration of railway labor disputes was deferred by a filibuster conducted by the leaders of the present administration who did not dare let it come to a vote. A test vote showed 188 favoring the bill and 160 against the bill.

The farmers' relief bill to establish a governmental corporation to aid in export of grain was similarly deferred.

Anti-injunction legislation will likewise receive attention and the right of wage earners to collective bargaining and collectively to cease work must also be set out clearly and in unmistakable terms.

All of these laws and other measures desired by the people can be passed with the election of 50 additional pro-Labor and progressive candidates.

Elect them!

Stand faithfully by our friends and elect them, oppose our enemies and defeat them whether they be candidates for President, for Vice President, for Congress or other offices; whether Executive, Legislative, or Judicial.

In the furtherance of this campaign to elect a forward-looking Congress along non-partisan political lines, American organized labor, including the railroad brotherhoods, worked as a unit. At no time have the forces of organized labor been so completely united in a national congressional political campaign. The results obtained may be approximated as follows:

The number of Congressmen elected with Labor's endorsement totals 170, the same as the number of Congressmen elected with Labor's endorsement in 1922. Of these 125 are Democrats, 40 are Republicans, three are Farmer-Laborites and one is an Independent. The results in the Senate have not been definitely ascertained at this moment because of the uncertainty as to the results in some states and pending replacements in other states.

It is evident, however, that Labor's non-partisan political campaign, insofar as congressional elections are concerned, in spite of exceptional difficulties of presidential year, thoroughly justify the assertion that Labor achieved a signal success in the furtherance of the interests of the wage earners and of the people of the country generally. The non-partisan political influence thus maintained in the popular branches of government of the United States assures the people that whatever reactionary proposals may at any time emanate from the executive branch of government shall not find a ready response and confirmation in the legislative branch of government. Thereby the interests of the people in general and of Labor in particular are largely safeguarded, and the opportunity is provided for the realization of many of the hopes and aspirations for progressive legislation for the masses of the people.

Reviewing and summarizing the experiences had in the recent presidential and congressional campaign and the non-partisan procedure followed, there have come to our attention weaknesses that must be eliminated and difficulties that must be overcome, if we are to make our government more responsive to the will and the needs of the great masses of our people and not submissive to the interests of property alone.

This campaign has demonstrated that under the laws in our several states, the standing of political groups or political parties is so narrowly circumscribed as to make impossible a free expression of the political intentions of those not in complete accord with the existing major political parties. This is a difficulty that must be overcome and legislation is needed so that independent political movements may function effectively whenever the need for same may arise.

Another object that must be achieved if we are to have a free expression of the political intentions and desires of the people is the elimination of the cumbersome and archaic ballot definitely designed to prevent intelligent choice of candidates by the electorate and to make independent voting difficult. Legislation to remove this difficulty is imperative.

While the non-partisan political policy of the A. F. of L. has resulted in remarkable achievements in protecting and promoting the interests of the wage earners and of our citizenry, there is room for improvement and extension of our efforts. The effort of organized labor manifested in a non-partisan manner should find expression in the primaries of all political parties or movements more effectively than has heretofore been the case.

It is also essential that the non-partisan political machinery of the A. F. of L. must be constantly active in the support of men to public offices who are truly responsive to the interests of our people and to Labor in particular as well as to be constantly on guard that those having received Labor's support will be true to the promises made. The attainment of this object demands that the non-partisan political campaign committees created during the recent national presidential and congressional campaign be maintained on a permanent basis, instructed to carry on their work continuously. It is, therefore, directed that our National Non-Partisan Political Campaign Committee be charged with the duty of carrying out this suggested procedure.

With the extension of the right of suffrage to the women of the U.S. a new factor has entered our political life which cannot and should not be ignored, but which should be included in our non-partisan political campaign procedure. We need but mention the right of suffrage now granted to the wives and women members of the families of trade unionists to indicate the importance of the extension of our non-partisan campaign activities among women in general.

Then, too, there are other progressive minded groups composed of persons who cannot by reason of their occupation or station in life be affiliated directly to the trade union movement, but who are sympathetic and responsive to the needs of the American wage earners and to our non-partisan political campaign policy. To embrace these helpful influences in Labor's political struggle, it is directed that our Non-Partisan Political Campaign Committee, with the co-operation and approval of the E.C., devise a plan and procedure that will accomplish that end.

This extension of our non-partisan political procedure will not only attract to ourselves the sympathetic support of all progressively minded groups and influences, but will enable the wage earners of our land to direct the political tendencies and activities of our nation, our states and municipalities, without the necessity of concerning ourselves with the coming or going or realignment of any political party or group.

In the pursuit of an honorable course to protect and promote the rights and interests of the great masses of our people, wage earners included, we have been and are less concerned with partisanship than the achievements of practical results. We are partisan to principles—not to a political party. The American labor movement, if it is to be true to its mission to defend, advocate, promote and protect the rights, interests and welfare of America's wage earners and American people, must be as free from political party domination now as at any time in the history of our movement.

(P. 205) The broadcasting of Labor's political program has increased the prestige of our leadership and demonstrated the integrity of the spokesmen of the A. F. of L., with the result that increased respect is held for the political power of the organized workers.

This wholesome result was made possible by the courageous and outspoken utterances of the A. F. of L. National Non-Partisan Political Campaign Committee, in answering the propaganda of our adroit political foes.

The A. F. of L. in Forty-fourth Annual Convention assembled, commends the officers, editors and the staff engaged in the vital work of disseminating information about our movement, for their brilliant and devoted service at a most critical period, urges all unions to give this important function of the E.C. the fullest financial and moral support, and pledge ourselves to expand these activities, with the knowledge that the trade union movement will be richly rewarded, as the result of the better understanding of Labor's aspirations that will result from this essentially educational and public service.

(P. 270) In its supplemental report to this convention, the E.C. briefly recites the causes that have impelled and compelled the A. F. of L. to venture into the political sphere of our national, state and municipal governments. It sets forth clearly the origin and development of Labor's non-partisan political policy and impressively points out the progress made and achievements realized.

In words of dispassion, without bias or prejudice, free from fault finding or criticism, the E.C. has presented the attitude and activities of the American Federation of Labor and its affiliated organizations in recent presidential and congressional political campaigns.

It likewise presents clearly and supported by incontrovertible evidence that Labor's non-partisan political campaign was of tremendous effect upon our body politic and that through its procedure forces have been set in motion that will bring into being consequences of momentous importance to the better and fuller life of all our people.

The convention gives full approval and endorsement of the attitude and activities manifested and engaged in on the recent presidential and congressional political campaigns. We rejoice in the results achieved in the congressional elections and are inspired by the future opportunities presented to America's wage earners.

Labor having succeeded in elections where Congress and Congress alone was the issue, the effort was made in this recent election to reconquer Congress under the guise of a presidential election declared to be of paramount issue. Our non-partisan political policy withstood the test and issued forth triumphant and with its forces intact. The opponents having played their strongest card and having failed, the future belongs to Labor and progress.

Upon the several recommendations set forth in the E.C.'s report having for their purpose the enlargement of Labor's non-partisan political policy and procedure, the convention finds occasion only for words of commendation and approval, for embraced in these recommendations there is contained a full understanding and intelligent vision of Labor's needs and requirements.

The world-wide change taking place is not merely political. It does not merely promise to establish governments of, for and by the people. It is also economic and social. In our land it promises to give Labor, the farmers and the other economic groups composing the masses, more influence in our political system and an improved position in our social structure. The object of the non-partisan policy is to make our government more responsive to the will and the needs of the great masses of our people and not submissive to the interests of property alone.

Our non-partisan political policy does not imply that we shall ignore the existence or attitudes of political parties. It does intend that Labor proposes to use political parties and be used by none. Appreciative of present tendencies and future developments the E.C. accurately visions the future in practical terms when it says we need not concern ourselves so much with the coming or going of political parties, their realignment or the development of new and independent political parties or groups. No one will deny the inevitable change of political parties or groupings made imperative by the ever progressive enlightenment of the masses and changes in the social, economic and industrial order of a people. There is noticeable at present throughout the world the manifestations of a change of political groupings representing on the one hand the desire to conserve the domination of material forces and wealth, property and property rights—and on the other, the hope and ambition to substitute the human aspirations and personal well-being of all our people as the controlling influence in our governmental affairs.

No one factor has been more helpful in the development of this tendency than the trade union movement. No procedure has done more to increase the wage earners' power and influence in this changing order than Labor's non-partisan political policy. No other method of political expression has developed such a clear and definite moral leadership or has focussed such helpful consideration of and attention to the principles of human welfare.

Our non-partisan political policy and procedure have brought into being indisputable evidences of effectiveness and have afforded Labor a real and full opportunity of molding national, state and municipal decisions.

(P. 269) Two resolutions favoring a Labor Party were rejected.

(1925, p. 60) When the E.C. made its supplementary report to the El Paso Convention it was in a position to give statistics as to the number of candidates for the United States Senate who had been supported and the number elected in 1924. Twenty-one candidates (7 Republicans and 14 Democrats) were supported and 15 of them were elected (7 Republicans and 8 Democrats).

State federations of labor, city central bodies, local unions and general and volunteer organizers should make every preparation for the election in November, 1926, of a new Congress. Thirty-three members of the Senate and 435 members of the House of Representatives are to be elected. The non-partisan political campaigns in the congressional elections in the last four years have been so effective that it is hoped as much if not more vigor will be injected into the coming congressional election.

The most effective work in choosing friends of Labor and the people and defeating foes of Labor and the people is in the primaries. Thirty-three states will hold primaries for the nomination of Senators and 48 states will nominate members of the House of Representatives in their respective districts.

From information received as early as in May of this year political fences already were being erected by aspirants for Senators and Representatives. The E.C. has kept in touch with the various labor officials of the several states and in other ways to learn whom were being favored and by what interests.

Immediately after this convention the E.C. intends to enter into the various campaigns for the purpose of supporting those who can be depended upon to be true to the people, for if they are true to the people they will be true to Labor. The records of all members of Congress will be sent to the various central bodies and local unions and such information given as will aid the wage earners in knowing for whom to vote.

As no president is to be elected, the election in 1926 is considered by many as an "off year." But Labor must not fail or lose interest in the nomination and election of candidates friendly to Labor. Nothing ever has been gained by putting off until tomorrow what can be done today. Therefore, it is hoped that the central bodies, local unions and the great rank and file will rally to the support of the campaign that will be outlined by this convention and by the E.C. for next year's political contest.

During the presidential campaign of 1924 Labor deviated somewhat from its former procedure in that it favored the exercise of every possible means for the purpose of making it easier for independent candidates to be placed on tickets in the various states.

The practice of the A. F. of L. has been to investigate the labor records of all candidates in the primaries and support irrespective of party those most favorable to Labor and the people. After nominations are made the same procedure is followed in the elections.

Another suggestion growing out of that campaign was that the E.C. should devise a plan to bring about the cooperation with the A. F. of L. of other progressively-minded groups composed of persons who were not by reason of their occupations or stations in life eligible to membership in the trade union movement.

In summing up the non-partisan political history of the year the El Paso Convention declared that for the A. F. of L. to be true to its mission, it must be as free from political party domination now as at any time in its history. This means that the A. F. of L. non-partisan political policy in the future will be along the usual definitely-outlined paths.

Legislative committees of the various central bodies and local unions will during the campaigns automatically become non-partisan political campaign committees.

In conducting all non-partisan political campaigns the A. F. of L. will maintain control within itself of the decisions to be made and the procedure to be followed. The E.C., however, believes that it should accept the support that is freely given of any group that has for its purpose the carrying out of the policy of the A. F. of L.

The recommendation of the El Paso Convention that the non-partisan political campaign activities should be extended to the women voters in general is most practical. This should be accomplished through the rank and file of the local unions and the working women in industry. Members of trade unions and their sympathizers should urge the women members of their families to vote both in the primaries and in the elections. They also should be urged to extend their solicitation to the women who sympathize with the efforts of Labor to elect candidates who will be true to the people.

It has been apparent for several years, and attention was called to it at the El Paso Convention, that it is found difficult in some states to carry out the non-partisan policy in voting. Some ballots have many names upon them and under different party designations. A believer in the non-partisan principle may desire to vote for candidates on several tickets. The desire is often defeated by the rules covering the marking of ballots, which in the various states are not uniform.

It is recommended that all state federations of labor and city central bodies make a study of the laws in their respective states covering the primaries and elections in order, if necessary, to secure legislation that will make them more responsive to the will of the people.

They are also urged to devise ways and means of educating the people as to the proper way of marking the sometime extensive ballots. After such investigation the officials of state federations of labor and central bodies are requested to communicate with the president of the A. F. of L. in order that he may if necessary give such advice as will be helpful in changing the laws to make it less difficult to mark ballots intelligently.

That the non-partisan political policy of the A. F. of L. has borne fruit is evidenced by the remarkable number of remedial laws that have been secured from Congress and the many laws inimical to Labor that have been defeated. Since 1906, 208 laws urged by Labor have been enacted and several hundred detrimental to Labor and the people have been defeated. During the last three Congresses 54 bills that would have been detrimental to the interest of the people including Labor were defeated.

It has been noticeable in the last few years that influential men in the dominant political parties are conducting a campaign to abolish primary elections. The object is to return to the old nominating system by which candidates were selected in conventions composed of delegates chosen by political bosses. These efforts have been defeated in several states, but the agitation will not be discontinued on that account. There is no doubt that the campaign for this purpose will be kept up for years, and it will demand the most careful watchfulness of voters to prevent such a revolutionary backward step.

State federations of labor and city central bodies are urged to enter most vigorous protest where any attempt is being made to abolish the primary elections. The primaries were established for the purpose of giving the people the right to say who shall be nominees for public office. The convention system, on the other hand, takes out of the hands of the people the selection of candidates and gives it to a few persons.

It is apropos at this time to remind the delegates to this convention and the officers and members of all national, international and local unions that the non-partisan political policy of the A. F. of L. has passed through the crucible of experience and has proved to be the best plan yet adopted for Labor to voice itself politically.

During the years since the non-partisan political policy has been followed by the A. F. of L. it has seen many independent or third party movements come and go. Generally, they existed only for one election. In a few cases, but very few, the leaders would endeavor to inject new life into their political organizations at the following election, but with little success.

The people generally are beginning to realize that hide-bound partyism does not benefit them. All too frequently they have learned that pledges in party platforms are not always respected, but have been used simply as a stepping stone to office. They have therefore reached the conclusion that the only method they can follow that will bring about the election of men who will be true to the people is through a non-partisan political policy. It is noticeable that in every election the votes for candidates who have been true to the people show increases over the previous years. In many congressional districts the farmers have joined with Labor in its non-partisan policy. We believe that as a result of its non-partisan political policy the launching of third party movements has been proved wasted effort and injurious to the desire to elect candidates with favorable records. The 1922 and 1924 political campaigns definitely determined this fact. Experience therefore has taught Labor that to be successful, politically it must continue in the future as in the past to follow its non-partisan political policy.

We are confident that if every member of organized labor interests himself or herself in carrying out that policy, a Congress will be elected next fall that will favor legislation so much needed by the people and desired by Labor.

Getting out the votes and having them cast for friendly candidates will be the duty of the rank and file and officials of all labor organizations and their sympathizers.

(P. 277) Immediately after this convention the A. F. of L. Non-Partisan Political Campaign Committee will begin preparations for next year's Congressional election. It cannot begin too soon.

The assault on our democratic institutions has not only continued unabated since last year's Presidential election but is has been intensified and extended. The E.C. refers to the nation-wide plot to weaken or abolish the primaries. All of the great reactionary newspapers and commercial organizations are enthusiastically and persistently at work in this campaign. It would carry the nation back a full quarter century to the narrow, corrupt and inefficient partisan politics that governed the country.

But the assault on the primaries is accompanied by another campaign, even more sinister and reactionary—the nation-wide and concerted effort to undermine and destroy the authority of Congress.

The sneering libels on the last Congress because of its progressivism have been replaced within the last year or two in a large part of the daily press by attacks against Congress generally, and against congressional government.

The demand that Congress adjourn, the so-called humorous jibes at Congress, are always in evidence when Congress is considering a measure for the masses rather than the classes.

This newest reactionary campaign, unparalleled in its truculence and impudence, means nothing less than an effort insidiously to overthrow the American form of government and to replace it by a supreme executive. It is an attempt to set up in this country a system differing only in degree from the government of Mussolini, for which our stand-patters cannot suppress their sympathy and admiration. With Congress subordinated there could be no democratic or representative government, only an autocracy, an oligarchy, a bureaucracy, or an unholy combination of these outworn forms of misgovernment.

Every decade and nearly every election has shown a more progressive Congress—a Congress more truly representative of the people and of labor. The Congress elected last year to meet this December was no exception.

In spite of the overshadowing importance of the Presidential campaign nearly half of the present Senate and House were elected with the support of labor and of Republican, Democratic and Independent Progressives, while scarcely a fourth were elected against the opposition of the popular forces.

In the election of 1924, the A. F. of L. followed its traditional non-partisan political campaign procedure. This policy is persistently and often intentionally misstated. While it endorses no parties, it uses all. It endorses neither the two major parties nor any third party. It does endorse candidates of the two major parties and occasionally of third parties, or candidates running independently. In the last election it endorsed 303 candidates of the House of Representatives, electing 186. Of those endorsed 280 were Republicans and Democrats and 23 were Independents or representatives of minor parties. And labor emphasized the Congressional rather than the Presidential election. These figures give an accurate picture of labor's non-partisan policy and there is no excuse for further misrepresentation.

The next step cannot be open to question. Further progress toward strengthening the popular forces in Congress and securing a firm and reliable majority favorable to labor and the people must come through a more energetic and effective national organization of the primary and election campaigns—re-enforcing the local campaigns and without any infringement of local autonomy. It will not be necessary to make any special effort in many congressional districts. The returns show that a large majority of those districts that have sent to Washington men friendly to the labor and popular cause in the last two campaigns, are safe for democracy. Other rock-ribbed conservative districts show no signs of getting early political wisdom. There remain less than a hundred close districts to be held or captured—not more than a few in any one state—a task entirely within the range of practicable possibility for the national and local organizations of labor and its progressive allies.

A thoroughly and permanently progressive Congress is almost within our grasp. The last Congress was increasingly friendly to labor with the aid of certain fluctuating middle elements. The Congress meeting in December promises to show a similar line-up. In the next fall election an increase of 15 per cent among Congressmen friendly to labor would for the first time give a responsive majority without the doubtful aid of neutral elements.

The brilliant results already achieved in the brief period of fifteen years since the non-partisan policy was made nation-wide prove that the prospects of early success are excellent. More energetic and effective organization, with special concentration on districts now definitely proven to be promising, must infallibly bring further victories.

This natural and inevitable development of the non-partisan campaign policy not only opens up a vista of hope and promise to American Labor and American democracy; it is imperative as a measure of defense against the deadly menace of the present assault on representative government.

For if the reactionary interests succeed in the assault now being made, not only will political democracy be reduced to impotence, but the economic position and the organization rights of labor and even the individual liberty and legal status of the wage earner and the citizen will be placed in jeopardy.

(1926, p. 71) Immediately after the close of the Atlantic City convention the E.C. began a survey of the political situation in the U.S. so far as it affected members of the U.S. Senate and House of Representatives. Letters were written to various states requesting information as to the political situation and the activities that could be expected to encourage the non-partisan political policy of the A. F. of L. The replies were most encouraging.

As a result of this circular inquiries were received from every state in the union as to the attitude of members of Congress on measures of interest to Labor. These inquiries numbered several hundreds. They came from not only officials of trade unions but from individual members of trade unions. Many members of Congress also requested copies of their labor records. As the primaries approached in the several states the legislative records were sent to the central bodies and local unions of members of Congress in the various districts. Where members of Congress had been unduly antagonistic to legislation favorable to Labor and the people the organized labor movements in the respective districts were notified. The most encouraging reports have come from many states. In those states where primaries have been held members of the United States Senate who have been antagonistic to Labor and the people were defeated through the influence of the labor movement. Candidates for the House of Representatives who have been friendly to Labor were in all cases successful.

The great issue now before the organized labor movement, as well as the unorganized and all those just-minded people who believe in justice is to get out the vote on election day. More than fifty per cent of those eligible to vote fail to register or cast a ballot on election days. A far less number vote in the primaries. The E.C. has urged every organization of labor, their officers and every member of the rank and file to make it their duty on election day not only to go to the polls and vote but urge and encourage others to vote. Not only should they vote themselves but they should encourage the female members of their families to vote. The A. F. of L. has repeatedly declared that if there is anything wrong in our government it can be changed by the ballot. This is true, but in order for such changes to be brought about it is necessary that those candidates who would be just in carrying out the duties of their offices shall be elected and those candidates who would cater to the interests that oppose Labor and the people shall be defeated.

Another important issue is the insidious campaign to destroy the direct primaries. It is charged that because in certain states millions of dollars were expended to corrupt the electorate a return should be made to the old "boss-controlled" convention system. This is the most monstrous fiction that can be imagined. Conventions are made up of delegates elected by the people. If the people are competent to elect delegates to a convention to nominate candidates for public office they certainly should be competent to elect those candidates direct. Of course it is admitted that the cost of controlling a few political "bosses" in a convention is much less than corrupting the entire electorate. Therefore, the people have to decide whether they will be controlled by political "bosses" or by themselves, even if they do make mistakes. This question should be discussed in every national and international convention of labor, in every state federation and city central body and in every local union. The people should be made acquainted with the despicable idea behind the destruction of the direct primaries. They must be made to understand that carrying this policy out to its logical conclusion would gradually bring about a return to the dictatorship of a few men in all political affairs. If it were necessary to abolish the old "boss-ruled" conventions and establish the direct primaries it is certainly just as necessary now to maintain the direct primaries. It must be remembered that what are known as political "bosses" never sleep, they are continually conniving to bring about a desired end. The people for one reason or another forget their political duties between elections and while they are asleep the political "bosses" through their propaganda agents manufacture sentiment in favor of objectionable candidates or principles that are a detriment to the people. The American labor movement will be untrue to itself unless it makes it one of its most important duties to keep alive the political spirit of the people. They must not be permitted to forget or forgive any unjust act of public men. If ballot boxes are "stuffed" or stolen, if election clerks miscount the ballots to the detriment of any candidate the laws provide a remedy. If there are not sufficient laws to prevent this corruption of the ballot new laws should be enacted. But under no circumstances should we return to the old system which permitted a few men to dictate who should be candidates for public office.

Before this convention adjourns the legislative records of members of Congress will have been sent to the labor organizations in their respective districts. This includes the candidates for Senators in those states where elections for the Senate are being held.

(P. 327) Labor opposes reactionary Democrats and reactionary Republicans without distinction and rightly so. It shows no favoritism in its loyal and effective support of progressive forward-looking candidates for public office. In every state and in almost every Congressional district labor has decided upon its candidates for the ensuing election. Partisan political considerations have had nothing to do with that decision.

The E.C. calls attention to the fact that "The people, for one reason or another, forget their political duties between elections and while they are asleep the political 'bosses,' through their propaganda agents, manufacture sentiment in favor of objectionable candidates or principles that are a detriment to the people. The American labor movement will be untrue to itself unless it makes it one of its most important duties to keep alive the political spirit of the people."

Five years ago the Non-Partisan Political Campaign Committee was made permanent for this very purpose. It has lived up to its instructions so far as is allowed by the resources at its disposal and the time its members were able to give to these political activities.

The people must not be permitted to forget or forgive any unjust act of public men. In this respect labor has been able to do its full duty. But the selection of good and reliable men in the place of those thrown on the scrap heap is a more difficult task requiring more time, effort and means—especially for the cooperation with other popular groups, such as the organized farmers, and the popularization of constructive measures and policies supported in common by progressive elements.

The necessity of such cooperation is fully recognized in the statement of the National Non-Partisan Political Campaign Committee, and especially in relation to the farmers. The E.C. points out that labor urged Congress to pass the farmers' program and is willing at any and all times to aid the farmers seeking legislation that will advance their economic interest. It refers to the efforts of the industrial and financial interests to prejudice the farmers against labor and warns them that they must defeat the attempt to enroll them on that side.

Labor's campaign, is to defeat candidates controlled by reactionary industrial and financial interests and to elect forward-looking candidates. In this there must be no shirking or slacking.

Organization and adherence to the principles and policies of American organized labor's non-partisan political campaign is essential if American labor's organized economic, industrial and social ideals and program are to be fully realized. Active participation of all wage earners in this non-partisan undertaking in the political side of our nation and its several states is imperative if our industrial relations are to be freed from state domination and from autocratic industrial and financial control. In this field of endeavor the workers must rally as in all other fields of activity.

(1927, pp. 89, 261) In November, 1928, a President and Vice-President of the United States, one-third of the members of the United States Senate and 435 members of the House of Representatives will be elected. Besides, many governors and other public officials will be elected in the several states. The wage earners, as well as all other forward-looking citizens, have a duty to perform the result of which will determine whether our country is to continue still further toward reaction or advance along progressive lines.

While the A. F. of L. may regard one or more candidates for the presidency as acceptable it does not advocate the nomination of any particular person. Its first concern is in the adoption of platforms that will pledge the parties to enact legislation that will be of benefit to Labor and the people. It is then the duty of the wage earners and their friends to support the candidate on the most acceptable platform.

The experiences of 1924 should be a warning to both parties. Neither platform that year appealed to Labor. Representatives of the A. F. of L. appeared before the Resolutions Committees of both conventions and urged that certain declarations be made in their platforms. Both parties ignored the plea of labor. The platform of neither party was acceptable to those who were looking forward as was evidenced by the fact that nearly 5,000,000 protest votes were cast for a third candidate.

As in the past the E.C. will prepare a list of principles which will be submitted to both political party conventions and an earnest appeal made that they be approved. We repeat what we have said many times heretofore, that Labor never asks for any special privileges but advances economic principles that will be of benefit to all the people except those who favor reaction.

It is believed that the people of the nation are alarmed at the growing influence of reactionaries and will aggressively support the political party which adopts a platform that honestly reflects the progressive ideas of the great majority.

Not only should every effort be made to have the national political parties adopt progressive platforms but in every state the labor movements should make the same appeal to the state political party conventions.

Early in 1928 every local union, city central body and state federation of labor should arrange that their respective legislative committees become non-partisan political campaign committees which will prepare for a most intensive agitation for the election of outstanding candidates who, by their records, have shown they will be true to the people. The non-partisan committees of local unions should work in conjunction with the non-partisan campaign committees of the central bodies for the election of congressmen and other officials in their respective districts and with the state federations of labor for the election of state officers and U.S. Senators. All of these organizations and their committees should join with the A. F. of L. in urging the national political parties to adopt progressive platforms and then aid in supporting the party whose declarations are the most progressive. They should impress upon delegates elected to the city, county, state and national political conventions that in order to secure the support of working men and women they must demand that the platforms adopted shall contain planks which will be approved by Labor. These delegates must be informed that Labor was never more determined to elect its friends than it will be in the 1928 elections.

Forty-four legislatures held sessions beginning in January this year and in more than thirty of them bills were introduced to repeal or weaken the primary laws. This was attempted in the face of the fact that in many states in 1926 the primary vote was larger than in the presidential election in 1924.

Forty-four states have direct primary laws. Connecticut, Rhode Island, Utah and New Mexico have not enacted such legislation. From reports received up to date no state repealed its primary law, although the Maine legislature left the question to a vote of the people. In some of them primary laws were strengthened.

The opponents of the primary laws contend that it imposes greater costs upon the candidates and their friends than the old "boss"-controlled convention system. Friends of the primary law admit that purchasing the political "bosses" who control conventions would not be as costly as would securing voters in a direct primary. But they contend that the primary laws could be strengthened by each state enacting a Corrupt Practices Act which would limit the purposes for which money could be spent.

As we have said before, if the people are competent to elect candidates to office they surely are competent to nominate them in a direct primary. No greater scheme to place the nomination of candidates in the hands of a few men can be imagined than in the convention system. Labor must continue active in opposing every move in any state to repeal the direct primary laws.

A most important feature of the primaries and elections is getting out the vote. There is not a wrong that cannot be righted if all those entitled to vote cast their ballots. Less than fifty per cent of the voters in the United States went to the polls in the November, 1924, election. Undoubtedly, millions of those who did not vote have sadly repented.

It is therefore the duty of every national and international union to urge members of their local unions to agitate for a full vote of the membership. State federations of labor, city central bodies and local unions should join in carrying out this necessary policy. We believe that the great majority of those who failed to vote are wage earners. Agitation for getting out the vote should not be confined to organized wage earners but should be extended to the unorganized and also those in sympathy with the aims and objects of the labor movement. The campaign should not be for a week or a month; it should begin early in the year 1928 and continue until the primaries and elections are held.

The official and weekly labor press could be helpful by printing in a prominent place in their publications shortly before the primaries and elections some attractive slogan that will appeal to the voters and impress upon them the obligations they owe not only to themselves but to their fellow citizens.

The Executive Council will begin an early campaign and national and international unions, state federations of labor, city central bodies and local unions are requested to give careful attention to all information furnished them in order that the elections of 1928 can be made most effective. The successes of the non-partisan political campaign of the A. F. of L. have been gradually becoming greater. A larger number of wage earners every year sees the benefit of non-partisan action and this, it is believed, will make them a greater factor in the coming election than they ever have been heretofore.

Successes can not be gained without hard work. Active trade unionists should be appointed on all non-partisan committees and they should understand that much depends upon their activities. If the plans of the E.C. are carried out in an aggressive manner we have reason to hope and believe that the greatest successes of Labor will be the outcome of Labor's activities in 1928.

(1928, pp. 75, 248) As soon as the 1927 convention had adjourned arrangements were made to take an active interest in the campaign for the election of progressive congressmen.

A circular was mailed February 11 to all national in international unions, state federations of labor, city central bodies and 35,000 local unions urging them to prepare for an active campaign. This circular contained the report of the Executive Council to the Los Angeles convention and urged the appointment of non-partisan political committees by all state federations, city central bodies and local unions to work together for the reelection of progressive members of Congress.

During the primary campaigns the records of many candidates for Congress were sent to the local unions in the respective districts. We urged all members of organized labor to "STAND FAITHFULLY BY OUR FRIENDS AND ELECT THEM, OPPOSE OUR ENEMIES AND DEFEAT THEM." It soon became noticeable that great interest was being taken in the campaign throughout the United States.

Members of the A. F. of L. National Non-Partisan Political Campaign Committee attended both political party conventions. The committee appeared before the Resolutions Committees of the Republican and Democratic parties and submitted suggestions for planks to be incorporated in their platforms.

When the E.C. met July 31 to August 7 a report was submitted by the National Non-Partisan Committee of the planks adopted by the two political parties and also such other information as was necessary to give an insight into the work done for the election of progressive members of Congress.

The E.C. gave profound consideration to the political situation. After much discussion it was decided to follow our well established non-partisan political policy in the 1928 campaign. In conformity with that decision the Council adopted the following declaration:

The A. F. of L. has found from experience that the best interests of its entire membership have been protected and conserved through a strict adherence to a non-partisan political policy. This procedure requires that the platforms of the political parties must be compared and the records of candidates for office must be carefully studied and scrutinized. When all such political information is made available the individual members of organized labor invariably support candidates for office who are known to be friendly and sympathetic toward the aims and purposes of the American Federation of Labor and who enjoy the confidence and esteem of the members and representatives of organized labor.

The wisdom of such action is clearly apparent when it is considered that the A. F. of L. is composed of men and women who entertain different political opinions. They are not required to become identified with or to support any political party when they become members of the A. F. of L.

After giving consideration to all these facts the A. F. of L. is of the opinion that the membership of the A. F. of L. should continue to adhere to its non-partisan political policy during the ensuing political campaign.

All information regarding platforms, candidates and their records will be compiled by the Non-Partisan Political Committee and submitted to the officers and members of the A. F. of L. so that they may exercise their political judgment in a way which will be to the individual and collective interests of all working men and women.

In connection with this very important decision we are taking into consideration the fact that the candidates of the two great political parties for the Presidency of the United States will deliver their speeches of acceptance in the month of August. We firmly expect that each of them, in these addresses, will make declarations of great significance to Labor. We anticipate that they will express their opinions regarding injunction relief legislation and will amplify the declarations of the platforms of the political parties relating to Labor and labor questions. We will await, with very great interest, the expression of each of the candidates reserving to ourselves a final decision regarding our future policy during the remainder of the campaign.

In conformity with this declaration and decision the Non-Partisan Political Committee of the A. F. of L. is instructed to communicate with national and international unions, state federations of labor, city central bodies and directly chartered local unions transmitting to them copies of the platforms of the two political parties and the records of the candidates for the Presidency of the United States together with a copy of this declaration.

Furthermore, the records of candidates for the United States Senate in the different states and candidates for the House of Representatives shall be supplied for general distribution throughout the different states and congressional districts.

This declaration upheld the traditional non-partisan political policy of the A. F. of L. We have endeavored to respect and protect the rights of the working men to vote in accordance with the dictates of their consciences and to identify themselves with political parties without interference on the part of the American Federation of Labor. During the entire campaign we carefully followed this non-partisan political policy. August 31 another circular was sent to all state federations of labor and city central bodies urging greatest activity in having members of organized labor and their friends register.

Fifty thousand copies of a pamphlet containing the planks in the platforms of the two political parties, the statements made regarding Labor in the acceptance speeches of the candidates for President and Vice-President and the legislative records on measures of interest to labor of the candidates were printed. From 200 to 500 copies of this pamphlet were sent to the larger central bodies and ten copies each to every other central body affiliated with the A. F. of L. Copies also were sent to the 35,000 local unions affiliated directly or indirectly with the American Federation of Labor.

—We began sending out after the middle of September the legislative records on measures of interest to labor of all members of Congress or former members of Congress who had been nominated. There was great difficulty in obtaining the names of the nominees which delayed matters somewhat, but by October 3 all the legislative records had been sent. The New York State convention of the two parties met October 1 and 3. That was the last state sent out.

The records were sent to every union in the respective congressional districts. Accompanying the records was a circular requesting that the records be read at each meeting of the local unions and containing the following slogans: "No loyal citizen of the United States should vote for a candidate who will not support legislation prohibiting the abuse of the use of injunctions in Labor disputes. No child-loving citizen will vote for a candidate for a state legislature who is not in favor of protecting the nation's children from industrial exploitation. No wage earner should vote for a candidate who has opposed remedial legislation urged by Labor. No loyal citizen of our country will vote for other than those candidates who have proved that the interests of all the people are above the selfish demands of the few."

Hundreds of individual letters were answered and there appears to be a most intense interest in the campaign.

A number of letters pointing out the favorable attitude of progressive members of Congress were sent to the local unions affected. This began in March before the primaries when letters were sent in the interest of progressive representatives in Wisconsin, Illinois, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, North Carolina, Ohio, Arkansas, Tennessee, Montana and other states.

We specialized in our effort to defeat those who had been shown to be our enemies and elect those who were known to be friends in the Senate and House of Representatives.

October 8, a circular letter was sent to the officers of all state federations of labor and city central bodies requesting information as to the political situation in their respective states and districts. Quite a number of answers were received which showed that great interest was being taken in the election of progressive members of Congress.

While the results of the election were not known at the time this report was prepared, we had reason to believe that many candidates for United States Senate, and many candidates for members of the House of Representatives who received the support of organized labor, would be triumphantly elected.

We are very hopeful that the majority of the members of Congress will be friendly to the legislative program of the A. F. of L.

(1929, p. 90) The campaign for members of Congress will begin as soon as the convention adjourns. Practical steps will be taken to stir the members to action on the candidates in their respective districts. All members of the House must be reelected and one-third of the members of the Senate.

As the years go by we find greater interest among the officers and rank and file in the elections for members of Congress. This promises much for the future. All city central bodies should have legislative committees to aid their respective state federations of labor in carrying out their legislative programs. All local unions should also have legislative committees to work in harmony with city central bodies. They can become non-partisan campaign committees during election campaigns.

The political campaign of 1930 will be in an "off year" as there will be no election for president. In the past the votes cast in an "off year" are hardly more than fifty per cent of those cast in presidential years. The E.C. desires to urge every member of every trade union and its officers to take a deep interest in who should be elected to Congress next year. To that end we urge that the Executive Council be kept informed of all candidates. The records of those who have been in Congress are kept at headquarters of the American Federation of Labor and will be furnished to any member on request. But candidates enter the field who never have been in Congress and we, therefore, request that the officers and members of unions in the respective congressional districts send all information they possess of the labor records of new candidates to the president of the A. F. of L.

If Labor expects to eliminate labor injunctions from the federal courts it must have sufficient number of friends in Congress to bring about that result. We feel, also, that aggressive campaigns should be made against those leaders of Congress who have by their acts placed themselves in an unfavorable position. We intend to make an active campaign against them and urge the most earnest help on the part of our members to bring about their defeat.

(P. 288) The E.C. states that a majority of the members in both houses of Congress are favorable to labor, but points out that some of the leaders of the House of Representatives are unfavorable and that they are powerful enough to prevent remedial measures from being brought up for a vote.

An aggressive campaign should be made against those leaders of Congress who have been responsible for the suppression of measures designed to promote the well-being of the masses of the people. All trade unionists should prepare to participate in the next Congressional election, which takes place in 1930, when all members of the House and one-third of the Senate are to be elected. The candidates who are friendly to labor should be supported and the enemies of labor should be opposed, without regard to political party affiliations. Local unions and central bodies which have not already appointed legislative committees should do so at once and, in accord with the recommendations of the Council, these committees can serve as non-partisan campaign committees during election campaigns. The E.C. stated that "if Labor expects to eliminate labor injunctions from the federal courts, it must have a sufficient number of friends in Congress to bring about that result." It is plain that the injunction problem cannot be solved except through legislation, and that the necessary legislation will not be enacted by unfriendly senators and congressmen. This consideration should, itself, be sufficient to call forth the most energetic activity by trade unionists throughout the United States in the non-partisan political campaign of the A. F. of L. during the next year. The A. F. of L. approves of the recommendations.

(1930, pp. 112, 372) The A. F. of L. has aggressively entered the campaign for the election of members of Congress feeling assured that it will meet with a large measure of success. It is particularly noticeable and gratifying that the officers and members of the rank and file of the trade union movement are earnestly aiding in the election of friends of the people.

The E.C. has been exceedingly active in placing before the members of organized labor and their sympathetic friends the records of those Senators who voted for the confirmation of Judge John J. Parker as a Justice of the Supreme Court. The dangers of the "yellow dog" contract are known to every worker in our land and thus the issue has been raised with every candidate for the United States Senate. Copies of the Minority Substitute bill submitted to the U.S. Senate by a minority of the Judiciary Committee have been sent to all of the officers of the respective State Federations of Labor with a request that they submit the questionnaire to all candidates for Congress in their respective states. The legislative record on measures of interest to labor of every member of Congress has been sent into the various states and congressional districts to all organizations of labor.

After the last convention the E.C. immediately began an investigation of the prospects of electing forward-looking candidates for Congress. April 2d our President and Secretary sent a circular letter by direction of the E.C. to all organized labor in the United States urging them to be active in the campaign. The circular contained the action of the 1929 convention and set forth labor's wishes as to the anti-injunction bill and other issues. The circular with the exception of the action of the 1929 convention is as follows:

The Non-Partisan Political Campaign Committee of the A. F. of L. requests that all national and international unions, state and city central bodies and local unions immediately prepare themselves for activities in the coming elections in November of members of Congress.

Every state and city central body and local union should appoint a non-partisan political campaign committee or direct its legislative committee to perform the necessary duties during the campaign.

There is one important issue which for many years the A. F. of L. and its affiliated organizations have strived to have enacted into law. That is, a law to prohibit the issuance of injunctions in labor disputes.

To that end we have decided that every candidate for Congress shall be asked his attitude on such a measure and whether, if elected, he will vote for an anti-injunction bill approved by the A. F. of L.

The following question should be submitted to every candidate for Congress no matter what his political faith:

"Will you vote for a bill to amend the judicial code and to define and limit the jurisdiction of courts sitting in equity, which will provide as follows: 'That no Court of the United States shall have jurisdiction to issue any restraining order or temporary or permanent injunction in a case involving or growing out of a labor dispute.'"

Every candidate in every district should be asked the above question. State federations of labor and city central bodies should submit the question to candidates for the United States Senate.

We urge all members of trade unions and all sympathizers with labor's hopes and aspirations to enter the non-partisan political campaign with the determination to elect friends of labor and the people and defeat those whose records show that they are disregardful of the rights of the people.

Support by your vote only those candidates who have proved the genuineness of their service, or their desire for service, to the people and labor. There must be no apathy.

In past elections labor has received the support of many farmers and farm organizations. Labor's attitude toward economic and political relief for the farmers is well known.

Stand faithfully by our friends and elect them. Oppose our enemies and defeat them; whether they be candidates for President, for Congress or other offices; whether executive, legislative, or judicial.

Let your slogan be: "We will not vote for a candidate for Congress who is opposed to a law prohibiting the issuance of injunctions in labor disputes."

Let every member of every trade union delegate himself a committee of one in addition to the local non-partisan political campaign committee to carry out the non-partisan policy of the A. F. of L.

After the primaries and elections of 1930 have been held let it not be said that trade unionists have been disloyal not only to themselves but to their fellow wage earners and their fellow citizens.

Special circular letters have been sent into all states giving the records of candidates for Congress and especially of members of the Senate who voted to confirm Judge John J. Parker as a Justice of the U.S. Supreme Court. From communications we have received we find that the organized labor movements in the various states have taken a most sincere interest in selecting the proper candidates in the primaries and will urge their election in November.

The success of our anti-injunction bill depends upon the election of candidates who will support our measure. It is the greatest issue to be faced by organized labor and upon its members and their friends depend whether we will secure the relief so necessary for the success of future activities of labor.

All national and international unions, state federations of labor, city central bodies and local unions should make it their duty to carry out the non-partisan political campaign of the A. F. of L.

(1931, pp. 122, 417) The importance of the forthcoming presidential election should cause every labor organization in the United States to prepare for that great battle. Besides the President and Vice-President at least 32 members of the U.S. Senate and all members of the House of Representatives must be elected.

The E.C. will submit proposed labor planks to the national political conventions and urge their inclusion in the platforms of the two parties. It has been the practice of the non-partisan political committee of the A. F. of L. to support platforms and principles rather than candidates for President and Vice-President.

After the conventions have been held a pamphlet will be printed containing the labor planks which the E.C. requested to be part of the platforms and the labor planks that were adopted. These will be sent to all national and international unions, state federations of labor, city central bodies and 35,000 local unions.

The great obstacle to the election of the right candidates is the apathy of the voters. It is rare that more than 50 per cent of the voters go to the polls in a presidential election. We believe, however, that the great rank and file of the workers have had time to think during the terrible conditions they have been passing through during the past few years, and that this experience will influence them to go to the polls and vote in 1932.

The E.C. will use every effort to induce working people and their friends to vote, not only in the primaries but at the election. It is important that the primaries should not be overlooked as in many cases the candidates who were nominated for office were always opposed to all labor legislation and could have been defeated in the primary election if the workers had turned out in full force.

Labor fared very well in the 1930 election. Several of the most persistent enemies of Labor went down to defeat because of the strenuous antagonism of Labor.

The next session of Congress will consider an anti-injunction bill and other legislation of benefit to Labor as well as to all the people. Both the Senate and House are nearly evenly divided politically and we have every hope that we will secure the remedial legislation for which we have fought so many years. But to secure this legislation we must have the earnest support of every labor organization. Committees should be appointed by central bodies or local unions in every congressional district to interview the candidates for Congress. The state federations of labor should select committees to wait upon United States Senators and question them as to their attitude toward remedial legislation.

This convention should therefore adopt a strong declaration calling upon all our members and their friends to follow the non-partisan policy of the A. F. of L., which is:

Stand faithfully by our friends and elect them. Oppose our enemies and defeat them; whether they be candidates for President, for Congress, or other offices, whether executive, legislative, or judicial.

We also wish to reaffirm the pledge all members of organized labor should freely give, and that is:

We will not vote for a candidate for Congress who is opposed to a law prohibiting the issuance of injunctions in labor disputes.

It is the desire of the E.C. that every national and international union, state federation, city central body and local union shall keep in touch with the Non-Partisan Political Campaign Committee of the A. F. of L. during the presidential campaign. This is absolutely necessary if we are to be successful.

Besides questioning candidates for Congress vigorous efforts must be made to get out the vote. If every voter will cast a ballot in the election, undoubtedly only those will be elected who will be favorable to remedial legislation. Therefore, from the beginning of the primary campaign to election day the slogan should be:

"GET OUT THE VOTE!"

(1932, pp. 159, 374) The A. F. of L. at the Vancouver convention last year urged that every labor organization and every member in the country participate in the national elections in 1932. It pointed out that as a rule approximately fifty per cent of the voters visited the polls in a presidential election and suggested that the slogan be: "GET OUT THE VOTE."

A strong declaration was made calling upon all members and their friends to follow the non-partisan political policy of the A. F. of L.

As a result of these recommendations the officers and members of trade unions of every city and town in the country took a very active part in the election of President and members of Congress. Thousands of letters were received requesting copies of the legislative records on measures of interest to labor of both members of the United States Senate and the House of Representatives.

The Non-Partisan Political Campaign Committee submitted planks to be placed in both political parties' platforms. Of the twenty-six subjects suggested eight were ignored entirely by both parties.

We were quite successful in the primaries.

The legislative records of all members of Congress were sent into their respective states and districts except in some cases in the South where nomination was equivalent to election. The records were sent in before the primaries. A statement of the A. F. of L. non-partisan political policy accompanied these records. In addition to the sending of the records we actively supported candidates for the United States Senate by the assignment of speakers and workers, through the distribution of literature and through the exercise of every other legitimate means at our command.

Letters were also sent out for certain members of the House of Representatives who were encountering difficulties.

Of those candidates for the U.S. Senate whom we supported, all were elected except three.

An analysis of the election returns shows that practically every member of the U.S. Senate who was up for re-election and who voted for the confirmation of Judge John J. Parker to be a member of the United States Supreme Court, has been defeated. As a whole, labor fared exceptionally well in the election.

Our success in the senatorial campaigns was equaled in the defeat of the enemies of labor in the lower House.

Fourteen trade unionists will become members of the next Congress.

It is believed that all the results stated above were obtained as a result of the recommendations adopted by the 1931 Convention, and we again direct that the non-partisan political policy adopted and reaffirmed by the Convention be continued.

(1933, pp. 112, 452) The A. F. of L. desires to impress upon the entire membership of the A. F. of L. that they have a duty to perform in the elections of 1934 that must not be neglected. Thirty-five U.S. Senators are to be chosen and 435 members of the House of Representatives. The records of all the present members of Congress who will seek reelection and those candidates who have been members will be sent to the labor organizations in the respective states and congressional districts.

In order to be effective in the primaries and elections, every organization should prepare to acquaint the members with the records of the various candidates in order that they may vote for those who are fair and impartial.

Quite a number of members during the short session of the 72d Congress and the special session of the 73d Congress proved that they were unworthy of the support of the wage earners. On the other hand, there were quite a number of members who in every instance defended and protected the rights of the workers.

The legislative committees of the various state federations of labor, city central bodies and local unions should become non-partisan political campaign committees. They should not only inform their membership of the candidates for Congress who are acceptable, but should take an active interest in pointing out which candidates of the various state legislatures are entitled to the support of Labor.

It must be remembered that 1934 is an "off year" and that many voters will stay away from the polls. This should encourage all Non-Partisan Political Campaign Committees to impress repeatedly upon the rank and file that they owe a duty to themselves and to the country by going to the polls on primary and election days. In many states the success of a candidate in a primary is tantamount to an election. This is particularly true in some of the southern states. Therefore, it is necessary to make the big fight in the primary.

Every incentive should be given to wage earners and their friends to register and vote. The most important part of an election campaign is to register. Failure to do so by a sufficient number of workers would sometimes result in the election of an unfavorable candidate. The duty, then, of these Non-Partisan Political Campaign Committees is to see that the wage earners register and vote at the primaries and at the elections in November.

To the A. F. of L. is delegated the duty of securing remedial legislation from Congress and defeating malevolent legislation. It is, therefore, absolutely necessary that the policies of the A. F. of L. be upheld by the election of fair and impartial candidates for Congress.

It should not be said after the election that the organized wage earners have not regarded it as their duty to elect fair candidates and defeat unfair candidates.

(1934, pp. 88, 553) The political campaign for the election of members of Congress is now on in every congressional district and state of the United States. It is imperative that candidates who are favorable to remedial legislation shall be elected. According to inquiries made of the A. F. of L. great interest is being taken in the election. Central labor unions have instructed their legislative committees to be active in carrying out the non-partisan political policy of the A. F. of L. The officers of the various state federations of labor are also active in requesting the legislative records on measures of interest to Labor of the various candidates in their states.

There are 435 members of the House and 35 U.S. Senators who are to be elected. The records of the candidates were sent to the various state and congressional districts and an appeal made to carry out the declaration of the A. F. of L.

This being an "off year" the E.C. cannot too strongly urge that the greatest interest be taken in appealing to all members and friends of Labor to go to the polls on election day. In the past great friends of Labor have been defeated because of the lack of interest during an "off year" election.

One of the important questions that should be asked candidates is whether they will restore the wages and working conditions taken away from government employees under the Economy Act. While there has been a partial restoration, there are a number of conditions that should be remedied. A five percent reduction in wages is still in effect and this should be repealed in case the President does not restore the loss to the government employees.

The duty of the A. F. of L. is to secure legislation of benefit to Labor and the people. In order that it can be successful, it is necessary for fair and impartial members of Congress to be elected. Every candidate should be questioned as to his attitude toward Labor by the officials in his congressional district. Candidates for the U.S. Senate should also be questioned as to what their attitude will be on remedial legislation.

One most important feature in a political campaign must not be overlooked, and that is to register. Failure to take part in the election sometimes results in the election of a candidate unfavorable to Labor. Every state federation of labor, central labor union and local union has urged upon the wage earners and their friends to register.

There are many Congressmen who, despite all attempts to influence them against Labor, are entitled to the support of organized wage earners. We hope they will never be able to say that Labor did not do its duty in the elections.

(1935, pp. 145, 758) In 1936 a political campaign will be inaugurated and carried forward for the election of President, Vice-President, 32 members of the United States Senate, and 435 members of the House of Representatives. In addition, there will be elections in the various states and municipalities for state and city officials.

Labor must, therefore, with all its friends, support candidates for office who are friendly and sympathetic toward its legislative aims and purposes and defeat those who are against it.

Participation in the primaries is highly important, especially in the south, where candidates who are nominated are sure of election. There will be presidential primaries in a number of states. We urge our membership and their friends to go to the polls and vote for candidates who they know will support Labor and its policies.

The following declaration of the American Federation of Labor should also be remembered when voters go to the polls on primary and election days:

The American labor movement is not partisan to a political party; it is partisan to a principle, the principle of equal rights and freedom.

The officials of every national and international union, state federation of labor, city central body and local union shall keep in close touch with the Non-Partisan Political Campaign Committee of the A. F. of L. during the entire campaign. If Labor is to be successful this policy must be followed. Not only should members of organized labor vote at the primaries on election day but they should urge their immediate families, relatives, neighbors and sympathizers to go to the polls and cast their ballots for approved candidates.

We also request that the officers of state federations of labor and city central labor bodies interview candidates for state and municipal offices as to the stand they will take on remedial legislation. The Non-Partisan Political Campaign Committee will question candidates for Congress.

The records of candidates for President and Vice-President will be printed in circular form as well as the provisions in the platforms of the political parties favorable or unfavorable to Labor and the people. The records of members of Congress who are candidates will be furnished to all the different labor organizations.

(1946, p. 502) The convention unanimously adopted Res. 106 which reaffirmed the well-established non-partisan political policy of the Federation as follows:

Whereas—The Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor at its Chicago session characterized the record of the 79th Congress as a dismal one and condemned Congress for "its subservience to lobbyists for special interests, its legislative assaults against the American workers which constitutes a "danger signal to the American people," and

Whereas—The Executive Council called upon all affiliates to assert their full political power in elections this fall, and effect "a sweeping congressional house cleaning," and

Whereas—In order to carry on effective political activity as described by the Executive Council it will be necessary to set up political campaign committees in all phases of the labor movement, therefore, be it

Resolved—That the American Federation of Labor Convention endorse the recommendation of the Executive Council for all-out political action in the coming elections.

Agreement on Candidates Proposed—(1949, p. 40):

Whereas—At every election of national and state offices of any political organization, there is a duplication of advertising speakers and radio addresses for, or against, the same candidates by the American Federation of Labor, the Congress of Industrial Organizations, the Railroad Brotherhoods, and independent unions, and

Whereas—Greater results could be obtained by closer cooperation, therefore, be it

Resolved—That a meeting be called of the presidents of the American Federation of Labor, the C.I.O., Railroad Brotherhoods, farm organizations and other independent unions for joint political action in agreeing upon the candidates for political office which they will jointly support or oppose.

(P. 482) The recommendation of the convention committee for a substitute for Res. 15 was unanimously approved and the following adopted:

Political activity to encourage 8,000,000 A. F. of L. members, their wives, and other members of their families, to elect their friends and defeat their enemies in the 1950 or any current elections, is the declared position of the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor.

Your committee is in full accord with the declared intention of the Executive Council and commends the Council for its plan of action in the 1950 political campaign.

Labor's Educational and Political League (Labor's League for Political Education: Committee for Political Education)—(1947, p. 407) The Executive Council, through a special supplemental report to the convention, recommended the formation of Labor's Educational and Political League. The special report follows:

The tragic failure of the Eightieth Congress to serve the people, its abject servility in advancing the interests of the most reactionary anti-Labor lobbies and combinations, and the wave of legislation against Labor in the various state legislatures make imperative the need for sound political education and effective political action by organized labor.

In order to serve most effectively the interests of the workers of the nation and to meet adequately the challenge presented by predatory and vested interests, we recommend that the 66th Convention of the American Federation of Labor authorize and direct the Executive Council to arrange for the immediate establishment of "Labor's Educational and Political League" to further the economic and political policies of the American Federation of Labor.

1. It shall be the duty of "Labor's Educational and Political League" to prepare and disseminate information by such media of communication as the League may decide for the purpose of acquainting the workers of the nation with the economic and political policies of the American Federation of Labor.

2. The League shall prepare and disseminate information concerning the attitude of candidates for nomination and/or election to federal offices, with particular reference to their attitude toward the political and economic policies of the American Federation of Labor.

3. The League shall take such other actions as it may deem advisable in furtherance of its objectives.

4. The League shall provide for the raising of necessary funds, for the conduct of its business, in such manner as it may determine.

5. The League shall be authorized to employ staff members necessary to conduct its business and fix their compensation and expenses.

In order to carry out these proposals it is further recommended that the officers and Executive Council shall call a conference of the presidents of all of the affiliated national and international unions at the earliest possible opportunity for the purpose of completing the structure outlining methods of procedure and in giving early and effective realization to the political activities hereinbefore indicated.

(P. 597) The convention committee reported on the supplemental report of the E.C., and 10 resolutions, all dealing with the need for political action, as follows:

The presidential and congressional campaigns of 1948 will parallel a world crisis in which those countries assuring their citizens individual rights and representatives of their own choosing are forced to oppose aggression and domination by countries which deny their citizens personal freedom and hold them under control by secret police and central authority. It is regrettable at the same time that the wage earners of the United States must fight to recapture the right of self-government within their unions in order to regain relief against arbitrary government through the injunction and freedom of contract to determine terms and conditions under which they work. The legislative gains of several decades were wiped out by the Taft-Hartley Act.

There has been enacted a law that distinguishes free from unfree labor, and which injects political regulations into the operation of voluntary organizations and so restricts collective bargaining that duly selected representatives of the parties to a contract are not able freely and expeditiously to come to mutually satisfactory agreements. Such denial of freedom of contract takes from workers equal participation in free enterprise and equal right to promote their welfare and happiness. Restrictions on workers involves managements and the whole business enterprise in annoying and arbitrary procedures that are contrary to the operation and spirit of free enterprise.

The American Federation of Labor, which has assumed responsibility for rescuing free trade unions at the international level, is handicapped by this reactionary and vindictive legislation. It is imperative that the Taft-Hartley Act be repealed without delay. We cannot work shoulder to shoulder with government in behalf of world democracy if our unions are hampered in performing their fundamental duties and services to their members and their industries which constitute the foundations of American society.

Freedom of organization and collective bargaining are the very heart of freedom in the lives of wage earners, hence our first duty and responsibility is to regain the self-government of which the Taft-Hartley Act robbed us. To this end we recommend concentration on political action in such proportions as to regain our freedom and the opportunity to do our full part against the world menace to democracy.

Our plans must be adequate so that all voters and political organizations may be fully informed and aware of the dangers threatening our national institutions and the welfare of those who work for wages. We must explain the issues to all citizens. We must make the facts clear to the minds and consciences of party leaders, as well as inform voting workers effectively on party programs and records of their nominees for Executive Offices and for Congress.

Your committee recommends approval of this portion of the Executive Council's report, but in so doing it is done with the understanding that those unions prohibited by law from participating in political activities are exempted from any of the above requirements.

In connection with this portion of the Executive Council's report, your committee considered Resolutions Nos. 3, 15, 17, 20, 24, 116, 124, 127, 159, 160, all of which deal with political action.

In lieu of these resolutions your committee submits its report on the Executive Council's supplementary report on plans for political campaigns.

(P. 661) Res. 125 unanimously adopted by the convention, endorsed "an immediate extensive educational campaign for political education and action among our people nationally, so that the masses of the workers shall be alerted in order that complete recognition be given to their political and economic struggles."

(1948, p. 423) The convention committee considered Resolutions Nos. 39, 44, 112, and 127 jointly and made the following report which was unanimously approved:

All of these resolutions deal in one way or another with political action—some of them calling outright for the formation of a political party—others calling for conferences with national labor, farmer and liberal groups and still others designed to perpetuate Labor's League for Political Education.

By reason of the fact that the officers of the affiliated national and international unions associated in the National Committee of Labor's League for Political Education, have by unanimous vote decided to make the League a permanent organization and for the further reason of the convention having approved the recommendations of this committee on this subject, your committee is of the opinion that further action on these resolutions is unnecessary and so recommends.

(P. 246) Res. 44 endorsed the work of the League and recommended that the League be continued with a view to further solidifying and unifying the forces of Labor on the political field; and further that all international unions organize a Political Education Committee for the same purpose, and that they "take such measures as may be necessary to make the conduct of political affairs and education an integral part of their routine and daily activities."

(1952, p. 287) In accordance with the action taken at the time of the last convention, Labor's League for Political Education has been established as a formal part of the American Federation of Labor.

The educational activities of the League are now financed out of the American Federation of Labor per capita tax funds. Prior to last year these activities were financed by a special assessment paid by the cooperating national and international unions.

The activities of the League which are strictly political in nature must be financed out of voluntary contributions. The Taft-Hartley Act specifically states that union funds may not be used in behalf of candidates running for national office. Therefore, the League launched a campaign in January of this year to encourage American Federation of Labor members to voluntarily contribute one dollar each to LLPE. Membership cards were given to all contributors. A promotion program including detailed instructions, leaflets, bulletin board placards, and all types of labor newspaper promotion material was launched in January and has been continued through each succeeding month.

The cooperation of the national and international unions in this fund-raising drive has been most encouraging. Of the 92 national affiliates which could legally join in this drive and which are not affiliated with the Railway Laborers' Political League, a total of 85 are at present soliciting contributions. These 85 unions represent 22,208 local unions throughout the country.

Unfortunately, the voluntary contribution campaign has not been as successful as expected. Similar campaigns carried on in 1948 and in 1950 brought in approximately a half million dollars each.

The League has continued to carry out its political education program. However, as an integral part of the American Federation of Labor, it was decided to eliminate the LLPE semi-monthly newspaper, the League Reporter, and publish a weekly eight-page AFL newspaper, the AFL News-Reporter which commenced publication in December of last year. The former editor of the League Reporter now prepares political education material for publication in the AFL News-Reporter. The League Reporter cartoonist was also retained by the new paper.

The Radio Department of the League has continued to render technical and financial service to candidates running for office and to produce political education programs the year round.

Research services and individual analyses of the records of incumbent Congressmen have been provided by the League.

Women's literature designed to attract the support of the housewives and mothers in American Federation of Labor trade union homes has been disseminated.

The director and his staff have traveled into every corner of the country speaking before meetings, organizing local LLPE units and giving advice and counsel where needed.

At the Miami Administrative Committee meeting in January the question of whether the League would endorse a candidate for President was resolved in this manner: It was decided that this was a question which should be left until after the party nominating conventions and until the American Federation of Labor Convention could consider the matter in September on the highest possible level.

Primary elections have produced both disappointments and gratifying successes. There is no way to forecast with accuracy the outcome of the November elections. However, since the formation of the League five years ago, there has been a complete reversal of the previous wave of anti-Labor laws passed at the state and national level. There still remain on the statute books many laws which should be repealed or modified.

In order to repeal harmful laws and prevent the passage of further harmful laws, it is necessary to maintain constant vigilance in the political arena. In the shifting tides of politics, Labor's friends will not always win every election. However, as the American Federation of Labor, through LLPE, carries out its trade union responsibility to educate its members and to encourage them to vote for proven friends of Labor year after year, eventually professional politicians will acquire respect for working people and will eventually enact basic laws designed to protect their rights.

(P. 72) During the past, we have had to meet and overcome many, many obstacles thrown in the way of our movement in its forward advance by those who believe in the privileges of the few as opposed to the rights of the many. In the past, our efforts to organize have been met with every type of reactionary resistance. We have had to meet attempts that have been made to starve out the workers and kill off any desire they may have for the maintenance of a free trade union. We have had to meet the anti-Labor injunction, the American Plan, the company thug, the company-controlled sheriff, the company-controlled judge. American Labor, under the banner of the American Federation of Labor, has met and overcome these obstacles.

Today, the major obstacle in our way is the repressive anti-Labor legislation which our enemies have placed on the statute books of the states and of the nation itself. To meet this present-day obstacle to the maintenance of our achievements of the past and to further progress in the future, there is only one answer. Labor must be politically alive. We must meet the reactionary forces opposed to us on this battleground with the same determination and force with which we have met them on other battlegrounds of the past. Labor must see to it that the men and women who sit in the halls of Congress and in our various state legislatures must be those who realize the importance of Labor's contribution to the welfare of our nation. We must see to it that Labor exercises its supreme right of franchise by taking part in every election at every level. We must see to it that those who would push Labor back to the days when the employer alone decided the conditions upon which men and women would work in this nation should be eliminated from public office. Our objective of a better and ever better day for the great mass of workers in America cannot and must not be allowed to fail because of political inaction on our part.

Therefore, when the Seventy-first Convention of the American Federation of Labor turns its face to the future, it must do so with the full realization that the ballot box is the most important weapon which the workers have in their fight for the continued forward march of our American nation.

(P. 401) This year when the American people are preparing to choose a new President and a new Congress, Labor has a special responsibility to drive for the full exercise of their rights as citizens in a democracy by all who work. This, the Seventy-first Convention of the American Federation of Labor, concurs wholeheartedly in the Executive Council's call for the full exercise of their franchise by the working men and women of America. We ask every affiliate and every member of our Federation to do their part on the coming election day to further Labor's cause.

Political action is a means to an end. That end is the realization of man's freedom, of opportunity to produce and create in accordance with his choice and the fulfillment of his rights. The foremost of these is the right to join others in the achievement of greater welfare and better living for all.

It is our duty to make secure and inviolate the right of workers to act together for mutual aid, protection and advancement. The exercise of this right is the first, undeferrable and overriding task of organized labor. We are dedicated to the purpose of carrying out the task through self-reliance, independence and joint effort.

To us as trade unionists, the first concern is with human advancement through the voluntary process of collective bargaining. To us as citizens the foremost duty is to make full use of our institutions so that they may better serve freedom, justice and the rights of man.

State—(1952, p. 48):

Whereas—It is recommended to the American Federation of Labor that at the annual convention in New York City, in September, it amend the A. F. of L. Constitution so as to prohibit any state federation of labor or central labor body, existing by virtue of a charter issued by the A. F. of L., from undertaking or participating in any political education activity with relation to the election or nomination of candidates for federal or state office, including the President of the United States, United States Senate, or House of Representatives, or for governor of any state, or for member of any state legislature, and

Whereas—The American Federation of Labor is fostering political action and political education through its Labor's League for Political Education and it has suggested to all state federations of labor and central labor bodies that their political action be carried on through LLPE and not through their respective federations or central labor unions, therefore, be it

Resolved—That the American Federation of Labor at its annual convention in New York City in September, 1952, take steps to amend its constitution prohibiting the federations or central labor unions, which are chartered by the A. F. of L., from direct participation in political activity except through their respective state LLPE's and local or county subdivisions.

(P. 395) Your committee, while in accord with the intent of the foregoing Resolution No. 74, is nevertheless of the opinion that the purpose sought should be attained through educational means and voluntary approach rather than by the enactment of a law which would be mandatory and may prove difficult of enforcement where questioned or disregarded.

The committee accordingly recommends non-concurrence in the proposition as submitted and moves that its action be sustained.

(1954, pp. 383, 580) Res. 30:

Whereas—Since 1947 the A. F. of L. has engaged actively in the political arena in a determined effort to elect men and women to the Congress who are not antagonistic to Labor's interests and who believe that sound social legislation benefits the entire nation, and

Whereas—Political action in order to be effective must have the active support of our local LLPE groups who are organized and controlled by our central labor unions and state federations of Labor. Unless that support is given, pronouncements and policies laid down by the conventions of the A. F. of L. or its Executive Council are doomed to failure, and

Whereas—Too often the unlimited freedom of action enjoyed by CLU and SFL officials is utilized to oppose A. F. of L. aims and policies and too often some of these unlimited freedoms are turned against the best interests of Labor, now therefore, be it

Resolved—That the Executive Council be directed to cause a study to be made of the relationships that exist between CLU's, SFL's and A. F. of L. to the end that the aforementioned conditions be corrected.

Referred to the Executive Council for study and appropriate action.

Political Coalition (Liberal-Farmer-Labor)—(1948, p. 332) Res. 127 proposed the creation of a Coalition Committee of Fifteen as follows:

Resolved—That these times and measures call for the creation of a new liberal-farm-labor political coalition on the national scene, based upon,

but not confined to organized labor, which will be capable of combating the reactionary coalition from Congress and the Presidency down to the precinct level, in defense of the ancient liberties of our people and the common resources of the nation, and be it further

Resolved—That to this end, the Sixty-seventh Convention of the American Federation of Labor favors the creation of a National Liberal-Farmer-Labor Coalition Committee of Fifteen, which shall be charged with organizing and coordinating the Labor and liberal forces in the forthcoming 81st Congress and in the country, and should the National Democratic Party be unwilling or unable to discipline or remove the anti-Labor and anti-liberal fifth-columnists in its midst, to summon into existence a third political force capable of becoming a new major party, and be it finally

Resolved—That the president of the American Federation of Labor proceed to appoint five members of such a committee, of experienced A. F. of L. officers, to negotiate with other national labor, farmer and liberal bodies for an additional ten members of similar experience and high reputation, to proceed with this work with the full support of the majority of all affiliates of the American Federation of Labor, who are prepared and free, under their laws, to participate.

Political Platform Recommendations—(1952, p. 508) There can be no doubt in the minds of thinking men and women that the economic welfare and future well-being of America's workers will be determined more than ever before in history, by legislation.

This changing order, this break with past tradition, is none of our doing. It was forced upon us by the reactionaries. While publicly decrying the invasion of private liberty by government, the reactionaries have aggressively mobilized to undermine and destroy the freedom of Labor by restrictive legislation at the federal and state levels.

Since the founding of the American Federation of Labor, our trade unions, functioning as free institutions, have successfully overcome every challenge by hostile employers. Year by year, our trade unions have steadily lifted standards of living and conditions of employment. Wages have been increased; hours of work have been reduced; industrial hazards have declined; educational and recreational opportunities have been enlarged. A fuller and better life has been secured for all American workers.

But now the forces of reaction want to call a halt to this tide of progress. They are determined, if they can, to reverse the trend. To this end they have regrouped to fight Labor on a new battle line. They hope to win back in the legislative and political field what they lost on the economic front.

The Taft-Hartley Act symbolizes the legislative club big business holds over the heads of Labor. It has been supplemented by many state laws, even more severe, and by such restrictive federal legislation as the Hobbs and Lea Acts. At the behest of business interests, Congress has enacted tax favoritism to the wealthy; it has ignored the interests of the consumers by weakening price controls; it has stopped all social improvement legislation in its tracks.

Unless such restrictive laws are repealed, unless the interests of all the American people are once more protected by Congress from rapacious raids by special interests, the American standard of living and our very way of life are bound to suffer irreparable damage.

Labor's indictment of the Taft-Hartley Act is clear and unanswerable.

It has revived the indefensible doctrine of conspiracy which plagued trade unions in the 19th century.

It has emasculated the just provisions of the Norris-LaGuardia Act, which prevented the federal courts from being misused as an instrument to help employers fight unions.

By its enactment, the genuine union shop—the outcome of a century of struggle—has been swept aside.

Free speech has been made a mockery and employers are now given license to force workers into captive audiences.

The right to strike has been reduced to a shadow of its former self. Employers today know the law permits them to sever the "employee status" of strikers at will.

Officers of free trade unions, who have led the fight against Communism, are forced by this law to submit loyalty oaths while employers are exempted.

As workers, as trade unionists, as sovereign citizens of our free land, we must meet the new reactionary challenge that faces us.

The time for action is at hand.

Let us meet our enemies on the new battlefield they have chosen. Let us use the weapon which every citizen of our free land possesses. Let us all vote—and vote intelligently—in the coming election.

We are convinced that our responsibility to our membership demands that we state frankly and sincerely where we stand in this election. Political neutrality would be an evasion of that responsibility. Our enemies do not practice political neutrality. If we hope to cope with them successfully, we must survey the facts and the issues and take our stand. In no other way can we effectively support our friends and defeat our enemies.

The issues and the facts are clear. We present herewith the platform recommendations submitted by the American Federation of Labor to both major political conventions in Chicago, together with the actions of both conventions on our recommendations:

The Taft-Hartley Law

The first proposal of the American Federation of Labor was to replace the Taft-Hartley law with a new law fair to management and labor alike, and in the public interest.

The Democratic platform approved our proposal. It strongly recommended the repeal of this unfair and obnoxious law. It called for a new approach to the entire labor-management problems on a basis of fairness and equality to all concerned.

The Republican platform praised and favored the retention of the Taft-Hartley Act. Its sole concession was the promise of amendments in general terms and at some distant future date—if and when future experience showed the need for them.

Prevention of Inflation

The American Federation of Labor requested a genuine stabilization program with effective price controls to end profiteering at the cost of American consumers.

The Republican platform completely ignored this vital issue.

The Democratic platform pledged continuance of workable price controls during the emergency and action to correct the wrong inflicted on the American people by the weakening amendments to the Defense Production Act passed by Congress.

Rent Control

We proposed that rent controls be continued wherever housing shortages existed.

The Democratic platform approved that course.

The Republican Party urged the abolition of rent controls except in defense areas.

Housing

We urged programs for private housing development, for public low rent housing, for slum clearance, for urban redevelopment and for farm housing.

The Democratic platform practically matched the recommendations of the American Federation of Labor on housing.

The Republican platform overlooked the problem of housing completely save for a statement that the party would cooperate with local governments in slum clearance.

Social Security

The American Federation of Labor proposed a system of federal insurance which would give genuine protection to people against the hazards of old age, disability and major illness. We urged this as a matter of true thrift not a "hand-out" state. Concretely, we called for liberalization of old age and survivors insurance benefits so that the payments matched the increased cost of living. We further recommended a workable system of disability insurance.

The Democratic platform called for higher benefit payments, extension of coverage to those not now protected and the elimination of restrictions on the amount which retired workers could earn while drawing the benefits for which they paid taxes.

The Republican platform did favor the extension of coverage. It did not advocate the payment of higher benefits to meet the rise in the cost of living. Instead, it promised to stop the inflationary price rise by cutting Federal spending. In the face of the War in Korea and the terrifically expensive defense program this hoped-for solution was clearly unrealistic.

Health Insurance

Our recommendation was that there be established a genuine health insurance program to meet honestly the nation's health needs.

The Democratic platform goes only so far as to hope for an acceptable solution from the President's Commission on the Health Needs of the Nation. It did favor federal aid to hospital construction and aid for medical education.

The Republican platform not only opposed health insurance but condemned openly the whole idea.

Aid to Education

We asked federal aid to education so that full educational opportunity would be assured regardless of economic status or race.

The Democratic platform endorsed this broad program of federal aid to education.

The Republican platform stated that financing education was a local problem of the communities and of the State. This ignored the fact that there are a number of States which just don't have the money to provide their people with a decent education.

Taxation

We favored an intensive effort to bring federal defense and non-defense expenditures into balance with tax revenue—providing necessary defense needs were not neglected, international obligations and commitments were not ignored, and services necessary to the health and welfare of the American people were not curtailed. We also urged that tax loopholes be closed, that excise taxes be eventually eliminated, and when tax reductions become possible they should go first to persons in the low income tax brackets.

The Democratic plank contained no reckless or illusory promises to reduce taxes immediately. They did oppose a federal sales tax; they promised to close tax loopholes designed to favor special groups at the expense of the rest of the taxpayers. They agreed that low income persons should receive the first tax reductions when they became available.

The Republican platform eagerly promised immediate reductions in taxes by the elimination of waste and extravagance. Once again the Korean War and the cost of the defense program appeared to be conveniently overlooked.

Civil Rights

We are deeply concerned with the security and advancement of civil rights. The position taken by the American Federation of Labor was that Congress should enact a Federal F.E.P.C. law since America could not uphold the virtues of democracy in the family of nations while equal opportunity to work and to earn a living was denied to its own citizens because of race, creed or color.

The Democratic platform did not mention the F.E.P.C. by name. It did however commit the party in favor of federal legislation to secure the right of an equal opportunity for employment and other basic civil rights. The platform put the party on record against the filibuster.

The Republican platform makes no promises but indicates opposition to a federal law on anti-discrimination by declaring that state legislation should not be duplicated and no huge bureaucracy should be created.

Foreign Policy

We insisted that America must strengthen its defenses and those of the free world. We asserted that America must refuse to yield to Soviet pressure in any quarter of the globe. Finally we urged the continuance of the Mutual Security Program.

Both parties have pledged resistance against Communist aggression and cooperation with the other free nations to maintain world peace. One fact is clear, Moscow can find no consolation in the foreign policy planks of either American political party.

This analysis clearly outlines the wide gulf that separates the two major parties on most domestic issues of vital concern to America's workers.

The Democratic Party's platform is responsive to the needs and desires of the workers and liberal-minded people of our country.

The Republican Party's platform is responsive to the demands of the ultra-conservative, anti-union elements in the nation.

There can be no hesitation on our part in declaring the obvious truth—that the Democratic platform is far more preferable to labor than the Republican platform.

In evaluating the qualifications of the candidates, we wish to emphasize that we are not moved by partisan considerations, but by facts.

We hold both candidates for the Presidency in high esteem.

Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower is a loyal and patriotic citizen. He has won the respect and admiration of all his fellow Americans and of millions of other free people throughout the world for his military achievements. Moreover, he is a man of great personal charm.

While we affirm the highest regard for General Eisenhower's military genius, it is as civilian that he is seeking the highest civilian office in the land.

There is little evidence available on record that General Eisenhower possesses any intimate knowledge of, or experience with, the great domestic problems facing our nation.

On international issues, he has dealt mainly with what he regards as mistakes made by the Democratic Administrations, while at the same time expressing views quite in keeping with the foreign policy of the Democratic Party.

In the domestic area, he has dealt in the campaign largely with fault-finding instead of clearly defining his specific views on the big issues.

He does not favor repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act, and its replacement by a new law. His expressed views to this convention coincide largely, if not entirely, with those expressed by Senator Taft after his conference with the General. His professed opposition to "compulsion" offers labor little comfort in the face of his general approval of this law which is permeated with compulsion of labor.

He says "America wants no law to license union busting" and he concedes that the Taft-Hartley Act "might be used to break unions." Yet he wants to keep the law, with only such changes as Senator Taft agrees to. Such a stand offers labor no solid assurance.

To the working people of this country, the public embrace of the Republican Presidential candidate and Senator Taft, the symbol of reaction, came as a shock. Gen. Eisenhower, who was built up as the champion of liberalism in the Republican Party, has also clasped to his bosom such notable reactionaries as Senators Kem, of Missouri; Cain, of Washington; Bricker, of Ohio; Jenner, of Indiana, and McCarthy of Wisconsin. This is indeed a sorry aggregation. Their professed views are contrary to Gen. Eisenhower's own expressed views and detrimental to the best interests of the American people. His support of such candidates destroys any possible notion that he could steer the Republican Party back to the path of liberalism.

Now let us give equally careful consideration to the Democratic Presidential candidate, Adlai E. Stevenson.

Gov. Stevenson has acquired knowledge, training and experience in the problems of government as the Chief Executive of a great State. He has shown himself throughout the campaign to be a man of courage, humility and integrity, as well as of great personal charm.

He told us forthrightly in his address to this convention that he is for repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act and its replacement with a new law that will deal fairly and justly with labor-management problems and protect the public interest.

His campaign has been marked by intelligent, specific discussion of campaign issues. He has not evaded. He has not equivocated.

The positive program outlined by Governor Stevenson before our convention and in previous campaign addresses offers hope to the American people because it is based upon the principle that the interests of the people are paramount.

In brief, he inspires our full confidence.

These are the facts as we see them. It now remains for us to act upon these facts in the interests of the 8 million members we represent, as well as in the interests of all the American people.

We must act here in full recognition of the fact that we are a voluntary organization, committed to the principles of democracy and individual freedom.

We emphasize that the affiliated unions of the American Federation of Labor and each and every one of their members are free to make their own individual political decisions without any compulsion on our part.

It is not our intention or desire to endorse any political party or to enter into partisan politics.

We must face the facts. We have an obligation to inform our members of the facts. Not only immediate considerations, but the entire future course of our country, require us to express our carefully considered choice as between the two Presidential candidates.

Fully conscious of our responsibility as trade union leaders and as Americans, we advise and urge each and every member of the American Federation of Labor to vote for Adlai E. Stevenson for President of the United States on Nov. 4.

Point Four Program (also see: Africa)

(Development of Under-Developed Areas of World) (1949, p. 450) In acting upon E. C. Report on Program for Technical Assistance to Under-Developed Countries, the convention unanimously approved the report of its committee:

Your Committee notes that the Executive Council deals with this problem. We support the Council's endorsement of President Truman's program "to help the free peoples of the world, through their own efforts, to produce more food, more clothing, more materials for housing, and more mechanical power to lighten their burdens," and thereby promote peace and "the freedom and dignity and fullness of life."

Hunger, social injustice, poverty, and despair are the strongest allies of dictatorship and war. The surest way of safeguarding democracy, security, and peace is to raise the standards of living of the peoples of the earth. As the leading democratic country and the nation with the highest industrial development, we have the greatest moral and material responsibility for helping the peoples of the world to harness modern technology in the service of human well-being, peaceful social progress, and international harmony.

The struggle between the forces of human freedom and the battalions of totalitarian despotism for the souls and minds of men is fast approaching the hour of decision. The American people are in a privileged position to help expand and improve the economic foundation for the democratic aspirations and cultural progress of the aroused peoples of Asia, Africa, and Latin America. Furthermore, American assistance to the economic and social development of these nations will not only fortify the cause of human liberty, but also enhance our own democratic vitality and prosperity. Hence, help in developing the under-developed areas is a decisive feature of our country's foreign policy and a powerful aid to the transformation of the UN into an effective instrument of world peace.

To improve the productive resources and the conditions of life and labor for more than half of the world's population is a task which involves far more than economic problems. Effective assistance must envisage not only technical aid and the provision of capital. "Point Four" carries with it social, cultural and international overtones of major import. Not only capital investment and technical "know how" are required. Human training and re-training are absolutely essential. Not only material but human resources will have to be planfully invested.

In this light, your Committee proposes that our government give favorable consideration to the following proposals as guiding lines for implementing and applying the great ideals and creative policy underlying President Truman's historic "Point Four":

1. Demonstrate to the peoples of the underdeveloped regions by our words and deeds that our interest in their well-being is free from any desire to exploit or oppress them or to seek any special privileges—extra-territorial rights or otherwise.

2. Have recipient as well as assisting nations cooperate in formulating plans and in contributing toward the development of suitable projects. This spirit of joint effort should be founded on the basis of the possibilities of providing for those commodities and those services most needed abroad and which neither displace nor disturb the resources of the other nation.

3. There should be no interference in each other's domestic affairs or political life and no infringement or violation of their respective sovereignty. Organizations or activities hostile to both nations are not to be encouraged or supported directly or indirectly.

4. Wherever possible and practical more than one country should be drawn into undertaking these developments. This can be done largely through the United Nations and its special agencies, but under no circumstances must the exercise of the veto power be permitted to paralyze or thwart operations.

5. The technical aid should be accompanied by measures for advancing the health, sanitary conditions, education, technical knowledge so as to employ a gradually rising proportion of skilled natives, vocational training and guidance, soil conservation, housing and the advancement of social standards and human rights. The native working population should be helped to learn the art of developing free and democratic trade unions, farmers' and consumers' organizations, as well as be trained in industrial and distributive efficiency.

6. A healthy social foundation and structure should be advanced. Not only must the assurance of democratic rights accompany industrial development, but the population must also share increasingly in the benefits of rising productivity and efficiency. The workers in each country must be guaranteed the right to organize into bona fide trade unions, a full opportunity for genuine collective bargaining, and minimum wages and decent working conditions in line with the standards established by the ILO. No racial discrimination or forced labor is to be tolerated.

7. Increasingly the dominant control and principal ownership of important projects should be placed in the hands of the country aided and in accord with the economic forms its own people democratically determine, so as to avoid the evils of absentee-ownership.

8. Our government should join with other governments in working out an international code to which the recipient nations shall subscribe so as to reduce, through international channels like the UN, to a minimum the present risks and difficulties of foreign investment—nationalization, exchange, and convertibility into the national currency of the investor. Reasonable guarantees must be provided for private investments, if this vast and vital reservoir of capital is to serve a healthy and a non-imperialist development of the countries still industrially under-developed.

9. In order to help insure the attainment of these goals and in order to insure maximum cooperation and support by the working people concerned in each instance, the respective free trade unions are to be adequately represented on all important planning and project commissions.

The natural resources of the earth must serve the good of the many and not be exploited for the gains of the privileged few or for the benefit of any despotic power hiding its quest for world domination behind a facade of high-sounding phrases and pseudo-racial promises.

(T. C. A.) (1954, page 379, 464) Res. 19:

RESOLVED, That this Seventy-third Annual Convention of the American Federation of Labor, assembled in Los Angeles, California, September, 1954, herewith, go on record in reaffirmation of its already expressed position of supporting the Point Four program, the policies of which are now being administered by the Technical Cooperation Administration as a method of enabling the natives of Asia and Africa to develop self-help to assist them in eliminating poverty, illiteracy, disease and the plague of landlordism; be it further

RESOLVED, That this Convention express its accord with the British government in extending recognition of self-determination to its former colonies, such as Pakistan, India, Ceylon, Burma and the Sudan; and its present policy of recognizing the right of West Africa, under the government of Nkrumah, and the right of Nigeria, under Azikiwi, to become self-governing political entities; and also applaud the United States in its humane, democratic and sound international policy toward the Philippines, as well as recognize the wisdom of the Dutch government in not attempting to block the nationalism of Indonesia for self-government; but urge the French government to recognize the inevitable growth and march of nationalism in Tunisia and Morocco, Algeria and Indo-China as self-governing, independent countries as a policy of humanity and justice, and in the interest of winning these peoples over as allies of the free world and against the march of the Soviet Union toward world conquest.

Poll Tax (Prerequisite for Voting) (1940, p. 81) In 1939 the A. F. of L. convention unanimously "declared its approval of the principle that all citizens, regardless of color or race, should be equally entitled to the full rights of adult suffrage". In conformity with this declaration the A. F. of L. worked for enactment of legislation to effectuate this principle. The E. C. in its report to the 1940 convention stated in part that "while it is generally assumed that payment of the poll tax as a prerequisite for voting in eight southern states is designed primarily to disfranchise the negroes, it has become evident that by the levy and manipulation of this tax white citizens in the low-income bracket, are being disfranchised in increasing numbers." At the time of the convention in 1940 no action had been taken on the proposed bill. Convention authorized continued efforts to secure enactment of the legislation.

(P. 512) Convention unanimously adopted the following resolution condemning the poll tax.

Whereas—Eight states in the Nation still have the archaic and undemocratic system of the poll tax which disfranchises both Negroes and poor Whites, thereby nullifying the political power of the workers in these southern states, and making a mockery of American democracy. Therefore be it

Resolved—That the Sixtieth Convention of the American Federation of Labor, assembled in New Orleans, go on record as condemning the poll tax and support the Geyer Poll Tax Bill and instruct President Green to send copies of this resolution to the members of the House and Senate, for the enactment of the anti-poll tax bill.

(1941, pp. 98, 601) The convention instructed the Executive Council to use its best endeavors to secure legislation to abolish the poll tax as a prerequisite to voting in public elections.

(1942, p. 159) H.R. 970 and 1024, H.J. Res. 112 and S. 1280, all designed to remedy the poll tax evil, are still pending in Congress. Further hearings were held March 12-14, 1942, by a subcommittee of the Senate Judiciary Committee on Senator Pepper's bill, S. 1280. It is estimated that about 7,000,000 people in eight southern states are barred from voting by the poll tax. At the 1940 Congressional elections an average of only 22,175 votes were cast in the 78 districts of the eight poll-tax states. In 347 districts of the non-poll tax states, an average of 128,901 votes were cast. A summary of the testimony so far submitted to Congress proves beyond a doubt that the poll tax in the eight southern states is retained not primarily as a revenue-raising device but rather for the purpose of disfranchising large numbers of voters, particularly the Negroes. Labor spokesmen and others who participated in the Senate hearings contend that the right of Congress to act to preserve the integrity of the ballot in federal elections by outlawing the tax requirement is established under Section IV of Article I of the Constitution of the United States. Moreover, since the poll tax requirements result in the abridgement of a federal right or privilege and involve class discrimination, Congress is justified by the Fourteenth Amendment in acting.

(P. 426) In acting upon Res. 114 calling on the A. F. of L. to record its opposition to the principle involved in the requirement of poll tax as a prerequisite to voting, the convention adopted the following:

The Executive Council again calls attention to the wide disparity in the percentage of votes in poll-tax states and in states where there is no poll tax. It also refers to the unquestionable constitutionality of federal legislation to abolish the poll tax as a prerequisite to participation in elections for federal offices.

The committee recommends that the Executive Council be instructed to continue its efforts to secure abolition of the poll tax as a requirement for eligibility to participate in all elections for public office.

(P. 595) The convention adopted Res. 107 calling for the abolition of the poll tax, and reaffirmed all previous actions of conventions of the A. F. of L. aimed to abolish poll tax.

(1943, pp. 86, 341) Under the caption "Poll Tax," the Executive Council reports the passage by the House of Representatives of a bill to make unlawful the imposition of a poll tax as a prerequisite to the right of suffrage. The bill is awaiting action by the Senate Committee.

Your committee commends the Executive Council for its support of this legislation and also commends the state federations of labor and city central bodies that have rendered yeoman service in crystalizing public sentiment in its behalf. We recommend that efforts be continued to secure its enactment.

(1944, pp. 70, 189, 414) Under the caption, "Poll Tax," the Executive Council reports that a bill to abolish the imposition of a poll tax as a prerequisite to the right of suffrage was passed by the House of Representatives and subsequently reported favorably to the Senate by the Judiciary Committee. Because of a determined filibuster and the failure of a motion for a cloture rule (requiring two-thirds vote) the bill was laid aside and no further action taken. None is likely in this session of Congress.

(Res. 98) :

Whereas—The previous conventions of the American Federation of Labor have gone on record condemning the poll tax as un-democratic, un-American and unjust, therefore, be it

Resolved—That this Convention of the American Federation of Labor, assembled in New Orleans, La., November, 1944, go on record as reaffirming its opposition to the poll tax and supporting federal legislation for its abolition.

In connection with the report of the Executive Council, your committee considered Resolution No. 98, which provides for reaffirmation by this convention of the action taken in numerous previous conventions in support of legislation to abolish the poll tax.

Racial Discrimination — (1940, pp. 489, 550) Two resolutions (Nos. 4 and 153) (both calling for the abolition of the poll tax, were unanimously adopted by the convention.

(P. 469) The recommendation of the Executive Council was for continued efforts to have the poll tax abolished. Unanimously approved by the convention.

(1947, p. 630) Three related resolutions, Nos. 12, 41 and 49, were considered by the convention which unanimously adopted No. 49 as representing the objective of all three. The resolution follows:

Whereas—The Sixty-fifth Convention of the American Federation of Labor, held in Chicago, Illinois, 1946, went on record as supporting a federal anti-poll tax law, therefore, be it

Resolved—That the American Federation of Labor go on record in the Sixty-sixth Convention at San Francisco as favoring the enactment of an anti-poll tax law to remove the unjust, unfair, and un-American discrimination against Negro and white workers in denying them the exercise of their right of suffrage.

(1948, pp. 235, 455) Res. 8 reaffirmed A. F. of L. position in opposition to poll tax and called on Congress to enact legislation abolishing said tax as an "evil in American life."

(1950, pp. 324, 485) Res. 98 reaffirmed the established position of the A. F. of L. in opposition to the poll tax and called upon the E.C. to use its influence on behalf of anti-poll tax legislation.

Portal-to-Portal Law (also see: Fair Labor Standards)—(1947, p. 220) This Act was passed ostensibly to relieve employers of liability arising from the claims brought under the Fair Labor Standards Act by employees in many manufacturing plants for back pay due them as overtime compensation for time spent traveling between the entrance to the employer's property and the actual place of work. These claims were filed as a result of the Supreme Court decision of June 1946, in the Mt. Clemens Pottery case, holding that such travel time and other time spent in such activities as washing and changing clothes constituted "work" and was therefore subject to regulations regarding overtime, unless the time involved was trifling.

The A. F. of L. strongly opposed the institution of such suits for back pay by its affiliated unions. In a letter to all national and international unions on January 14, 1947, President Green stated:

It is the long-established policy of the American Federation of Labor to rely upon collective bargaining through direct negotiations between unions and employers to settle differences between them regarding wages, hours and working conditions of the workers concerned. What constitutes time worked for the purpose of figuring straight-time and overtime compensation can best be determined by Labor and management over the bargaining table.

Because of the flood of these suits brought by C.I.O. affiliates, employers turned to Congress to gain immunity from any liability they may have incurred. However, the legislation finally adopted by Congress goes far beyond the questions of portal-to-portal pay. The statute in fact constitutes an attack upon the country's basic wage and hour standards and strips the worker receiving substandard wages of much of the protection he previously had enjoyed.

The provisions of the law to which the A. F. of L. most strenuously objected included the following: a "good faith" provision whereby employer^s may avoid compliance if they can show that they have relied on a previous ruling or statement by government officials; the setting of a federal statute of limitations for all wage and hour claims at two years; permitting court judgments for back pay to be compromised and thus opening the way for employer pressure on employees to effect a compromise settlement; and the vagueness of the provisions regarding "portal-to-portal" pay which make it possible to deny to employees payment for many legitimate activities for which they have regularly received compensation.

The enforcement and interpretation of this statute is bound to require at least several years of administrative determination and court action. Under this Act, special importance is given to the rulings, interpretations and decisions of the Wage and Hour Administrator under both the Fair Labor Standards Act and the Public Contracts Act, and of the Secretary of Labor under the Bacon-Davis Act. Consequently, it is exceedingly important that these officials review all existing rulings and interpretations in order that no loophole may be left under which an employer could avoid the law by claiming that he acted in "good faith" by relying on an administrative action. Several steps in this direction have already been taken by the Wage and Hour Administrator. Administrative rulings made thus far regarding coverage of the Act are commendable. We urge that the Administrator carry forward this review of existing regulations in order that the rights of workers under the Acts be fully protected.

In addition, the nature of the new law places special responsibility upon unions. In considering whether such activity as travel time, washup time, rest periods, and the like is subject to the Act, and therefore to the overtime regulations, great emphasis is placed on the custom or practice prevailing in the plant, and particularly whether this custom or practice has been incorporated into collective agreements. We urge all affiliated unions to make certain that effective provisions relating to plant practices regarding travel time, rest and lunch periods, etc., are fully incorporated into the union agreement.

It is important that organized labor understand that there is nothing in the new law which prohibits a union from seeking improvements in the wage and hour standards through negotiations with the employers concerned. Moreover, since the enforcement of the minimum wage laws has been constantly weakened by this new Act, unions must be prepared to rely more heavily on collective bargaining for enforcement of wage, hour and overtime standards instead of relying upon law.

It is important for unions to press in negotiations for clearly-worded contract provisions to cover all conditions of work under which any wage payment or overtime compensation is required. This calls for explicit clauses covering Saturday, Sunday and holiday work; work on the sixth or seventh consecutive day; payment for time spent traveling to and from the plant gate; payment for rest, lunch or other non-productive periods; payment for time while machine operations are suspended for any reason; and "call-in" pay which is guaranteed any employee if he reports to work but no work is available.

By these actions, unions can break the destructive impact of the new law upon wage and hour standards. However, the portal-to-portal law remains essentially pernicious and must be repealed at the earliest possible moment.

Post Office Employees (also see: Government Employees, Longevity Pay)

Temporary and/or Substitute—(1939, p. 424) Res. 59 reaffirmed position of the A. F. of L. on legislation for postal substitute employees as follows:

Whereas—Substitute postal employees must qualify to perform the same duties as regular postal employees, but must be available for duty at any time, day or night, 365 days a year, having no regular schedules and being paid only for the actual hours worked; and

Whereas—The period of substitution, in many instances, extends over many years; and

Whereas—Substitute postal employees receive no higher rate of hourly pay, regardless of length of service; therefore be it

Resolved—That this 59th Convention of the American Federation of Labor record its endorsement of legislation to grant these employees a graduated scale of hourly pay commensurate with the hourly rates of pay of regular employees based upon length of actual service; and be it further

Resolved—That the Executive Council be instructed to support the efforts of the affiliated postal employees to secure appropriate legislation to correct the condition brought about by restrictive rulings of the comptroller General on the law granting annual and sick leave to substitutes.

(P. 424) Res. 57, concurred in by the convention, as follows:

Whereas—The employment of non-certified temporary employees in the postal service is a menace to the maintenance of civil service and tends to retard appointments to regular positions; and

Whereas—The Post Office Department has cooperated in an effort to reduce the employment of temporary, non-certified employees; therefore be it

Resolved—That the American Federation of Labor in this its 59th Annual Convention, assert its disapproval of the employment of temporary non-certified civil service employees in the postal service except during bona fide emergencies; and be it further

Resolved—That the Post Office Department be commended for its efforts to eliminate the use of temporary employees in the postal service; and be it further

Resolved—That the Executive Council be instructed to cooperate with the affiliated organizations of postal employees in securing from the Congress of the United States appropriations sufficient to make possible regular appointments in adequate numbers to meet the service needs.

(1940, p. 513) Convention adopted a resolution condemning practice of Post Office Department in employment of non-certified workers except in emergencies.

Philippine Employees, Citizenship for—(1941, pp. 254, 549) The convention referred the following resolution to the Executive Council:

Whereas—The Chicago Post Office Clerks Union, Local 1, has many members of Filipino nationality, and

Whereas—These Filipino members of Local No. 1 have helped and supported unions in government industry throughout the years, and

Whereas—The Filipino post office employees have many years of service and their livelihood and existence is dependent upon their continued employment as Civil Service employees, and

Whereas—They have contributed their labor and loyalty to the government, and

Whereas—Filipinos are denied the privilege of American citizenship and their future status as government employees is endangered, notwithstanding the fact that many of them have been in the government service for 25 years, and

Whereas—Many legislators have introduced and supported legislation in the halls of Congress extending citizenship to these faithful public servants; therefore, be it

Resolved—That the American Federation of Labor in convention assembled go on record as favoring legislation that will grant citizenship to Filipino employees of the government.

(1941, pp. 266, 271, 278, 607) Resolutions were submitted to the convention similar in intent and having as their objective prohibition of the employment of uncertified temporary employees in the postal service except during real emergencies.

The convention concurred in these resolutions.

Longevity Pay—(1942, pp. 155, 605)

Acting upon a brief legislative report on the subject of the veto of a proposed bill providing for increases in pay of postal employees "as recognition of long and efficient service, the convention adopted the following:

. . . The bill, as passed, was far short of the desires of postal employees but would have established the principle of longevity pay for that group of government employees, a principle that has been a practice in numerous other government employments as well as in a great many private employments.

It is recommended that this objective of the postal employees be again endorsed and the Executive Council instructed to lend its support to like legislation when again introduced.

Substitute Clerks—(p. 612) Resolutions were considered by the convention dealing with the problem of filling vacancies in the postal service by qualified substitute employees. The objectives of the two resolutions (Nos. 115 and 124) called for legislation. The convention concurred in Res. 115 as follows:

Whereas—Lines of communication are all important in the defense of the country and in the conduct of the war, and

Whereas—The Post Office Department has traditionally and consistently maintained lines of communication under all conditions, and

Whereas—An exceptionally heavy burden falls on the San Francisco post office because of its strategic position in the first line of defense and also as the port of embarkation in the present crisis, and

Whereas—Many trained men in the San Francisco post office have volunteered or have been called into the armed forces of the country and many more will be called, and

Whereas—Increased retirement deductions reduce the hourly rate of pay for qualified and trained substitutes with years of service to 62 cents per hour, and

Whereas—Conditions of employment in private industry are very much more attractive than in the postal service and many trained men are leaving the postal service to take up employment in private industry, and

Whereas—The loss of the services of those trained men who have left the postal service has not been replaced except by untrained temporary help, and the result that overtime is excessive, and

Whereas—The Post Office Department has adopted a policy of withholding the filling of vacancies in the service by normal causes, such as death and retirements, and

Whereas—It is most unfair to the qualified substitutes in the postal service to withhold their deserved promotion to regular positions left vacant by normal causes, and

Whereas—The Honorable Thomas E. Scanlon, Representative in Congress from Pennsylvania, has introduced a bill, H.R. 7404, which provides that all regular vacancies in the postal service shall be promptly filled by promotion of eligible substitutes, and which further provides that vacancies occurring as a result of employees entering the armed forces shall be filled by eligible substitutes on a provisional basis for the duration of the war, therefore, be it

Resolved—That the American Federation of Labor recognize the advisability of maintaining a highly efficient postal system in these times of great stress, and does hereby petition the Postmaster General of the United States to take immediate steps to fill all legitimate existing vacancies in the regular clerical force in all post offices with qualified substitute employees, and be it further

Resolved—That the American Federation of Labor endorse the aforementioned H.R. 7404, and does petition the House Post Office and Post Roads Committee immediately render a favorable report on this bill.

Promotions—(1942, p. 623) The convention unanimously adopted Resolution No. 123 favoring the establishment of civil service examinations for all promotions within the postal service.

Retirement—(1942, p. 623) The convention unanimously adopted Res. 122 which called for an amendment to the retirement plan for postal employees which would provide for optional retirement after 30 years service, regardless of age or roster title.

Non-Civil Service—(1944, p. 423) Res. 63:

Resolved—That the American Federation of Labor in this, its Sixty-fourth Annual Convention, assert its disapproval of the employment of temporary non-certified civil service employees in the postal service except during bona fide emergencies, and be it further

Resolved—That prompt steps be taken to replace all temporary or non-certified employees with regular certified civil service employees not later than six months following the end of the present war.

This resolution requests that this convention assert its disapproval of the employment in the postal service of temporary non-certified employees except in times of actual emergency and then only for limited periods; and further, that the employment of temporary non-certified employees be discontinued not later than six months after termination of the present war.

(1947, p. 540) Convention unanimously adopted Res. 168, reaffirming position of A. F. of L. disapproving employment of temporary non-certified employees in the postal service except during bona fide emergencies, and asking that prompt steps be taken to replace all such employees in the postal service as soon as practical.

Seniority Rights—(1947, p. 548) Res. 86 was unanimously adopted as follows:

Whereas—Under the administration of U.S. Public Law 134, senior postal employees are not given full credit for years of long and faithful service, and

Whereas—These employees who have given a greater part of their lives to the postal service and many of them will not remain in the service long enough to secure all the benefits of the present law, therefore, be it

Resolved—That the American Federation of Labor, in convention assembled, endorse legislation to amend the present salary laws to give full credit to senior postal employees for years of service rendered, and that they be placed in the salary bracket to which they would be entitled for their full years of service, and be it further

Resolved—That the 66th Convention of the American Federation of Labor endorse efforts to have suitable legislation enacted in regard to this problem.

This resolution calls for the support of the American Federation of Labor in securing the enactment of legislation amending present law to give full credit to senior postal employees for years of service rendered, and that they be placed in the salary bracket to which they would be entitled for their full years of service.

(Civil Service Status, Post War)—(1947, p. 549) The convention unanimously adopted Res. 98 favoring return to a strict civil service status in the employment of post office personnel as soon as possible inasmuch as the war emergency had passed.

Substitute Status for Rural Letter Carriers—(1947, p. 538) The convention unanimously endorsed Res. 165, as follows:

Whereas—Substitutes in the rural delivery service in the Post Office Department do not have the protection of civil service, and

Whereas—This denies them privileges that they should be entitled to and defeats the effectiveness of the merit system, therefore, be it

Resolved—That the American Federation of Labor in convention assembled endorses legislation giving rural carrier substitutes a civil service status and grants annual leave and sick leave as contained in bills S. 202 and H.R. 1187 now pending before the Congress.

This resolution endorses legislation giving rural letter carrier substitutes a civil service status and granting them annual and sick leave.

Training Period—(1951, pp. 301, 511) Res. 64 called attention to the lengthy apprenticeship training period of postal employees and requested the A. F. of L. to go on record for an adjustment of this situation.

Union Recognition—(1952, pp. 68, 534) Res. 125:

Whereas—The Post Office and Civil Service Committee of the House of Representatives has recognized the need for union recognition for postal employees, and

Whereas—The antiquated Labor-management relations employed by the Post Office Department continues to result in poor morale, therefore, be it

Resolved—That the American Federation of Labor assembled in convention favors legislation which will provide for union recognition for postal employees, and a board of arbitration which will be authorized to investigate, consider and make final decision on complaints by employees relative to working conditions and administrative acts of their official superiors, and to interpret laws governing employee welfare or working conditions, and direct administrative procedure to be followed when a dispute exists between the management and the employees relative to the administration of said laws, and be it further

Resolved—That this National Board of Arbitration shall consist of three members, an employee representative, a management representative and a neutral representative.

Union Recognition and Arbitration Machinery—(1953, pp. 447, 609) Res. 133:

Resolved—That the American Federation of Labor, assembled in convention at St. Louis, Missouri, favors legislation which will provide for union recognition for postal employees and a board of arbitration which will be authorized to investigate, consider and make final decision on complaints by employees relative to working conditions and administrative acts of their official superiors, and to interpret laws governing employee welfare and working conditions, and direct administrative procedure to be followed when a dispute exists between the management and the employees relative to the administration of said laws and be it further

Resolved—That this National Board of Arbitration shall consist of three members, an employee representative, a management representative and a neutral representative.

(1954, pp. 407, 593) Res. 92:

Whereas—The Lloyd-LaFollette Act of 1912 repealed the vicious "Gag Orders" previously issued by President Theodore Roosevelt, which prohibited postal employees from contacting their Congressmen for improved working conditions, and

Whereas—Over forty years have intervened during which no additional or specific recognition has ever been accorded postal unions, despite the tremendous development of organized labor in private industry, and

Whereas—Postal employees and their unions are still dependent upon the good graces of Post Office Department officials for certain privileges considered basic to other unions, therefore, be it

Resolved—That this convention, assembled in the City of Los Angeles, instruct the officers of the American Federation of Labor to support legislation which would: (1) grant union recognition for postal employees, (2) compel the Post Office Department to consult postal unions on all matters affecting working conditions, (3) provide for punitive action against supervisors who disregard the law, (4) establish an impartial board for the arbitration of disputes, and (5) secure all basic trade union rights other than the right to strike.

Seniority Rights—(pp. 407, 593) Res. 94 called attention to laxity in seniority procedures in post office service and authorized A. F. of L. to seek legislation accomplishing seniority rights by law for postal employees.

Post Office Officials (Fair Labor Policy)—(1940, p. 416) The convention concurred in a resolution introduced into the 1940 convention commending the Post Office Department officials for their fair and progressive attitude on personnel relationships and urge that they impress upon administrative officials in the field service the duty and responsibility of practical observance of the principles of collective bargaining.

The resolution also expresses the hope that similar personnel relationships may be established in all government establishments where they do not now exist.

Orders of Postmaster General Condemned—(1950, p. 334) Res. 123:

Whereas—On October 27, 1949, and again on April 17, 1950, the Postmaster General of the United States issued orders which, (1) expanded the duties of unskilled employees to include duties previously performed only by skilled employees paid at a higher rate, and (2) eliminated and curtailed postal services to the detriment of the American public and to the grievous injury of all postal employees, respectively, therefore be it

Resolved—That the 69th Convention of the American Federation of Labor condemn both of these orders of the Postmaster General on the grounds that they are not in the interest of the American public and are destructive of the working conditions and standards of all postal employees as well, and call upon the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor to take such steps as may be necessary to cause the early rescinding of these obnoxious orders by either administrative or legislative action.

(P. 488) In recommending the adoption of this resolution your committee urges the President and the Congress to take immediate steps to restore previous postal service in the United States. It is imperative that we have a strong, efficient, dependable postal service in time of war as well as in time of peace. We are all thrilled by the striking recent successes of the American troops in Korea. Success was attained by the simple manner of cutting the vital life line of communication of the North Korean troops. We cannot afford to permit our lines of communication to be severed either from within or from without. It is absolutely necessary that the President and Congress take immediate steps to rescind the April 17th order of the Postmaster General if our artery of communication is to remain strong.

Postal Legislation Needed—(1927, p. 251) The A. F. of L., reaffirming its pronouncements that the postal service should be operated for service and not for profit, hereby records itself in favor of legislation to have the Congress declare a definite postal policy to such effect; and the E.C. is hereby instructed to cooperate with the affiliated postal organizations in aid of the enactment of this proposed legislation. The explanation for the legislation was given as follows:

The Post Office Department is now called upon to perform many services that are not particularly postal in their character, and for which the service gets no credit from a fiscal standpoint. For instance, the postal service performs work for the Department of Agriculture, it performs work for the Civil Service Commission, it distributes throughout the length and breadth of the land franked matter and penalty matter for all the departments of the government amounting in the aggregate to some $15,000,000 a year. All of these various charges react against the postal employees in this respect: That the department, or rather the administration, has laid down the dictum that the service must be financially self-sustaining.

Consequently, when the employees seek wage increases or other improvements in working conditions, they are told by the administration that if these things will create a postal deficit they are inadvisable and they should not be enacted into law. In short, they are expected to advocate an increase in postal rates.

Service Cutback—(1950, p. 157) During the year, the Postmaster General summarily reduced the number of mail deliveries to other than strictly business district areas, thus imposing hardships on residential zones and on commercial patrons whose activities are removed from the center of the business districts.

The immediate consequence was the saddling of heavier duties on postal employees and the discharging of a large number of postal employees whose services and reliability were without the slightest question.

Although hearings were limited to one Congressional Committee, we wholeheartedly backed every move taken by the postal unions, in Executive Council action, in contact work with both houses of the Congress, in issuing releases and in other ways.

We recognized this reduction in postal service as a direct threat of our American institutions, the primary one of which is communications. As a matter of fact, we favor expansion of postal service, rather than the short-sighted policy of taking away from the people of these United States those government facilities for which they pay and pay well.

(1952, p. 245) In its report to the convention, the Executive Council reported continued efforts to secure restoration of mail delivery service. This was in conformity with action of the previous convention of the A. F. of L. held in San Francisco.

(1954, pp. 390, 391, 593) Res. 54 and 57 were identical:

Whereas—Postal service continues to be substandard because of apparently lowered residential delivery objectives of the Post Office Department and because of the Postmaster General's curtailment order of April 17, 1950, therefore, be it

Resolved—The 73rd Annual Convention of the American Federation of Labor advocates that there be instituted an adequate number of residential postal deliveries and particularly that earliest possible mail transmittal be accomplished through the full use of existing or available facilities for in-transit distribution.

Postal Rates—(1926, p. 234) The A. F. of L. protests against any further increase in the postal rates on printed matter. It also reiterates its former declaration that the postal service should primarily be a social and service agency rather than a revenue producing institution.

Postal Savings—(1954, p. 530) The Executive Council reported diligent efforts to prevent the enactment of legislation designed to abolish the postal savings system. The convention unanimously adopted the following committee report and recommendations:

We commend the officers of the Federation of Labor for taking the lead in killing legislation designed to abolish the postal savings system. We are convinced that the postal savings system plays an important role in providing a depository for tens of thousands of our citizens who prefer to have their money held by the government. The system also provides banking facilities in some areas where no other bank is available. We regret that the administration has seen fit to curtail the number of depository facilities and recommend that proper presentation be made to the Post Office Department to restore facilities which have been closed.

We want also to point out that the amount of savings in the banks has been reduced by well over $1 billion and to correct this reduction, it is suggested that the limitation of individual deposit of $2,500.00 be increased.

(1955, p. 147) The E.C. reported on the introduction of a number of legislative bills designed to either abolish the Postal Savings System or to set up restrictions against the small thrift depositors. This section of the report concluded: "So long as the public wants this facility, it is our belief it should continue to have it without restrictions despite protests from the Hoover Commission or the bankers."

Postmasters, Inclusion Under Civil Service (see: Civil Service)

Post-War Planning (see: War (Post))

Pottery Importation (also see: Tariff)—1954, pp. 449, 491) Res. 135:

Whereas—The imports of pottery have deprived many of our members of jobs or placed them on shortened work-weeks, and

Whereas—Imports come from countries where wages are far below our own, ranging from a quarter to a tenth of the wages received by our members, and

Whereas—These lower wages result in lower rates and thus confer a great competitive advantage upon imports, and

Whereas—Wage costs represent from 60 to 70% of the cost of production because of the large amount of hand-work involved in pottery manufacturing, and

Whereas—Our membership faces economic disaster if the inroads of imported pottery upon the domestic market is not halted, and

Whereas—Competition varies greatly, depending upon the source of the imports, and

Whereas—The United States Tariff Commission found such a difference in cost of production between domestic and Japanese pottery that a duty of 249% would be required to equalize costs, and

Whereas—Such a rate of duty would have an appearance of exorbitance and would in fact be higher than necessary with respect to imports from other countries, thus rendering the tariff an improper instrumentality of regulating pottery imports, therefore, be it

Resolved—That the American Federation of Labor lend its support to the efforts of the International Brotherhood of Operative Potters to obtain through official federal channels the imposition or reasonable import quotas on the imports of pottery, and be it further

Resolved—That such import quotas be based upon imports of recent years and the quantities reduced to a percentage of total domestic consumption, this percentage to represent the share of the market that may be supplied by imports in future years and thus insuring against the destruction of our market and the progressive deprivation of jobs to our membership.

Poultry Inspection, Compulsory—(1954, pp. 381, 460) Res. 25:

Whereas—Recent disclosures to the Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen reveal the shocking existence of filth, unwholesomeness and the utter lack of sanitation in certain areas of the poultry industry, and

Whereas—At the present time there exists no compulsory federal regulations governing the slaughtering, inspection, grading, labeling, processing, or handling of poultry, as is true in the case of beef, pork, veal and other meats and meat products, and

Whereas—Only very few states have any poultry regulations or inspection program whatever, and

Whereas—Less than 20% of the commercial poultry supply of the nation comes under federal inspection and then only on a voluntary basis, which in many respects is absolutely meaningless, and

Whereas—The Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen and its affiliated local unions have pledged themselves to the task of arousing the American people to the great hazard to health and welfare of the consuming public that exists in this poultry situation, and

Whereas—The support and cooperation of Congress, the state legislatures, municipal officers, and every group of consumers in the nation, especially organized labor, is earnestly solicited in this cleanup drive and campaign for effective compulsory poultry regulation and inspection not only on the federal, but on the state and local levels as well, therefore, be it

Resolved—That the American Federation of Labor go on record endorsing the poultry cleanup campaign launched by the Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen, and be it further

Resolved—That this Federation and its affiliated international unions, at the earliest opportunity, take such other legitimate steps within its power, as may be necessary to aid in the success of this worthy project in the interest of the health and welfare of the entire nation.

(1955, p. 81) Our Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen of North America has worked constantly on an educational campaign to bring about poultry inspection to minimize health standards in the industry and to consumers. Many of our state federations of Labor and other affiliated bodies have recorded their support of this campaign.

The American Federation of Labor is actively assisting legislatively.

Poultry is the third most valuable agricultural product. Last year, 1,050,000,000 broilers were raised commercially and 61 million turkeys marketed.

Red meat inspection has been carried on rigidly for many years with federal inspectors stationed along the line to guard the national health. Poultry inspection today is only a voluntary undertaking with the processors conducting their own inspections wherever done.

Steps have been taken to get serious and genuine poultry inspections inaugurated and carried on without diminution constantly. If in order to bring this about, a congressional examination into conditions is the only recourse, it may well be that this will happen.

Power, Reclamation, Irrigation, Flood Control—(1948, p. 133) All projects for these purposes are naturally inter-related because of water. The control of floods provides water for irrigation and for generating large quantities of power and prevents erosion of soil from fertile farm lands. Misused grazing lands, mountains stripped of timber, and eroding farms contribute largely to floods. As stated before, all of these things are inter-related and numerous projects similar to TVA should be inaugurated to preserve the natural resources of the country.

During 1947, on many occasions, the U.S. House of Representatives went on record in favor of heavy cuts in the appropriations for reclamation but the Senate invariably restored them in full or at least in part, and as a rule a compromise was agreed upon above that originally approved by the House without a roll call vote. In 1947, the House voted a 50 percent reduction in appropriations for western reclamation projects and as a result, members from western states, in both parties, were so enraged that the Senate restored most of the cuts and the increases voted by the Senate were accepted by the House without a record vote.

In a deficiency bill later passed, the House added additional funds and actually brought the total appropriations for reclamation above the original budget figures, also without a record vote.

The power interests, of course, are opposed to such power developments under Federal control as TVA, and when an amendment was offered to the appropriations for TVA (H.R. 6481) for $4,000,000 to provide an auxiliary steam plant to New Johnsonville, Tenn, it was rejected on May 11, 1948.

On June 19, an amendment was offered to agree to a Senate amendment increasing TVA appropriations approximately $3,500,000 and also to agree to the Senate amendment providing the $4,000,000 for the steam plant at New Johnsonville.

This vote, particularly on the $4,000,000 for the New Johnsonville steam plant, was recognized as a test of strength on power policy and groups from far outside the Tennessee Valley sought to win Congress over to their viewpoint against the plant and did so, as Congress finally rejected the appropriations for the plant by a very close vote.

Private power interests are opposed to Government projects furnishing power as it serves as a yardstick and keeps the cost of electrical power within the bounds of reason.

An additional reason for the erection of dams is for the conservation of water as in some of the far western states the water table is 60 feet below the level of 25 years ago, as water has been pumped off faster than it is replaced.

The Bonneville Dam and the Grand Coulee Dam are examples of the value of low-cost electricity as without them new industries would not have been located in the northwestern states.

It is recommended that labor be alert in regard to the activities of the Power Lobby to hamper such projects and that our support be continued for such projects.

(P. 396) The general good of our citizens everywhere will be furthered when effectuation of these public welfare objectives are attained. We respectfully request the Executive Council to follow through in these purposes.

President and Vice President (U. S.), Salaries and Quarters for V. P.—(1948, pp. 333, 476) The A. F. of L. adopted Res. 129, urging Congress to pass legislation increasing the salary of the Vice President by $30,000, making his salary $50,000, favoring a salary increase in the salary of the President to $100,000; and consideration of suitable living quarters for the Vice President as soon as possible.

Press, Labor (also see: Public Relations)—(1944, p. 215) Another important medium for the expression of Labor's news and views which the Executive Council is determined to expand and strengthen in the near future is the Labor Press. The services of the Labor Press in promulgating and promoting Labor's varied war activities and the national war effort constitute a major contribution to the welfare of America and its workers.

The Executive Council wishes to go beyond its annual expressions of gratitude to the bona fide Labor Press which upholds the philosophy of the American Federation of Labor. It wishes to supplement its good will toward the Labor Press with concrete action which will strengthen the position and broaden the influence of these loyal publications.

However, the exigencies of wartime conditions appear to prevent putting any really effective plans into action immediately. The special committee to investigate ways and means whereby the American Federation of Labor can render more substantial assistance to the Labor Press is expected to recommend certain measures which can be acted upon now and to prepare a broader and more comprehensive plan to be put into operation when peace comes. The Executive Council pledges its full cooperation in the furtherance of every practical step to provide new opportunities for the growth and development of the bona fide Labor Press.

(P. 591) The convention unanimously approved committee report on the general subject of public relations via publicity, radio and the labor press, including the following:

It is the opinion of your committee that the immediate period following peace will require further reaching and more widespread public relations than heretofore. Unquestionably public relations has become one of the outstanding requirements of our trade union movement.

Your committee recommends that the E.C. review the entire question of publicity and public relations in all of its aspects, so that a program may be approved and set into action which will give the most effective publicity relations possible.

Press Service for Armed Forces—
(1943, pp. 209, 412)

Resolved—That this Sixty-third Convention of the American Federation of Labor instruct the Executive Council to plan and prepare a Labor Press Service to be sent as a regular mailing to union members and their relatives in the Armed Forces presenting the true picture of the contribution of American Labor to the War effort.

Your committee is favorably impressed by the purpose of the resolution, and believes that every practical step should be taken to carry its intent into operation. With this comment your committee recommends that the resolution be referred to the Executive Council for investigation, and such action as will materially assist in placing the purpose of the resolution into effect.

(1944, p. 555) Res. 148, referred to previous convention action as follows:

Whereas—The 63rd annual convention of the American Federation of Labor in session in Boston, Massachusetts, unanimously adopted a resolution calling for the establishment of an A. F. of L. Labor Press Service for the men and women in the armed forces in order to combat the vicious anti-labor propaganda to which our troops are being subjected, and

Whereas—The Resolutions Committee of the 63rd convention stated that "Your committee is favorably impressed by the purpose of this resolution, and believes that every step should be taken to carry its intent into operation . . . With this comment your committee recommends that the resolution be referred to the Executive Council," and

Whereas—During the past year not enough has been done to carry out this mandate of the Boston convention while villification of labor's contribution to the war effort has reached a new high, therefore, be it

Resolved—That the Executive Council at its next session form and empower a special committee to cooperate with all national and international unions, state and central bodies of the American Federation of Labor to deal with this serious problem.

Your committee recommends that the resolution be referred to the Executive Council for consideration and action.

Price Control and Rationing (also see: Wages; Cost of Living; Rent Control)

Subsidies—(1942, pp. 210, 413) Res. 113:

Resolved—That this convention of the American Federation of Labor pledge to our President, Franklin D. Roosevelt, its full cooperation and support of his administration by aiding in the establishment of adequate subsidies and the effort of the O.P.A. is making to roll back prices, to the end that our efforts will be crowned with Victory, and the war will end with the complete destruction of the anti-democratic forces which are seeking to enslave the free peoples of the world, and be it further Resolved—That a copy of this resolution be sent to President Roosevelt.

(1942, p. 210) In its annual report, the E.C. reported on the development of price control and rationing as a war measure. The report stated in part: "By the summer of 1941 prices were getting out of hand. The threat of a runaway inflation became real, yet no effective controls to check price rises in the major industries were applied under the President's emergency powers. . . ." A chronological report of the development of a national price control and rationing system was presented to the convention. The Federation "strongly urged an aggressive rationing policy which would assure equal and just distribution of consumer goods in which scarcities developed or threatened."

(P. 225) . . . Although it must be noted that the function of the civilian defense councils in connection with the war price and rationing boards is simply to make recommendations, it must also be noted that fair Labor representation on all war price and rationing boards is of special interest to Labor. The local defense councils throughout the country have been asked to make recommendations on board membership to the Office of Price Administration. In its communication covering the qualifications and duties of board members, the Office of Price Administration has stated "membership of the individual boards should include members from Labor and, where appropriate, members from agriculture. In the selection of labor and farmer members the nominating body should consult the recognized state and local organizations of labor and farmers".

Office of Price Administration (O. P. A.—Labor Policy)—(1942, p. 214) "From its inception until June, 1942, the Office of Price Administration dealt with vital questions of economic policy without any Labor consultation, Labor participation, or Labor representation. In the summer of 1941 a Special Assistant to the Administrator attempted to achieve a measure of consultation with representatives of organized labor in the formation of broad policies of what was then the Office of Price Administration and Civilian Supply. His efforts, however, did not meet with the top administrative approval, and he was transferred to another agency. Thus, in the two years beginning with the Office of the Commissioner in Charge of Price Stabilization in the National Defense Advisory Commission in May, 1940, Labor was not afforded any means whatever for representation or participation in the administration of price and consumer policies.

As the result of a concerted drive for Labor representation made by the American Federation of Labor in May, 1942, a Labor Policy Committee was formed within the OPA and began its work on June 22, 1942. The Committee consisted of three representatives each of the American Federation of Labor, railroad unions and the CIO.

Shortly before the Labor Policy Committee was formed a Labor Office was established on the staff of the OPA. Characteristic of the OPA attitude was the fact that the posts of the Director, Assistant Director and principal staff members of the Labor Office were filled by the Administrator without consultation with organized labor.

Although it was clear from the outset that it was not the intention of the OPA Administrator to invest the Labor Policy Committee with policy-making, or consultative responsibility of any importance, the Committee insisted that it must be given the right of prior consultation on all major questions of policy as a condition of its continuance. The Committee established its right to designate its own officers and secured from the Administrator directive to his staff that major policy decisions and regulations be cleared with the Committee. Three liaison officers were appointed on the staff of the Labor Office on designation of the respective labor organizations to keep in touch with administrative developments under the supervision of the Labor Policy Committee.

One of the major concerns of the Committee was the provision of adequate Labor representation on war price and rationing boards and in state and regional OPA offices. Administrative Letter No. 3, dealing with the organization of the local war price and rationing boards, was sent out by the Administrator requesting that provision be made for local Labor representation. This letter did not prove to be effective, and the Labor Policy Committee finally secured a commitment from the Administrator providing for a full measure of Labor representation as a matter of OPA policy. It was agreed that a definite schedule would be followed in making sure that Labor representation was provided in one group of states after another. Since nominations to local war price and rationing boards are normally made by the local defense councils, the Labor Policy Committee conferred with the Director of the Office of Civilian Defense and secured from him a promise of full assistance, provided a clear-cut statement of policy to this effect would be forthcoming from the OPA Administrator. It was only after these arrangements had been completed that the program of local Labor representation was put under way. An agreement was also reached with the Administrator that two Labor representatives will be appointed in each of the eight regional offices and at least one Labor representative in each state OPA office.

The Labor Policy Committee appointed subcommittees on labor representation and rationing boards; tire, gasoline and automobile rationing; rent control; and consumer problems. Several subcommittees were also created for particular industries in which problems of direct interest to Labor had developed.

Of primary concern to the Labor Policy Committee was the relation of the price control policy to wages. In a stormy session with the Administrator, the Committee challenged the OPA procedures through which price regulations proved in effect wage-freezing devices. The Committee asked the Administrator to place on record a straight and unequivocal statement of policy with regard to the relation of price control to wage fixing. Having promised such a statement to the Committee, the Administrator evaded this request on the pretext that policy would depend on the Presidential determination of this issue. As the President's policy was already clearly set forth on April 27 and reiterated on September 7, the result was that the OPA policy toward wages was maintained and in practice continuously carried out without a policy statement to the Committee or clearance with it. This issue of basic policy which the OPA Administrator failed to meet with his own Labor Policy Committee greatly impaired the effectiveness of Labor participation and cooperation with the entire OPA program. This development was all the more unfortunate because of the sincere and patriotic desire on the part of labor organizations throughout the nation to utilize to the maximum their organizational channels to achieve the most effective stabilization of the nation's wartime economy through democratic means.

(P. 519) The Executive Council report gives a detailed account of the development of price and rent control agencies and with changes in the basic policies of the Price Control Administrator. We commend this record to all unions for careful reading to inform them of the background, the basic issues, and the administrative approach of this agency. Control over civilian prices which include all costs up to the point of sale, present a temptation to a controller to reach into the causes of price control and to attempt to regulate more than prices. However, that is not the intent of the Price Control Act and issues of jurisdiction have been at least temporarily clarified and the field limited to prices of civilian goods.

Your committee wishes to point out the essential differences between price control and rationing. One deals only with commodities while the other extends to human living and regulates daily habits. One is a technical field and the other is concerned with human values. The decision to ration a commodity may be made to support price stabilization, but the rationing of the commodities requires entirely different rationing techniques.

To be effective rationing must be carried out through a cooperative partnership between the Government and the citizens who shall have proportional representation in the administration of rationing. Up to the present time there are only approximately 1,600 labor representatives on the approximately 5,000 boards on which Labor should have at least one representative each. For the above reasons your committee recommends that the administration of all rationing should be placed under the Director of Economic Stabilization and that representative local boards be set up for this purpose.

We note the excellent service given by the Federation's representatives on the Labor Policy Committee of the O.P.A. This record is evidence that Labor makes constructive use of opportunities for representation. We emphasize also that prices are but one element in the problem of stabilization and that price control with fiscal and financial policies calculated to control inflationary trends, would be powerless.

We dread inflation and are committed to do our utmost to protect our nation from uncontrolled spiraling of prices as well as fiscal and monetary policies that needlessly inflate our credit facilities.

Packing Industry—(1942, p. 561) The problems of the packing industry brought about by the imposition of price ceilings on meat commodities, was brought before the convention through a resolution designed to bring about an adjustment by either puncturing the ceilings for the entire meat packing industry or fixing the price of livestock at a rate which would "insure a reasonable profit to the livestock raiser as well as to permit the meat packing industry to operate at a reasonable profit." The convention committee reported that inasmuch as the situation had been altered by decisions then recently handed down, the resolution should be, and was so voted, referred to the Executive Council.

(1943, p. 554) The E.C. Report covered activities of labor representatives in connection with price control in order to prevent further increases in the cost of living. The convention committee considering this subject submitted the following report which was unanimously adopted:

Rationing and price control are two important tools of the over-all program to prevent and control inflation.

The Executive Council report describes what labor representatives have done to prevent further increases in the costs of living—an objective essential to protect wage earners against serious hardships. Although price control has been steadily extended, it served to stabilize at higher levels. Such cut-backs as have occurred have not been important in reducing the higher costs of living.

The cost of living index of the Bureau of Labor Statistics has been the basis for the administration of stabilization without consideration of the fact that this index does not reflect how wage earners spend their incomes, the substitutions they make as necessary economies, or the increasing proportion of wages going into taxes and war bonds. We urge studies of spendings in order to make sure that war sacrifices do not endanger the life and health of the nation's wage earners.

We urge greater attention to nutrition and to plans to have adequate eating facilities either in plants or in neighboring localities. Unions should look into the possibilities of co-operative restaurants or cafeterias so that workers could be assured adequate nourishment at work with facilities for providing food to be taken home in cases where mothers are also employed.

We urge the War Food Administration to include in its program the encouragement of the production of less expensive nourishing foods.

We urge the O.P.A. to insist upon the continuance of less expensive lines of supplies with no deterioration in quality.

We urge all unions to actively insist upon labor representation on all rationing boards and to hold these representatives responsible for service to wage earners. Where satisfaction is not forthcoming refer problems promptly to Federation headquarters.

We urge that women's auxiliaries be mobilized to work with union representatives on price control and rationing.

(P. 159) Of foremost importance to Labor in the administration of both price control and rationing is the development of a strong local organization of Labor in every community, equipped to deal with consumer problems. Direct participation by representatives of our unions and by members of women's auxiliaries on war price and rationing panels and on local boards is imperative. Unions should also be in position to furnish volunteers equipped to participate in price enforcement. Labor organizations are faced today with strongly organized pressure groups determined to profit from price rises at the expense of the wage earners. Without strong and continuing organization equipped to deal with the cost of living and other consumer problems in every community, Labor will be unable to counteract this organized pressure. To this end we recommend that the American Federation of Labor call upon all central labor unions, state federations of labor, and national and international unions, to form consumer committees equipped to serve our membership in dealing directly and effectively with price, cost of living, and rationing problems as these arise under war conditions.

(P. 464) Res. 27:

Whereas—It is of general knowledge that the so-called ceiling prices established by the O.P.A. are constantly violated, and

Whereas—It is also generally known that in violation of the O.P.A., black markets are flourishing in various communities, and

Whereas—These violations are due to the lack of personnel of the O.P.A. caused by the cut in appropriation by Congress for the O.P.A., and

Whereas—Because of this lack of personnel, the consumers in general and the workers in particular are at a great disadvantage, therefore, be it

Resolved—That the American Federation of Labor in convention assembled demands that the Government and the Appropriation Committee of Congress appropriate the necessary sum for the O.P.A. to enable it to have a sufficiently large personnel for the purpose of enforcing its ceiling prices, abolishing the black market and in general policing in every community and bring about the immediate punishment for all violators of the O.P.A. price ceilings and those running the black markets.

Your committee is convinced that this resolution should be referred to the Executive Council for thoroughgoing investigation, and such action as then seems advisable, and so recommends.

Post War—(1944, p. 249) . . . large and important areas of cost-of-living control have been left wide open to inflationary attack. This attack has already begun and will succeed unless Labor acts promptly in every community to protect the wage earner's dollar. The full force of inflationary pressure will come not during, but after, the war. After the last World War the most critical period of inflation proved to be the eighteen months following the Armistice. The crucial test of our ability to prevent a runaway inflation will come within two years after hostilities end.

In our opinion, there is a grave threat of curtailment of the real income of workers through price increases. We recommend that, to meet this threat and to assure wage earners and their families maximum protection as the nation's largest buyers and consumers, all central labor unions form consumer committees to maintain informational services and otherwise aid our affiliated unions, their members and families in dealing with their cost-of-living problems, and that all possible advice and guidance be extended to such consumer committees by the American Federation of Labor.

(P. 576) Effective price control is of vital importance to wage earners; every price increase, open or hidden, in goods and services essential to living is a wage cut. To protect the wages, the incomes and the buying power of all workers or consumers, the American Federation of Labor insists on the continuation of price control so long as upward pressure of prices remains and until the danger of inflation is past. As the Executive Council points out, the most severe test of the nation's ability to prevent a runaway inflation is likely to come within two years after hostilities end. Authority to enforce ceiling prices should therefore continue beyond the actual war emergency. Unless we maintain price stability and protect the workers' buying power in the difficult period of post-war transition, there will be no escape from eventual collapse and mass unemployment. Only by retaining price ceilings and rationing as long as scarcities of essential goods exist can we assure complete and permanent removal of controls when full peace-time production and a free market are achieved.

Of strategic importance is pricing of reconverted civilian articles coming back on the market. So long as these articles, essential household appliances and automobiles, remain scarce, pressure for a speculative rise in their prices will be great. It would be disastrous to future employment if industry were allowed to price these goods out of a mass market and thus price workers out of jobs. We urge that prices on reconverted items be kept at 1942 levels and that upward adjustments be permitted only on showing of hardship as in the case of some small businesses. We also ask that the War Production Board and other agencies concerned take positive measures to assure continued production of low-priced items and to require minimum quality specifications on essential commodities, especially low-cost textiles and apparel.

Organized labor constitutes the largest and most effective instrument of consumer representation. Representatives of the A. F. of L. on the OPA, its district labor advisory committees and local price and rationing boards have rendered an outstanding service not only to our membership but to all consumers of the nation. We urge that our unions everywhere make available the services of qualified labor representatives so that the share of labor participation in price control and rationing may be increased. In the days ahead, it will be of growing importance to make sure that labor representatives do not become mere silent partners in price administration and that labor retains initiative in shaping an independent and unified policy of consumer protection, a policy which is labor's own. We concur with the recommendation of the E.C. that to this end our central labor unions be asked to form A. F. of L. consumer committees in every community and that aid and guidance be extended to union consumer committees by A. F. of L. We recommend that for this purpose the president of the A. F. of L. appoint a consumer committee of the A. F. of L. to coordinate the policy and further the activities of our unions in all matters relating to the cost of living and consumer protection.

(1946, p. 11) In keynote speech to the convention the President of A. F. of L. said:

... on the question of price control

we have been passing through a situation that has subjected us to very trying experiences. Fairly decent governmental control was exercised by the Government up to June 30, when the first governmental control act was passed and was in operation. Then the Congress of the United States refused to continue the Act in its former character. I am not sure that it was then suited for the changed conditions that had come about, but at least an examination of the Act itself and the record leads us to the conclusion that it at least was better than the Act they finally passed. Instead of this Act now in operation, passed by the Congress of the United States, being a price control law, I would classify it as a profit promoting measure. Labor has suffered as a result of it already. We are suffering now. We believe that some new way must be found, and with the exception of perhaps continued control of rent and some other items comparable to that, we believe the time has come when price control, along with wage control, should be lifted by the Government of the United States.

... We are students of economics enough to know that there is but one remedy for inflation—a great evil—and that is full production. And what is needed is not so much price control as the centering upon full production by the workers of the nation and by cooperation of management making it possible for us to apply the law of economics and bring about production so it will balance with the law of supply and demand. Everyone knows that. Any article that is short will call for more prices and create black markets, but full production means a solution of the problem of inflation.

The record shows that our workers are centering their efforts in that direction, and I predict that if management will cooperate with labor, if the Government will stop breaking down the morale of workers by threatening to enact slave legislation and impose that upon the workers of the nation, within a period of two years and we will reach full production in this country and we will apply the remedy for inflation.

(Pp. 216, 486) This section recounts the legislative steps that resulted in the present law under which prices have been raised and provides for decontrol. We move approval of this section and recommend that this convention record insistence on immediate decontrol of all prices except rents with a return to the controls of a free economy.

(1947, p. 677) Two resolutions, Nos. 185 and 121, both dealing with price control, were considered by the convention and referred to the Executive Council. The "resolves" of the respective proposals follow:

(Res. 185)

Resolved—That the American Federation of Labor go on record in favor of government price controls and price fixing downward through standardization and regulation, whereby the trend toward dangerous inflation can be stopped and positive relief brought to the consuming public generally and public employees and others in relatively fixed income groups in particular.

Res. 121:

Resolved—That the American Federation of Labor in convention assembled in San Francisco, California, go on record as favoring the adoption of a program as part of our national policy of price reduction which would put an end to the extravagant and unfair price rises that have taken place in consumer goods and in all other commodities since June 1946, and be it further

Resolved—That we favor the creation of a Federal Price Adjustment Board by Executive Order, to implement this policy of a national scale.

Primary Elections—(1926, p. 237)

There is being conducted a nationwide fight on the direct primary, with the evident purpose of returning to the old system of nominating by convention, thus subordinating political parties to machine control.

We deem this activity an attack on democratic government an assault on established free institutions and as a further effort to wrest control of the government from the people; therefore, be it

Resolved—By the Forty-sixth Annual Convention of the A. F. of L., in convention assembled, that we reaffirm our belief in and advocacy of the direct primary, pledge anew our continued united efforts to defend the direct primary against its enemies, and further that we urge all affiliated national and international unions and state federations of labor to exert every effort to awaken the people to the danger threatening popular government.

White—(1944, p. 507) Res. 25:

Whereas—The United States Supreme Court in a recent decision, has outlawed white primaries as being unconstitutional, based upon a case in the State of Texas, and citizens, without regard to race or color, are now voting in the primaries of the state of Texas, but since several other southern states continue to defy the decision of the United States Supreme Court, by refusing Negroes the right to vote in the primaries, therefore, be it

Resolved—That this convention of the American Federation of Labor in New Orleans, La., November, 1944, go on record as commending, upholding and supporting the decision of the United States Supreme Court, outlawing white primaries, and call upon the United States Department of Justice to enforce it in the interest of the preservation of constitutional government, democracy and justice.

Your committee is in full approval with the action of the United States Supreme Court in outlawing white primaries. Your committee, however, is without any evidence that the United States Department of Justice has failed to decline to enforce this decision of the Supreme Court. For this reason we recommend that the resolution be referred to the Executive Council so that an investigation may be made and the facts ascertained.

Presidential Preferential—(1953, p. 402) Res. 30:

Whereas—The present method of nominations for the great offices of President and Vice President of these United States is not indicative of the wishes of the electorate, and

Whereas—The political parties have not carried out the wishes of the electorate through the preferential primaries held in some states, and

Whereas—Some great and learned men, along with the common wage-earners, have expressed themselves in this matter, and

Whereas—One great statesman, Woodrow Wilson, in a letter dated February 5, 1913, wrote: "There ought never to be another presidential nominating convention, and there need never be another. The nominations should be made directly by the people at the polls. Conventions should determine nothing but party platforms, and should be made up of men who would be expected if elected to carry those platforms into effect. It is not necessary to attend to the people's business by constitutional amendment, if you will only actually put the business into the people's own hands," and

Whereas—The administration of our country rightfully belongs to the people, who are overwhelmingly wage earners, and should have the right to nominate the best men of all political parties, for the right to contest for honor to serve as the heads of this great country, therefore, be it

Resolved—That this 72nd Convention of the American Federation of Labor, assembled in the City of St. Louis, go on record to recommend and urge that legislation be enacted by the Congress of the United States to provide for a presidential preferential primary election, and be it further

Resolved—That the American Federation of Labor request all affiliated unions to lend their full support to such a measure, and be it further

Resolved—That copies of this resolution be forwarded to the President of the United States and to the proper committees of the U.S. Senate and the House of Representatives, with the request that legislation to provide for a presidential preferential primary election be enacted promptly.

(P. 648) Convention expressed sympathy with the contents of the resolution and referred subject to the officers of the A. F. of L. for study and formulation of policy.

Printing (Government) — (1947, p. 668) The problems facing government printers through the practice of contracting work out to private business, was presented to the convention through Res. 151. The resolution was unanimously adopted as follows:

Whereas—Men and women accept employment in peacetime in the bond of good faith and full intention to make the Federal Government civilian service a career, and

Whereas—Much of the turnover in the government service is superinduced through the uncertainties of limitation on appropriations, expiration of appropriations, cessation of projects and programs, whether emergency, defense, wartime or peacetime, and

Whereas—Instability in government employment is so noticeably high as to discourage entrance of many qualified persons, and

Whereas—Wave after wave of dismissals continually beset the government service without planning beyond determination to curtail numbers employed, therefore, be it

Resolved—That the American Federation of Labor joins wholeheartedly in endorsing the position of its unions in the Government Employees Council of the American Federation of Labor in their purpose of seeing established an orderly system to eliminate the official hysteria which leads to reduction in force and to prevent the damage to employe morale, lowered efficiency and resultant decline in return upon the citizens' tax-dollar investment.

Subcontracting—(1949, pp. 53, 389) Res. 53 opposed the practice of contracting printing to outside firms which deprives employees in the Bureau of Engraving and the Government Printing Office of work opportunities which would eventually reduce the personnel.

Printing Trades—Lithographers (Juris)—(1940, pp. 64, 602) On the long-standing jurisdictional dispute between the two named international unions, the Executive Council reported to the convention that the lithographers had refused to abide by the decision rendered. Hearings were held during the convention and the following report was made and adopted:

This controversy dates back many years and as the result of an understanding reached at the 1915 Convention of the A. F. of L. when a committee of three was agreed to for the purpose of inquiring into technical phases involved and in order to determine the jurisdictional claims of each. All parties agreed to abide by the findings and recommendations of this committee. The 1916 Convention of the A. F. of L. affirmed the report and findings of this committee which defined the jurisdictional rights of each of these three international unions and recommended, as well, a method by which these jurisdictional rights might be fully observed and protected. All efforts to bring about an observance of these agreements and decisions have failed throughout these years and solely because of the refusal of the Lithographers International Protective and Beneficial Association to observe its agreement and decisions herein noted.

In the hearing held by your committee, it developed that the situation has become more and more aggravated each succeeding year and that at the present a well determined course is essential if the confusion in the printing trades and if the jurisdictional rights as well as agreements entered into and referred to herein are to be made effective.

Your committee, therefore, recommends that the Lithographers International Protective and Beneficial Association be directed to carry out its original agreement, abide by previous decisions reached by the A. F. of L. and observe the jurisdictional rights, as determined by the method to which it had agreed. That, failing to give substantial evidence of its intention to do so and failing to take active steps to that end within a period of ninety (90) days after adjournment of this convention, that the Executive Council be authorized and directed to withdraw or suspend its affiliation to the American Federation of Labor and hold it in suspension until it evidences observance of agreements entered into and the decisions reached. It is further recommended that in the interim the International Photo Engravers Union, the International Printing Pressmen and Assistants Union and the Lithographers International Protective and Beneficial Association be directed to appoint a committee of three (3) of each of the respective unions to meet in conference between themselves and with the view of composing existing differences and consumming some plan designed to observe the respective jurisdiction rights and adjust their relationship upon a friendly and cooperative basis; that these conferences proceed at the earliest possible moment and continue throughout the 90-day period previously indicated or so long as there may exist a reasonable opportunity for an amicable adjustment. It is further recommended that these organizations be directed to present a joint, or individual, report of the results of their conferences to the president of the American Federation of Labor at the expiration, or previous to the 90-day period. If upon the rendering of such report or reports, the Executive Council shall find that further efforts to compose the differences will prove futile, then the Executive Council shall give enforcement to the suspension order as herein before recommended.

(1942, p. 63) Tentative proposals for the adjustment of the long-standing dispute between the named organizations, were reported to the convention by the Executive Council.

(P. 452) The Committee on Adjustment at the 61st Annual Convention of the American Federation of Labor in Seattle, October, 1941, gave consideration to action of the previous convention together with conferences subsequently held by representatives of the organizations directly involved.

The committee was informed by the representatives of the International Printing Pressmen's and Assistants' Union, the Photo-Engravers Union and the Lithographers International Protective and Beneficial Ass'n. that they felt satisfied that this controversy could be definitely adjusted within a reasonable time. President Berry on behalf of the International Printing Pressmen's and Assistants' Union, advised that his organization would accept and abide by whatever agreement might be reached or understanding entered into between the Lithographers and the Photo Engravers, with the reservation that whatever plan of amalgamation or merger might be ultimately agreed to, that he would have the right to review that plan. The photo engravers on the other hand approved the proposal of the lithographers in principle and further meetings were agreed to for the purpose of working out a satisfactory plan of amalgamation that might meet the requirements of the Printing Pressmen's Union.

Further conferences have been held and your committee is advised that a plan of adjustment has been submitted and it is now in possession of President Berry of the Printing Pressmen's Union for his consideration.

Therefore, we recommend that conferences be continued with the view of adjusting this matter at the earliest possible date and that the president of the American Federation of Labor render whatever assistance may be possible to bring about the desired results.

(1943, p. 42) No definite progress has been made in the final adjustment of the controversy which arose between the printing trades organizations and the Lithographers' International Protective and Beneficial Association which was reported upon to the Toronto Convention one year ago. Because of the change which has taken place as a result of the war it seemed to be the opinion of the representatives of the printing trades organizations directly interested in the controversy, that the status quo be continued and further consideration of the controversy postponed until after the war has been concluded.

This attitude of the printing trades organizations is set forth in a letter which was sent to President Green by President Volz, of the International Photo-Engravers' Union of North America, and President Berry, of the International Printing Pressmen and Assistants' Union of North America. The letter referred to reads as follows:

May 24, 1943.

MR. WM. GREEN, President,
American Federation of Labor,
A. F. of L. Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR PRESIDENT GREEN:

While deploring the attitude of the Lithographers' International Protective and Beneficial Association of the United States and Canada in not complying with the long standing rulings of the American Federation of Labor relative to jurisdiction over offset plate-making and printing, and likewise its recommendations for the amalgamation of that group with the International Photo-Engravers' Union of North America and the International Printing Pressmen and Assistants' Union of North America, respectively, and in accordance with its jurisdictional award, these two latter organizations in view of present critical war conditions which warrant cessation of all internal strife in the labor movement, recommend—without in any manner waiving their respective claims and without prejudice to the rulings of the Federation—that the entire question involved be held “status quo” for the duration.

Respectfully submitted,
(Signed) EDWARD J. VOLZ,
President,
International Photo-Engravers'
Union of North America.

(Signed) GEORGE L. BERRY,
President,
International Printing Pressmen, and Assistants' Union of North America.

It is the opinion of the Executive Council that the suggestions made in the letter received from President Volz and President Berry be complied with and carried out with the understanding that the respective claims of the several organizations involved and decisions heretofore rendered upon them by the Executive Council and previous conventions shall in no way be modified or be prejudiced.

(P. 384) The Executive Council reports its inability to bring about an adjustment in accordance with the previous convention decisions in the differences between the Lithographers International Protective and Beneficial Association and the International Printing Pressmen and Assistants' Union. We regret that no adjustment in conformity with convention action could be reached, and recommend that unremitting efforts be made to reach an early settlement of all differences. Under the existing conditions of rapid and profound changes in the graphic arts industry, the achievement of complete harmony in the ranks of the printing trades is urgent and imperative.

Prison Labor—(1924, p. 43) Continued efforts have been made in the past year as in preceding years to protect the labor of free men from competition against convict labor. To further legislation of this character a conference was called by the Executive Council as directed by the Portland Convention of the A. F. of L.

As was indicated in our report of a year ago, out of approximately 67,000 prisoners in the various prisons and reformatories conducted by the several states, 18,439 were engaged in what is known as “shop trades,” out of which 10,740 were employed in industries under contract and public account systems and wherein the manufactured goods are disposed of in the open market in competition with free labor. Of the 10,740 prisoners working under the contract system, 5,749 or fifty-three per cent are employed in the manufacture of work shirts and overalls. It is thus apparent that the solution of this problem does not rest entirely upon the enactment of effective state and national legislation, but that substantial aid can be given the movement of eliminating competition of convict labor by wage earners exercising a greater discriminating care and judgment against purchasing convict made goods. A consistent and persistent demand for union label goods of this kind will be of material assistance.

The evil involved in the competition of convict labor with free labor, however, cannot be wholly exterminated without proper and effective national and state legislation. Indeed, it is a fundamental error for the state or nation to use the services of convicts for private gain or other than for state use.

The A. F. of L. has consistently advocated the state use system of employing convicts in penal institutions; that is, that the state itself or its subdivisions consume the commodities produced within the penal institutions of the state.

It has also condemned the contract system, the lease system, the piece price system and the state or public account system, the first three of which are practically the same in operation as the contract system and work to the detriment of the convict, the state, the employers and the workers of the states. The last system, the state itself enters into direct competition with its citizens by disposing on the open market of materials manufactured by the inmates of its penal institutions.

There are at present 47 states that use either or all of the following: Contract, piece price, lease and/or public account systems. It is advisable that a bill for legislative enactment be prepared for presentation to and enactment by these several state legislatures abolishing either or all of these systems and installing in their stead the state-use system.

It is also advisable that continued efforts be made to have an enabling Act similar to what was known as Booher or Nolan bills, enacted by Congress which will permit the states that have already enforced the state-use system to legislate against the importation of goods made under the four systems which are condemned by not only the A. F. of L. but by all fair-minded citizens interested in this problem.

Central bodies, which have legislative committees, state branches, and international organizations the members of which are adversely affected in states where the four systems condemned are in whole or part in use are urged to use every possible effort and activity to have substituted therefor the state-use system.

(P. 71) A bill was introduced directing the Secretary of Labor to make an investigation and report on the subject of convict labor. Another was introduced to "further regulate interstate and foreign commerce by prohibiting the interstate transportation of the products of convict labor." No action was taken by the Committee on Labor.

(P. 187) Convention emphasized with approval that every effort be made in the respective states to eliminate harmful convict labor competition. State legislatures should be vigorously urged to adopt the state-use system.

The E.C. is instructed to seek the enactment by Congress of the bill which would prohibit the interstate transportation of the products of convict labor.

(1925, p. 63) Bills for presentation in Congress and in the various states to eliminate the competition of products of convict labor with free labor have been prepared. The federal bill is based on two laws that have been passed by Congress and declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court of the U.S. It provides that any products of the labor of convicts shipped from one state into another shall come under the laws of the latter state the same as if manufactured therein.

In 1890 Congress enacted a law "to limit the effect of the regulations of commerce between the several states and with foreign countries in certain cases." This provided that all fermented, distilled, or other intoxicating liquors, or liquids, transported into any state or territory, or remaining therein, for use, consumption, sale or storage therein, shall be subject to the operation and effect of the laws of such state or territory enacted in the exercise of its police powers, to the same extent and in the same manner as though such liquids, or liquors, had been produced in such state or territory, and shall not be exempt therefrom by reason of being introduced therein in original packages or otherwise. In declaring this law constitutional, the Supreme Court said:

Congress has not attempted to delegate the power to regulate commerce or to exercise any power reserved to the states, or to grant a power not possessed by the states, or to adopt state laws. It has taken its own course and made its own regulation applying to these subjects of interstate commerce one common rule whose uniformity is not affected by variations in state laws in dealing with such property. No reason is perceived why, if Congress chooses to provide that certain designated subjects of interstate commerce shall be governed by a rule which divests them of that character at an earlier period of time than would otherwise be the case, it is not within its competency to do so.

A similar law enacted in 1913 was also declared constitutional by the Supreme Court, which said:

This Act, which in substance prohibits the shipment or transportation from one state to another of intoxicating liquors in violation of any law of such state, is a valid exercise of the power of Congress.

It is therefore believed that should Congress pass the bill it is proposed to introduce, constructed on the lines of the two laws declared constitutional, that if enacted into law it will also be approved by the Supreme Court.

A bill providing for the state-use system to be presented in the various state legislatures where that system is not in effect is based on the best features of the New York, Ohio and Illinois convict labor laws. It provides that the inmates of all penal institutions shall be employed in the manufacture of articles for the exclusive use of the state or its political divisions. The enactment of the proposed federal law referred to will be an incentive to the various states that have other systems now to adopt the state-use system for self-protection. It will also prevent the transportation into a state of the products of convicts of other states to the detriment of free labor. It will destroy the contract system and any other method in effect that permits the products of convicts to be placed on the market. Both the federal and state bills exempt eleemosynary institutions.

The last report available shows that in 1923, 36 per cent of the inmates of penal institutions were employed under the state-use system.

The superintendent of federal prisons has announced that he will present a bill in Congress providing for establishing the state-use system in the three federal prisons at Atlanta, Leavenworth and McNeil Island. The object is to manufacture products for the departments of the government, none to be sold on the market.

(1927, p. 75) Bills were introduced in Congress "to divest goods, wares and merchandise manufactured, produced or mined by convicts or prisoners of their interstate character in certain cases." It would subject all convict-made goods sent into a state or territory to the laws of such state or territory to the same extent and in the same manner as though they had been manufactured therein.

The opposition came from officials of penal institutions of more than 20 states. They defended the present contract system. Representatives of the A. F. of L. insisted at the hearings that in states where the state-use system prevails all convicts are employed but the products of convict labor did not come in competition in the markets with the products of free labor.

The bill was reported favorably to the House. The Senate bill was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor. . . . It is believed there will be no serious trouble in securing a favorable report in the Seventieth Congress both from the Senate Committee and again from the Committee on Labor of the House.

(1928, pp. 78, 204) Notwithstanding most bitter opposition from prison officials and prison contractors, the Cooper-Hawes bill, to divest convict made goods of their interstate character in certain cases, almost became a law. It passed the House by a vote of 303 to 39 but did not come to a vote in the Senate because of a filibuster by opponents.

During all the hearings not one witness aside from state and prison officials and the representatives of prison contractors appeared to oppose the bill. Most ridiculous objections were raised, but cross-examination of witnesses by members of the committees shattered their claims. Seventy-five members of the Senate were pledged to vote for the bill, nine were not unfriendly, and only 10 declared their determination to defeat it. The bill will be unfinished business when Congress meets again in December, and we believe it will pass.

(1929, p. 89) Now that the Hawes-Cooper convict labor bill has become a law it is necessary to outline a program for legislation in the states. This is a much more difficult problem than would first be recognized. The bill provides that goods, wares and merchandise manufactured, produced or mined by convict labor shall come under the laws of the state into which they are shipped. It has never been the intention to interfere with farm products. Only manufactured goods come in competition with free labor in the factories and workshops of the country.

The question that arises is how shall legislation in the states be worded and what is to be its intent. The Hawes-Cooper Act provides that convict labor products shall be divested of their interstate character in certain cases. This permits each state to enact a law prohibiting the importation within its borders of convict-made goods from other states.

(P. 245) The A. F. of L. earnestly urges every delegate to closely read and study the report of the E.C. on the subject of convict labor. Particularly, it is essential that the delegates realize the Hawes-Cooper bill, which has been termed one of the most important labor measures in recent years, requires supplemental legislation by the states to become effective. Consequently, this eagerly sought legislative measure is valueless unless backed up by the appropriate state enactments mentioned in the report.

It has been definitely determined that the convict labor question is a state problem and delegates should study it in relation to the existing laws in their own states.

The Hawes-Cooper bill will not become effective until January 19, 1934. In the meantime the organized labor movement must take the initiative in the fight for satisfactory state legislation along the lines of the model amendments included in the E.C. report. The utmost vigilance is necessary to prevent hostile forces from nullifying the Hawes-Cooper bill by enacting inadequate and unsatisfactory state supplemental measures.

(1930, pp. 105, 233) Several laws were enacted providing for a reform in federal prison methods. Amendments were made at the request of the A. F. of L. to prohibit any federal convict working on any article sold on the open market while incarcerated either in a federal or state penal institution. These laws embody within their provisions the policy of the A. F. of L. that there shall be no sale of prison made goods from one state to another or to the Federal Government or from the Federal Government to any of the states.

(P. 111) Although little more than a year has passed since the Hawes-Cooper Convict Labor Act became a law the governors of many states have accepted its provisions and state legislatures are enacting legislation which will make vital and effective the provisions of the law.

The Hawes-Cooper Act does not go into effect until January 19, 1934, and at that time it is expected that the majority of the states will have adopted the state-use system in the employment of convicts and will also prohibit the importation within their states of convict made goods from other states. Among the most bitter opponents of the Hawes-Cooper bill was the governor of Missouri, who sent a delegation of officials to Washington to protest against the legislation, but after a year's study of its provisions he has changed his attitude. He communicated with the governors of all the states asking for opinions of the law.

At the Governors' Conference in Salt Lake City in July, the governor quoted some of the answers he had received. The great majority of the answers regarded the law in a philosophical way and stated they were endeavoring to meet the conditions that will come when the law goes into effect. Governor Caulfield said:

It would seem evident then that each state as a protective measure must bar from its market the prison made goods of other states and to avoid an unconstitutional determination must withdraw its own prison made goods from its own open market. . . . The state-use system seems to offer the greatest possibilities for stabilizing the present employment situation. My inquiries reveal that most of the states will turn to that system in preparation for the Hawes-Cooper Act.

He also said:

The state-use system will no doubt result in greater diversification and this will give better training to the prisoners for life.

Only two governors suggested that the law was unconstitutional, but a careful reading of the minutes of the conference shows that the governors of most of the states have accepted the law as constitutional and will seek to introduce the state-use system and the prohibition of convict made goods manufactured in other states being sold on their open markets.

The Hawes-Cooper Act is an enabling Act. It gives the states the power to forbid the transportation within their respective borders of convict made goods from other states. The New York legislature passed a bill in the last session and it was signed by the governor prohibiting the importation of convict made goods into that state after January 19, 1934. The working people of New Jersey and Ohio, which have the state-use system, will endeavor to have the same law enacted next winter.

We urge state federations of labor in states where the state-use system is not in force to have bills introduced in the legislatures to introduce the state-use system and also to prohibit the importation into the states of convict made goods from other states.

In states where the state-use system is in effect, bills should be introduced to prohibit the transportation into the states of convict made goods from other states. Some 38 legislatures meet next winter and the work should begin immediately.

(1931, pp. 120, 291) The Boston Convention referred Resolution No. 31 to the E.C. for the purpose of having a complete statement made on the subject. The resolution states that "January 7, 1925, Congress passed a law which makes it mandatory for the attorney general to employ prison labor for the construction and maintenance of all federal prisons and federal reformatories wherever possible."

The law referred to and which was passed January 7, 1925, refers only to one prison and is not mandatory. It provides that in the construction of the Chillicothe Reformatory the attorney general shall employ the labor of such United States prisoners who are confined in the Chillicothe Reformatory "and who can be used under proper guard in the work necessary to construct the buildings."

Free labor is doing much of the work at the Chillicothe Reformatory and all those employed directly by the government are being paid the union rates of wages. Convicts are used only in the rough work.

In the 71st Congress provisions were made for the erection of a federal prison, several jails and a reformatory. All of these buildings are to be constructed by free labor. A union contractor has the contract for the federal prison to be erected at Lewisburg, Pa., at a cost of $3,800,000.

For many years the A. F. of L. has endeavored to eliminate as far as possible the competition of convict labor products with those produced by free labor. Until within the last two years our efforts were confined almost entirely to the production of goods, wares, merchandise and coal.

The unusual demand for new penitentiary buildings or additions during the past two years has brought convict labor in competition with the building trades. As said before so far as the Federal Government is concerned none of the new penal institutions will be built by convicts or will they have anything whatever to do with the work in any capacity.

All work done by federal prisoners is exclusively for the government. Nothing is sold on the open market or sold to or exchanged with any state.

The aim of the A. F. of L. has been to minimize the competition of convict labor so that employers of free labor will not be driven out of business.

Various humane improvements are being introduced in the construction of the new federal prison. Iron bars will be absent except in cells where those mentally deranged or where those guilty of some infraction of the rules are incarcerated.

As soon as Congress meets a bill will be introduced to prohibit the sale or exchange of convict made goods from any of the several states of the U.S. in competition with goods produced by free labor in the District of Columbia.

(1932, pp. 71, 232) As the Hawes-Cooper Convict Labor Act becomes effective January 19, 1934, it is absolutely necessary that the legislatures which will meet in January, 1933, shall enact legislation to carry out the object of the Act. The Act enables states to forbid the sale, within their borders, of convict made goods from other states. But it must be understood that unless the laws of the states provide that none of their own convict made products shall be sold on the open market, they cannot forbid the sale of convict made goods from other states.

The Act provides that when convict made products from one state are shipped into another, they come under the laws of that state the same as if manufactured therein. Therefore, great care should be taken to have the laws of the state changed to provide that none of the products of its penal institutions shall be sold on the open market.

Four states have taken advantage of the Hawes-Cooper Act. They are: Illinois, Maine, New York and New Jersey. The Ohio Legislature in its next session will undoubtedly approve proper legislation. In the last session the House by practically a unanimous vote passed a bill which was lost in the Senate in the closing days because of the congestion.

(1933, pp. 107, 535) Unusual efforts were made to have the model convict labor bill passed by the legislatures of the various states. Seventeen states now have laws satisfactory to the A. F. of L. Twelve of the states enacted the law in 1933.

The Indiana Legislature passed two bills, one providing for state-use and the other forbidding the sale of convict-made goods from other states. The governor vetoed the latter.

The Iowa Legislature passed a branding bill and applied its regulations to outside products. Rhode Island has chosen a commission representing Labor, manufacturers and others to report to the 1934 session looking to the placing of that state on the state-use basis.

The fact that no convict-made goods can be shipped into 17 states after January 19, 1934, for sale on the open market, will serve as a warning to states that have not enacted this law that they must adopt the state-use system.

A representative of a prison contractor of New York City entered suit for an injunction to restrain the attorney-general from enforcing the state law and contended that the Hawes-Cooper Act was unconstitutional. It is understood that the suit will be withdrawn.

Another suit was begun by the attorney-general of Alabama, who asked for an injunction restraining 16 states from enforcing their convict labor laws. The states asked to be enjoined will fight the suit. The attorney-generals of those states met in Chicago and appointed a committee to draw up briefs in support of the constitutionality of the Hawes-Cooper Act. The hearing was set for October 9, 1933.

Many protests have been made by the citizens of Alabama and the A. F. of L. believes that the attorney general of that state will not succeed in his efforts to uphold convict labor competition with free labor.

The Oregon Legislature passed the convict labor bill but it was vetoed by the governor. As he is a department store owner and deals in a number of convict-made products, his action can be understood. The House of the Delaware Legislature approved the measure, but the Senate refused to concur. The Maine Legislature also refused to enact this legislation.

Contracts for shirts in Kentucky and Wyoming prisons were cancelled because the Hawes-Cooper Act would become effective after January 19, 1934.

(1934, pp. 86, 399) Forty-two state legislatures will meet in January or later next year. Strenuous efforts should be made to have those states that have not taken advantage of the Hawes-Cooper Convict Labor Act do so. Seventeen states have enacted laws prohibiting the sale of convict-made goods manufactured in its own prisons on the open market.

The Hawes-Cooper Act provides that any convict-made goods shipped from one state into another shall come under the laws of the latter the same as if manufactured therein. Therefore, if a state legislature enacts a law prohibiting the sale of its own convict-made products on the open market, no other state can sell its convict-made products in that state. This is very important, as much unemployment is caused by the sale of convict-made goods on the open market, particularly so in view of the fact that the government now permits the NRA label to go on convict-made goods, which action we condemn as being injurious to free labor.

(1935, pp. 139, 451) Another important step in the campaign of the A. F. of L. to eliminate the competition of convict labor was taken to the Seventy-fourth Congress. The bill introduced prohibited the interstate transportation of prison-made products into states that had established the state-use system. The state-use system prohibits the sale on the open market of prison-made goods manufactured by the convicts of the state.

The Hawes-Cooper Act enables a state to enact legislation prohibiting the sale of prison-made goods from another state if the former state's laws provide that its own convict-made goods cannot be sold on the open market. Quite a number of cases have been reported of convict-made goods manufactured in one state being shipped and sold in a state which forbids their sale on the open market. The Ashurst-Sumners Prison Labor Law provides:

That it shall be unlawful for any person knowingly to transport or cause to be transported, in any manner or by any means whatsoever, or aid or assist in obtaining transportation for or in transporting any goods, wares and merchandise manufactured, produced, or mined wholly or in part by convicts or prisoners (except convicts or prisoners on parole or probation), or in any penal or reformatory institution, from one state, territory, or district of the United States, or place non-contiguous but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, or from any foreign country, into any state, territory, or district of the United States, or place non-contiguous but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, where said goods, wares and merchandise are intended by any person interested therein to be received, possessed, sold, or in any manner used, either in the original package or otherwise, in violation of any law of such state, territory, or district of the United States, or place non-contiguous but subject to the jurisdiction thereof. Nothing herein shall apply to commodities manufactured in federal penal and correctional institutions for use by the Federal Government.

The law also provides that convict-made goods shipped in interstate commerce shall be plainly marked so that the name and address of the shipper, the name and address of the consignee, the nature of the contents and the penal institution or reformatory where manufactured or produced may be readily ascertained on an inspection of the outside of the package in which said convict-made goods are shipped. A violation of the law shall be punishable by a fine of not more than $1,000, and said goods, wares and merchandise forfeited to the U.S.

(1936, pp. 135, 465) Twenty-two states have enacted legislation for the protection of free labor from competition of convict labor. The last state to act was Louisiana. In those states no convict-made goods, wares, or merchandise produced or mined in the United States can be sold on the open market. The Hawes-Cooper Act divests state prison-made products of their interstate character and when such goods are shipped into a state, the laws of that state govern. This law was declared constitutional by the U.S. Supreme Court.

The Ashurst-Sumners Convict Labor Act is supplementary legislation to more thoroughly enforce the Hawes-Cooper Act. It provides that convict made goods shipped in interstate commerce must bear a label upon the container on which is printed the name of the prison where the articles were produced and to whom it is consigned. The object of this law is to prohibit carriers from accepting prison made products to be delivered in the twenty-two states that have adopted the state-use system. It is the purpose and intention of the A. F. of L. to examine all proposed legislation relating to the manufacture, shipment and sale of convict made goods, to consider all facts and information, legal, social and economic, bearing upon such proposed legislation and to take such action in connection therewith as may seem necessary in order to protect the interests of free labor from competition of goods manufactured by convict labor. It accepts and regards the enactment of legislation providing for the state-use system only, this to be supplemented by the enactment of the Hawes-Cooper Act in the different states, as the real solution of the problem. If all the states can be prevailed upon to pass a state-use system act, prohibiting the manufacture and sale of convict made goods in competition with free labor and confining the distribution and use of convict made goods to state use only, the sale of convict made goods in competition with free labor within the state would be prohibited. If such state-use legislation could then be supplemented by the enactment of the Hawes-Cooper Act, each state could then prevent the shipment and sale of convict made goods within the state which were manufactured in other states and shipped in interstate commerce.

In conformity with actions taken by conventions of the A. F. of L., official communications have been addressed to the officers of state federations of labor in the different states where the state-use system has not been adopted, urging them to draft and sponsor legislation prohibiting the production and sale of convict made goods in competition with goods manufactured by free labor.

(1937, pp. 175, 310) The campaign to eliminate the sale of convict made products on the open market is gradually forcing upon the states that do not have the state-use system the necessity for this legislation. Seven states enacted the state-use law this year. Eighteen states still sell their prison products on the open market, but there are thirty states into which they cannot ship them to be sold.

The problem of finding a market is becoming so difficult that it is doubtful whether there is a prison official in those eighteen states who does not recognize the fact that they must adopt the state-use system. Every state in the Union has a sufficient market in its state institutions or political subdivisions that will keep every convict employed.

Under the present method of doing business the prisons sell on the open market and then buy from favorite contractors the articles that are used in the state institutions. This increases the cost. If the convict-made products were used they would reduce the cost of maintaining the prisons at least 50 per cent. Every state that has adopted the state-use system acknowledges its benefits.

The eighteen states that are still selling their prison-made products on the open market in competition with those produced by free labor are: Alabama, Delaware, Florida, Indiana, Iowa, Maine, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, Nevada, New Mexico, North Dakota, South Carolina, South Dakota, Vermont, West Virginia, Wisconsin, Wyoming.

No doubt everyone of the eighteen states could be induced to adopt a state-use system if a persistent and vigorous campaign is launched to have candidates for the legislatures pledge themselves to vote for this legislation. Other state federations of labor have worked diligently and succeeded in having such laws enacted.

The opposition to the state-use system has not been so aggressive during the present year. Amendments to bills have been made in Congress that would prevent the transportation of convict-made goods in interstate commerce and very little opposition has developed. However, the only true way in which the convict labor problem can be solved is through each state providing that all goods, wares and merchandise produced or mined by convicts shall be exclusively for state use.

(1938, p. 176) Thirty-one states have adopted the state-use system in the employment of convicts. Two of them have partially carried out the policy of the A. F. of L. Indiana and Maine enacted laws prohibiting transportation into those states of convict made goods to sell on the open market. They neglected, however, to enact the state-use law, which makes the law enacted inoperative.

The regulations relating to the transportation of prison made products have been completed and distributed to all freight agents throughout the United States. The regulations contain the Hawes-Cooper Act and the Ashurst-Sumners Act, and then gives the laws of every state pertaining to the sale of convict made products. The publication of the regulations will immediately prevent the transportation of convict made products into states which do not permit its own convict made products to be sold on the open market. The result will be that the seventeen states that have not yet enacted the proper laws will be forced to do so as their markets for prison made products are slowly being taken away from them.

The problem has been to impress the legislatures of the southern states that they must arrange for establishing the state-use system or otherwise they will not be able to sell any of their products anywhere in the United States.

(1939, pp. 159, 386) Fourteen states are still lacking the state-use system in the manufacture of goods, wares and merchandise. Nine of these states have practically no laws governing prison labor. These are: Alabama, Delaware, Missouri, Nevada, North Dakota, South Carolina, Vermont, West Virginia and Wyoming. While the latter has no laws governing convict labor, the administration prohibits the sale of convict made goods on the open market.

Florida and Indiana adopted a state-use system this year but the following states still refuse to indorse the state-use system: Alabama, Delaware, Iowa, Minnesota, Missouri, Nevada, New Mexico, North Dakota, South Carolina, South Dakota, Vermont, West Virginia, Wisconsin, Wyoming.

Eventually those states will have to adopt proper legislation as their markets for prison products are very much curtailed because thirty-four states forbid their transportation within their borders for sale on the open market.

(Foreign)—(1930, pp. 112, 235) The House refused to amend Section 307 of the tariff act so that not only manufactured goods but all that are mined and produced by convicts should not be entitled to enter at any port in the United States. When the bill reached the Senate representatives of the A. F. of L. took the matter up with the Senate Finance Committee and the words "mined and produced" were inserted in the Section. When the bill reached the Senate floor another amendment was inserted which would also prohibit the entry of such articles as were mined, produced or manufactured wholly or in part by "forced or indentured labor under penal sanctions."

Still another amendment was made which postponed the taking into effect of the forced or indentured labor provisions until January 1, 1932. When the bill reached the conference committee this further amendment was made:

"But in no case shall such provisions be applicable to goods, wares, articles, or merchandise so mined, produced or manufactured which are not mined, produced, or manufactured in such quantities in the United States as to meet the consumptive demands of the United States."

This exemption would apply to rubber and certain other articles not produced in the United States, but would prohibit lumber, coal and manganese from entry if produced by forced or indentured labor.

(1939, p. 386) In that portion of the Executive Council's report captioned, "Convict Labor," your committee recommends that in the 14 States still lacking the State-use system in the manufacture of goods, wares and merchandise produced by prison labor that the State Federations continue in their endeavors to have legislatures enact convict labor legislation.

(1940, pp. 70-71, 389) Convention approved following report of Executive Council and recommended that the fullest possible cooperation be given to state federations in securing necessary supplemental state legislation.

For many years efforts have been made to curtail competition of convict-made goods with those produced by free labor. The American Federation of Labor has led the fight for such legislation and in 1929 secured the passage of the Hawes-Cooper Act (Public No. 669, approved January 19, 1929).

Under the Constitution Congress was given power to legislate in regard to interstate commerce but as all powers not expressly given to the Federal Government by the Constitution are reserved to the states, Congress is powerless to legislate regarding intrastate commerce. By enacting the Hawes-Cooper Act Congress divested itself of a portion of its jurisdiction over prison products in interstate commerce by authorizing states to subject such goods, when shipped, to their own laws. The effective date of the Act was deferred five years in order that states might make necessary adjustments. A majority of the states took advantage of the Hawes-Cooper Act and protected themselves by enacting legislation restricting the sale or use of prison-made goods. However, shipments continued to be made into states having restrictive laws and prison-made products were being "boot-legged" in such states.

The American Federation of Labor, therefore, prepared and secured the introduction of the Ashurst-Sumners Act (Public No. 215, approved July 24, 1935), prohibiting the shipment of convict-made goods into states which prohibited their sale in the open market. It also required that containers of such goods be marked as to their origin. The Hawes-Cooper and Ashurst-Sumners Acts caused all but the following eight states to enact restrictive laws regarding prison products: Alabama, Delaware, Missouri, Nevada, South Carolina, Vermont, West Virginia, and Wyoming.

Some states, however, continued to ship convict products into states without protective laws and the results were deplorable. In order to deal with the situation created by lack of cooperation the Executive Council sponsored and was successful in having enacted S. 3550 (Public No. 851) prohibiting the shipment of any prison products in interstate commerce, except agricultural commodities, repair parts for farm machinery, or goods manufactured for another state.

The Executive Council also actively supported two other measures relating to prison labor:

Senate Joint Res. 59 (Public Res. No. 85), authorizes the Bureau of Labor Statistics to collect information concerning character, kind, type, amount, and value of all goods produced in state and Federal prisons, showing separately the amount of all goods produced under the state-use, state-account, contract, and piece-rate system.

S. 2303 (Public No. 539) authorizes the continuance of the work of the Prison Industries Reorganization Administration. This agency assists any state, upon invitation, in working out more satisfactory and efficient methods of employing and training prisoners. Previous studies of prison conditions have revealed indefensible competition with free labor and industry, wholesale demoralizing idleness of thousands of prisoners due in part to restrictive Federal and state legislation, as well as overcrowded and obsolete housing conditions. The principal purpose of the work carried on by the Prison Industries Reorganization Administration is to help the states to eliminate competition of prison-made products with the products of free industry, to find useful employment for all their prisoners, and to establish better methods of penal treatment. These objectives are, of course, interrelated and inseparable.

(1940, p. 389) In commending Executive Council upon legislative gains to prohibit the sale of prison made goods in competition with free labor, convention recommended that fullest possible cooperation be given to state federations in securing desired supplemental state legislation.

(In War Material Production)—(1942, p. 199) On May 6, 1942, the Attorney General submitted a legal opinion to the President of the United States to the effect that the services of prisoners may be used for the production of war material. As a result of said opinion the President called upon the Department of Labor to modify certain features of the Walsh-Healey Act so as to permit the production of war material in Federal prisons and state prisons as well.

The head of the division within the Department of Labor who is clothed with authority to administer the Walsh-Healey Act, stated that it is the purpose of the Government to use much of the material produced in prisons to supply lend-lease demands rather than to utilize said material for national war needs. He further advised that it was agreed and understood that goods thus manufactured in prisons for war use will be sold to the Government for the same price paid those who produce the same goods in private industry, this action to be taken for the purpose of preventing the charge of undue and unfair competition.

The Executive Council, at its meeting held May 13-22, 1942, gave special consideration to the legal opinion of the Attorney General herein referred to, and the statement made by the administrator within the Department of Labor clothed with authority to administer the Walsh-Healey Act. All members of the Council expressed grave apprehension over the effect of the modification of prison labor legislation as set forth in the legal opinion rendered by the Attorney General. The Executive Council expressed its determination, in conformity with the traditional policy of the American Federation of Labor, to do everything possible to protect free labor from the competition of convict labor. While inspired by a sincere desire to serve in every way in the promotion of the war effort, the members of the Council expressed emphatic opposition to the repeal of convict labor legislation which had been secured as a result of years of effort on the part of the American Federation of Labor.

The Executive Council adopted a motion that in view of the opinion rendered by the Attorney General of the United States which authorized Federal prison authorities to use Federal prisoners for the creation of war material and war essentials; and whereas the opinion sets forth that they may purchase from state prisons war commodities and materials; therefore, conforming to that judgment the Council requests the Superintendent of Federal Prisons to consult with representatives of the American Federation of Labor in the extension, operation or application of this work so as to assure adequate protection for free labor and yet promote the war service. Furthermore, inasmuch as the Secretary of Labor is clothed with authority to grant exemptions under the provisions of the Walsh-Healey Act that we request the Secretary of Labor not to make a general exemption, and further, that in every exemption considered, the representatives of the American Federation of Labor be given the opportunity of presenting our point of view prior to the issuance of such exemption so that free labor will not be detrimentally affected and that the war effort may be enhanced.

(P. 199) This action of the Executive Council was transmitted to the Secretary of Labor, as well as to the Director of the Federal Bureau of Prisons, under date of June 16, 1942.

The President on July 13, 1942, issued an Executive Order relating to the employment of prison labor in the production of war material goods. This Executive Order, No. 9196, reads as follows:

Under and by virtue of the authority vested in me as President of the United States, and in order to remove any doubts which might otherwise exist and to insure the effective utilization of all existing productive facilities, it is hereby ordered that Executive Order No. 325A of May 18, 1905, be, and the same is hereby, suspended for the period of the war and for six months thereafter to the extent necessary to permit officers and agencies of the Federal Government charged with the purchase or procurement of articles necessary in the conduct of the war to procure, directly or indirectly, through any contractor or sub-contractor or otherwise, articles of any kind produced in any Federal, state or territorial prison, provided such articles are not produced pursuant to any contract or other arrangement under which prison labor is hired out to, or employed or used by, any private person, firm or corporation.

Prior to the issuance of this order, however, the Secretary of Labor (who is authorized to make exemptions in the application of the restrictive features of the Walsh-Healey Act to the employment of convict labor in the production of goods where justice and public interest are served thereby) issued an order amending regulations for administration of the Walsh-Healey Act and exempting from the coverage of the act contracts negotiated during the present war in states or territories of the United States or with instrumentalities wholly owned or controlled by them for the manufacture or furnishing of materials, supplies, articles and equipment necessary for the war purposes.

The Executive Council fully realizes that the nation is at war and that the productive services of all must be used in the prosecution of the war effort. These facts must be faced in a realistic and patriotic way. Notwithstanding the modifications of restrictive convict labor legislation as provided for in the opinion of the Attorney General holding that the services of President and the order of the Secretary of Labor, during the war emergency, it is the purpose of the Executive Council to stand guard against and to oppose any attempt which may be made to permanently repeal, modify or change the provisions as well as the application of the Walsh-Healey Act and other convict labor legislation secured through the efforts of the American Federation of Labor.

(P. 514) Under this caption the Executive Council relates the circumstances and details in connection with the legal opinion of the Attorney General holding that the services of prisoners could be used for the production of war material. Although presentations were made to the Superintendent of Federal Prisons and to the Secretary asking for safeguard, the Secretary of Labor issued an order lifting protection under the Walsh-Healey Act and the President issued an executive order lifting restrictions on contract prison labor.

We approve the action of the Executive Council in making every possible protest and in now centering on limiting these restrictions to the emergency.

(1943, p. 413) The convention unanimously adopted Res. 117 as follows:

Whereas—It has been reported by the OWI, as late as September 14, 1943, that more than 160,000 prisoners in 100 state prisons are producing war goods for the Army, Navy and Maritime Commission, and

Whereas—On July 9, 1942, Federal restrictions on the sale of convict-made goods to Federal agencies were suspended for the duration by Executive Order, and

Whereas—To date, war contracts totaling nearly $11,000,000 have been awarded to prisons, and

Whereas—Before the war, prison industries were prohibited from competing with free labor, therefore, be it

Resolved—That the American Federation of Labor, in its Sixty-third Convention assembled, go on record to use every possible effort to eliminate manufacturing in prisons in competition with free labor immediately upon the termination of hostilities.

Prison Service Employees (Retirement of)—(1941, p. 595) The following resolution was submitted to the convention and referred to the E.C.:

Whereas—The number of years required for optional and compulsory retirement is based upon the many extra hazards which are placed upon the Prison Service Employees in the carrying out of their duties, and

Whereas—The title "Prison Service Employee" bespeaks the nature of the work done by the employees and it is generally understood that the life expectancy is lessened because of the constant strain and the extra hazard under which they must discharge their duties, and

Whereas—Great consideration must be given this matter as the element of humanity enters into the arguments chiefly on the side of the employee. The various types of men sent to prison and placed under the care of the Prison Service Employees necessitates constant vigil and regulation. Also the years of association with this element lends to the tendency of strain, both mentally and physically that reduces the longevity of the employee, and

Whereas—It is a foregone conclusion that better service would be rendered by replacing the employee after retirement requisite is reached with a younger person, thereby keeping the personnel of the Service at a high standard of efficiency at all times; therefore, be it

Resolved—That the American Federation of Labor recommends legislation to establish a 20-year optional and a 25-year compulsory retirement of all prison service employees due to extra hazard connected with this work; and be it further

Resolved—That the above recommendation be drafted in the form of a bill and the same be presented to the 77th Congress of the United States, now in session, for the consideration and action of said Congress; and be now in session, for the consideration it further

Resolved—That this Convention assembled go on record urging a speedy passage of the said Bill, by the United States Congress, thereby making the same a part of the Statute of the Civil Service Laws.

Resolution No. 67 recites the hazards and responsibilities of Prison Service Employees as reasons for early superannuation and asks for legislation to be drafted, and speedy efforts made to secure its enactment, that would provide for optional retirement after 20 years' service and compulsory retirement after 25 years' service for U.S. Prison Service Employees.

Prisoners of War (also see: Conscientious Objectors)

(1952, pp. 278, 495) The Executive Council reports on its activities to secure relief and indemnity for employees of contractors in World War II, including prisoners of the Japanese and failure of the Congress to enact satisfactory legislation. Your committee recommends that these efforts be continued.

Productivity (Labor Costs)—(1940, pp. 67-68, 389) A. F. of L. requested that authority and direction be given by Congress to Bur. of Labor Statistics to make continuing studies of productivity and labor costs in the manufacturing, mining, transportation, distribution, and other industries. . . . Such studies to show what industries should reduce work hours where new machinery and techniques have increased productivity and reduced labor costs.

Figures are also needed by employers and employes for wage negotiations. By making adjustments in those industries where scientific advance makes shorter hours and higher wages possible, the problem of technological unemployment can be attacked at its source and controlled through the normal channel of trade union agreements. This is the rightful and constructive way to make sure that scientific advance in industries will bring higher living standards instead of an increasing problem of technological unemployment. The information necessary to give productivity and labor cost information each month in 59 industries is readily available in the monthly records kept by these industries. This information has already been compiled so as to show productivity and labor costs from 1910 through 1936 in a study made with W.P.A. funds. Keeping these figures up to date will greatly increase the usefulness of this original investment and develop information which will be constantly used by employers for managerial and financial decisions as well as by unions in planning their lines of action. The sum of $50,000 was appropriated to carry out the intent of this resolution.

Shorter Work Week (Defense)—(1940, pp. 95, 97, 553) Since shortening work week has not kept pace with increased productivity A. F. of L. called for firm stand for shorter work week. Pointed out that in 1940 average week is 39 hours compared to 49 hours in 1929 and yet factories are producing more goods and there are fewer jobs than in 1929. Warning sounded against agitation of some employers for a lengthening of work week. Convention adopted following: "Our work standards must be protected . . . and (we) call upon American Labor to use our united strength to combat destruction of those standards. Maintenance of established conditions of life and work are essential to our national welfare and to defense. All union members are urged to give themselves wholeheartedly to the achievement of the greatest possible volume of defense production under fair working conditions."

Earnings—(1940, pp. 101, 553) Increased productivity means that each worker is responsible for a larger output, and that he should be paid a proportionately higher rate for his services. No matter how intricate and valuable the machinery he can operate, its usefulness and profitableness are conditioned by the control of the worker operating it.

Fittingly increased productivity of our workers has resulted in an all-time high in average hourly earnings reported by the U.S. Department of Labor. The Executive Council's report emphasizes the fact that this improvement is the result of union organization and collective bargaining, reinforced by the foundation of minimum standards fixed by the Fair Labor Standards Act, was an all important contributing factor to these results.

We emphasize that increased productivity has been accompanied by lower labor costs per unit of product. In addition, increased productivity has resulted in lower prices which have brought higher real incomes to wage earners and all salaried workers.

Sustained increases in productivity make possible continuous increases in wages and decreases in the work hours.

Wages—(1940, pp. 101, 557) The importance of a sustained prosperous national economy was pointed out in the Report of the Executive Council. The convention approved the Report of the Council with the following statement:

The cornerstone in efforts to increase national income, to sustain business improvement, to health and efficiency standards of living for all families, is to increase the real wage in step with increases in productivity.

We urge unions where collective bargaining is established and agencies have been set up to handle grievances, to set up formal committees through which workers may cooperate with management in production efficiency and earning power. Unions should also understand the financial and production records of their employing companies for these records are properly the bases for bargaining upon the returns from joint work to be allotted to workers in the form of wage increases and hours decreases. Failure of unions to function properly—whatever the cause—will be reflected in consumer buying inadequate to sustain production.

(1952, p. 169) The E.C. submitted to the convention an important policy statement as to A. F. of L. position on parallel increases in purchasing power with increases in industrial productivity. The following excerpts are taken from the section of the E.C. Report under this title:

The A. F. of L. has long recognized the dynamic possibilities for human betterment in the constantly increasing efficiency and productivity of American industry and agriculture. During the past century the great increase in production per manhour in the American economy as a whole has laid the basis for our present standard of living. Because American workers, organized in strong unions, insisted on receiving their share of the benefits of this progress, a rising wage level has paralleled the rise in productivity.

As early as 1925 the convention of the American Federation of Labor established the policy of advancing workers' purchasing power proportionately with increases in industrial productivity, declaring that:

Social inequality, industrial instability and injustice must increase unless the workers' real wages, the purchasing power of their wages, coupled with a continuing reduction in the number of hours making up the working day, are progressed in proportion to man's increasing power of production.

Because of this policy, the practice of increasing wages and shortening hours, as improved efficiency made such benefits possible, has been recognized and accepted in collective bargaining throughout American industry. . . .

The current unusually rapid increase in productivity has been attributed to: improved technology, new machinery, greater efficiency of management and labor, shift in production to the heavy industries which have a higher average value per manhour of work, operation of industry at levels close to capacity. During World War II, cooperation of Labor contributed substantially to the rapid increase in productivity. In some operations, labor-management production committees increased output per manhour by 20 per cent or more in one year.

It is essential that our country realize its full productive potential and that we do everything possible to increase our productivity and assure equitable distribution of its benefits. It is in increased productivity and in fair distribution of its fruits that lies the secret of our industrial strength and power, and is the greatest living standard of the American people.

(P. 170) Historically, increasing productivity in the United States has been due to many factors. Chief among these are: the competitive private enterprise system; the free consumer market where all who buy may exercise a free choice among many products; the skill of American workers and their cooperation in measures to improve production; the inventive genius of our people and their interest in expanding production. More information about productivity and better methods for measuring it will help each group to participate more effectively in industrial improvement.

Any concerted effort to improve productivity must mobilize the interest and resourcefulness of all groups by assuring all that they will participate equitably in the benefits of increasing efficiency. Labor's wholehearted cooperation is indispensable. It is essential for workers to know that they will share fully and fairly in the gains resulting from increased productivity so that their full effort can be contributed to it. Present wage stabilization regulations however have prevented workers from increasing their wages proportionately with their increase in productivity. For while production per manhour is now rising at the rate of $5\frac{1}{2}$ per cent per year, workers' real wage per manhour has risen on the average only slightly more than 1 per cent per year during the wage stabilization period. This small wage increase however has been more than offset by the increase in taxes, so that the average worker's living standard is actually being reduced while his productivity rises at an unusually rapid rate. In some industries, workers' average earnings have not even kept pace with living costs and rising taxes have reduced living standards severely.

It is significant that while representatives of our country urge foreign nations to improve the living standards of their workers as an essential part of their productivity program, here in the United States the living standard of our workers is reduced when they are denied wage increases commensurate with their growing productivity. To achieve workers' full cooperation in improving production, this situation must be corrected. The first step is the acceptance by the Wage Stabilization Board of the resolution presented by Federation members, which proposed that the Board permit wage increases based on increased productivity.

(P. 406) Convention action on committee report as follows:

Output of goods and services per manhour in the entire American economy over the past fifty years has been increasing at the rate of almost $2\frac{1}{2}$ percent per year. In the last two years, productivity of the whole economy has been rising at the record-breaking rate of $5\frac{1}{2}$ percent per year.

Unless workers share in productivity gains through higher wages, the nation's standard of living will not rise, buying power will not be available to sustain increased production and economic expansion will halt.

Representatives of the American Federation of Labor have called upon the Wage Stabilization Board to permit wage increases based on increased productivity. As long as wage stabilization is in effect, we must insist on a policy which would permit negotiated productivity increases reflecting in full the annual rate of productivity gains made in the economy as a whole.

A larger challenge lies beyond these immediate considerations. Increasing industrial productivity is a responsibility of workers, as well as of management. Labor must play a constructive and positive part in the improvement of productivity in ways in which the essential interests of workers are safeguarded. While responsibility for each enterprise rests with its management, ways can and should be devised for cooperation, consultation and participation of labor in the improvement of efficiency. And, above all, it is on labor that falls the most vital task of translating, through collective bargaining, productivity gains into a higher standard of living.

Levels of consumption are raised and a higher living standard is built, not by increasing productivity alone but by enabling the workers to share fully in the progress of the economy. A modern wage policy thus becomes an indispensable tool of the nation's progress.

To further this policy, we ask that our affiliates undertake research studies of unit costs, as well as of the related wage, profit, price and production factors bearing on productivity and distribution of its benefits. This would provide basic material which would enable the research staff of the Federation, drawing also on available findings of public and private agencies, to prepare a report on the relation between productivity and wages for consideration of the Executive Council.

Whereas—As early as 1925 the Convention of the American Federation of Labor established the policy of advancing workers' purchasing power proportionately with increases in industrial productivity, declaring that "Social inequality, industrial instability and injustice must increase unless the workers' real wages, the purchasing power of their wages coupled with a continuing reduction in the number of hours making up the working day, are progressed in proportion to man's increasing power of production," and

Whereas—The increase in manhour productivity in the textile industry has reached the highest point—in many cases to the detriment of the physical and mental well being of the worker—and this without adequate wage compensation, and

Whereas—This question of productivity and its relationship to wages, consumer demand and unemployment is of paramount importance to the wage earner, the fair employer and the economic well being of our country, it is time now to demand a balance between production and distribution and consumption as the only means of avoiding a depression, therefore, be it

Resolved—That the President of the American Federation of Labor call a special conference at the earliest possible date for the purpose of consideration and concentration on this question of productivity, and to define a policy for the guidance and assistance of affiliated unions dealing with this problem and its far-reaching consequences.

(P. 647) In lieu of this resolution, convention recommended that each national and international union be urged to consider and deal with this problem.

Profiteering (also see: Price Control)

(1941, p. 473) The Convention went on record protesting the unwarranted rise of prices in all consumer goods and instructed the officers to support legislation which would prevent profiteering at the expense of American wage earners.

Prohibition

Volstead Act Modification—(1927, pp. 92, 321) The A. F. of L. at its conventions in 1919, 1921 and 1923 pointed out the deplorable conditions that would come and had come from the enforcement of the Volstead Act. It was contended that the manufacture, sale and distribution of wholesome beer containing 2.75 per cent alcohol by weight would bring about true temperance.

December 22, 1925, the President of the A. F. of L. in behalf of the E.C. addressed a communication to President Coolidge requesting him to recommend to Congress that the Volstead Act be amended so as to meet the suggestions proposed by the three conventions of the A. F. of L.

April 9, 1926, the various declarations of the A. F. of L. and his letter to President Coolidge were submitted to the Judiciary Committee of the U.S. Senate, which was holding hearings on a number of bills. Some of the bills proposed to increase the alcoholic content of beer, which is now one-half of one per cent.

The 1919 convention, before the Volstead Act became a law, declared that in the interest of morality and good citizenship it should provide for the manufacture and sale of wholesome beer.

In 1921 after a trial of the Volstead Act it was found that conditions were more deplorable than the 1919 convention believed could be possible.

During the next two years the E.C. made an extensive investigation of the effects of the Volstead Act and submitted its findings to the 1923 convention of the A. F. of L.

Since then the E.C. has persistently continued its investigation and because conditions are continually growing worse believes that this convention of the A. F. of L. should reaffirm its former declarations in favor of a modification of the Volstead Act so as to permit the manufacture and sale of wholesome beer.

In submitting this demand for a modification of the Volstead Act the E.C. wishes to emphasize that no protest is being made against the Eighteenth Amendment itself. We said in our declaration in 1923, which was endorsed by the delegates by a practically unanimous vote, that "it is our contention that the Eighteenth Amendment under a reasonable and proper legislative interpretation would be beneficial to our country and would have the support of the great majority of our people."

Those who, either by propaganda or coercive tactics, seek to enforce the Volstead Act do not refer to it. They charge every violation of the Act to be a violation of the Eighteenth Amendment. This is not true. The Volstead Act could be amended without in any way violating the provisions of the Eighteenth Amendment.

Therefore this convention emphatically reaffirms its declarations of the past and insists upon Congress amending the Volstead Act to permit the manufacture and sale of wholesome beer.

(1930, pp. 114, 354) The A. F. of L. has repeatedly set forth in several conventions its attitude toward the failure of the Volstead Act to promote true temperance. The developments of the last year, as shown in the evil social conditions which have followed failure of the enforcement of the Volstead Act, have confirmed the position heretofore taken by the A. F. of L. in favor of the modification of this Act so as to provide for the manufacture, sale and distribution of beer containing 2.75 per cent alcohol by weight. The Executive Council in its report to the convention of the A. F. of L. held in Los Angeles, California, in 1927, recommended that the convention reaffirm its declaration of the past and insist upon Congress amending the Volstead Act to permit the manufacture and sale of wholesome beer.

Nothing that has transpired since this recommendation was made has caused the A. F. of L. to change its opinion or its attitude toward this important social and economic question. On the other hand, the faith and belief of the A. F. of L. have been strengthened in the position it has heretofore taken. For this reason this convention most emphatically and unmistakably reaffirms its declaration of the past to urge upon Congress that the Volstead Act be amended so as to permit the manufacture and sale of wholesome beer.

During the past year a communication was addressed to the Chairman of the National Law Observance and Enforcement Commission by the executive officers of the A. F. of L., calling the attention of the Commission to the evils which have followed the enactment of the Volstead Law in its present form. In this communication both the social and economic evils and distress which have resulted from the failure of Congress to modify the Volstead Act were pointed out. It was shown that many industries, including mining, agriculture, transportation, building and other miscellaneous industries were seriously affected; that thousands of men employed in the breweries of the country were forced out and have been compelled to seek employment in other lines. All of this has seriously aggravated the unemployment situation. The social effect resulting from a violation of the law, the making of home brew, the speak-easy, and the illegal manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquor, has had a depressing and demoralizing effect upon our national and social life.

In submitting the position of the A. F. of L. in favor of a modification of the Volstead Act so as to provide for the manufacture of beer of 2.75 per cent alcoholic content by weight, we wish to state clearly that it is in no way demanding the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the U.S. We stated in our declaration in 1923, that "it is our contention that the Eighteenth Amendment under a reasonable and proper legislative interpretation would be beneficial to our country and would have the support of the great majority of our people." We are of the firm opinion that the Volstead Act could be amended without violating the provisions of the Eighteenth Amendment. Such an amendment would provide for the manufacture of beer containing 2.75 per cent alcohol by weight and as a result we are of the opinion that temperance would be promoted and the demoralizing and destructive effects which follow the excessive use of intoxicating liquors purchased and manufactured illegally would be reduced to a minimum.

(1931, pp. 123, 414) We are endeavoring to carry into effect instructions given by several conventions of the A. F. of L. regarding the modification of the Volstead Act so as to provide for the manufacture, sale and distribution of beer containing 2.75 per cent of alcohol by weight. This action on the part of the A. F. of L. was inspired by a firm belief that such modification of the Volstead Act as proposed would promote the cause of true temperance.

It is generally understood that a bill will be introduced at the next session of Congress providing for such modification of the Volstead Act as has been repeatedly proposed by the A. F. of L. It is the intent and purpose of the A. F. of L. to give such proposed legislation its full and complete support. The indications are that public opinion is undergoing a marked change and that either at the forthcoming session or at some future session of Congress the Volstead Act will be amended by legislative action providing for the manufacture, sale and distribution of beer containing 2.75 per cent alcohol by weight.

(1932, p. 71) Conventions of the A. F. of L. have repeatedly declared the opposition of the A. F. of L. to the Volstead Act. These conventions recommended that the Volstead Act be amended so as to provide for the manufacture of beer containing 2.75 per cent alcohol by weight. This action of the A. F. of L. can be properly interpreted as a genuine desire on the part of the membership of the A. F. of L. to promote the cause of temperance, and, in addition, through the rehabilitation of the brewing and related industries, create work opportunities for thousands of idle people.

During the recent session of Congress a number of measures were introduced providing for modification of the Volstead Act. Unfortunately, no favorable vote was taken, but an increasing number of members of Congress voted in favor of a modification of the Volstead Act. It must be clearly evident to all classes of people that public opinion has greatly changed upon this question. One of the major political parties incorporated in its platform a declaration in favor of immediate modification of the Volstead Act. The indications are that favorable action providing for a modification of the Volstead Act as recommended by the A. F. of L. will be taken at the short session of Congress which meets on December 5th.

All that has transpired in connection with this important social question justifies the position assumed by the A. F. of L. in early demanding the modification of the Volstead Act. It is the definite purpose of the A. F. of L. to continue its efforts to bring about a modification of the Volstead Act providing for the manufacture and sale of wholesome beer containing 2.75 per cent alcohol by weight at the earliest possible date.

The A. F. of L. will present an earnest appeal and a strong demand to the members of Congress when the short session convenes on December 5th to pass the necessary legislation providing for a modification of the Volstead Act without delay and at the earliest possible date.

(P. 365) The A. F. of L. is, and has been, in favor of temperance. When the Eighteenth Amendment was adopted by Congress and submitted to the states the A. F. of L. predicted the consequences of its ratification. When the Volstead Act was enacted the A. F. of L. predicted the consequences.

We have reaped the fruits of prohibition and the nation has followed the lead of organized labor in repudiating those fruits.

There is no need at this late day to repeat the truths we have so often stated. Our position is and has been clear.

What America needs now is the speediest possible return to sanity. We urge the immediate modification of the Volstead Act to permit the manufacture, transport and sale of wholesome, palatable beverages, non-intoxicating in fact, and we recommend repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment as rapidly as that can be brought about.

We likewise urge modification of the Webb-Kenyon Act so as to afford ample protection to all such states as may elect to prohibit a beverage of a lesser alcoholic content than is urged by this report upon our national government, or as each may elect, pending final repeal.

(1933, p. 105)—The remarkable haste with which forty-one states and the District of Columbia passed beer legislation can be credited to the agitation kept up persistently by the A. F. of L. since 1919. In that year the convention declared against the Volstead Act and called upon President Wilson to veto the measure. He willingly complied but Congress passed the bill over the veto by a two-thirds vote.

The bill to provide revenue by the taxation of certain non-intoxicating liquors was introduced in the House March 14; passed the House the same day and was sent to the Senate where it was reported favorably by the Finance Committee on March 15, and passed the Senate on March 16. On March 22 it was approved by the President.

The law provides for the sale of lager beer, ale, porter, wine, similar fermented malt or vinous liquor and fruit juices containing not more than 3.2 per cent of alcohol by weight, brewed or manufactured.

Eighteenth Amendment Repeal—1933, p. 109, 536) Twenty-nine states had ratified the amendment repealing the Eighteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States up to September 13th. Eight states will vote by November 7, and it is confidently believed that the amendment will be ratified by that date. From the inception of this legislation the A. F. of L. has opposed the enactment of the 18th Amendment and after its adoption manifested clearly that it was an unwarrantable attempt in the enactment of organic law and would prove to be a failure. The experience under the operation of the law has fully demonstrated our claims. We are happy to note that the consistent attitude of the American Federation of Labor in opposition to the 18th Amendment is about to be realized in its complete repeal.

(1941, pp. 93, 598)—The E.C. reported that efforts were being made to return prohibition and that several bills had been introduced in Congress.

The convention instructed the E.C. to oppose all such measures.

Wartime—(1943, p. 414) The convention instructed the Executive Council "to be alert against any and every effort which may be made during the war emergency to force upon the American people the principle of prohibition."

(1944, p. 413) Under the caption, "prohibition," the Executive Council calls attention to the introduction in the Congress of numerous bills to provide for prohibition of the manufacture, sale, transportation, importation or exportation of beverages containing more than one-half of one per cent by volume of alcohol. Most of these proposals are in the guise of war measures, designed to "reduce absenteeism" of workers or in other ways to speed and increase production. The large number of petitions and letters placed in the Congressional Record indicates a widespread organized effort in their behalf.

Whereas, The dry forces have continuously and unceasingly attempted to obtain some form of national legislation to prohibit the manufacture, sale and distribution of alcoholic beverages, and

Whereas, The dry forces up to this point have not succeeded in obtaining such legislation through the Congress of the United States, and

Whereas, The "drys" have been successfully utilizing the medium of local option election in the several States, and

Whereas, The "drys" have been overwhelmingly successful in their endeavors to dry up county after county in great numbers of States, and

Whereas, According to available statistics, almost one-third of all the nation's counties are dry, wherein twenty-five million people reside, and

Whereas, A successful culmination of such a campaign as is presently being conducted in the great distilling

State of Kentucky, where 70 percent of that State is now dry, must inevitably result in causing complete prohibition, State by State, and

Whereas, The "dry" as a result of the success of their campaigns in local option elections, will be thereby enabled to ultimately accomplish their avowed objective, namely, the complete prohibition of the manufacture, sale and distribution of alcoholic beverages, nation-wide, without the necessity of securing an Act of Congress, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, the delegates in convention assembled, go on record opposing all such activities, and urge every member of this Federation to take immediate cognizance of this serious situation, and make every effort to assist and cooperate to acquaint the general public with the activities of the "dry", and the evil conditions which must obtain if the dry forces succeed in bringing back national prohibition, and be it further

Resolved, That this Federation, its affiliated unions and its members, take such action as is proper and necessary to combat these dry forces in all local option elections whenever and wherever possible, and that we continue to militantly oppose these forces of reaction, in order to protect and safeguard our industrial and economic future.

(1946, pp. 470, 598) The established position of the A. F. of L. against all proposals designed to restore prohibition wholly or in part was reaffirmed by the convention.

Res. 186, also was unanimously adopted as follows:

Whereas, There is a well organized and heavily financed movement in this country seeking through its efforts to prohibit the manufacture, distribution and sale of alcoholic beverages, thereby destroying the distilling and wine industries and causing hardship and unemployment to thousands of employees, members of Distillery, Rectifying and Wine Workers' International Union of America, affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, and thousands of other members of unions, affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, allied to the distilling and wine industries, and

Whereas, The products of the distilling and wine industries are the greatest single source of internal revenue to the United States Government, and are a significant source of revenue to State and local municipal bodies, and by reason of such revenue has resulted in substantial social improvements for the community as a whole; and the distilling and wine industries have caused the full employment of hundreds of thousands of workers in allied industries, and

Whereas, These prohibition forces with misguided zeal seek to plunge the country into a repetition of the lawlessness of the infamous prohibition era, the ill effects of which are still being experienced in this country, and

Whereas, The dry forces have utilized the technique of local option elections as a means of accomplishing their purpose piece-meal, being unable to accomplish this result on a national plane, and are engaged in waging such local option campaigns with untruth and prejudice in total disregard of reasoned findings of scientists and the Yale School of Alcoholism, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the American Federation of Labor, in conformity with its past efforts and utterances, hereby declares itself as unalterably opposed to the efforts of the dry forces and their organizations who seek to declare illegal the manufacture, distribution, or sale of alcoholic beverages; and further declares that the efforts of such forces are harmful to the best welfare of our country, and be it further

Resolved, That this convention, through its president, instruct its affiliated organizations, including its state federations of labor and city central bodies, to keep a vigilant watch for all local option elections and to strenuously oppose the prohibition forces in these local option elections, and that the state federations of labor be instructed to combat the efforts of all forces which seek to prohibit by any manner or means the manufacture, distribution and sale of alcoholic beverages.

(1949, pp. 344, 502)—Res. 123 strongly opposed prohibition and to vigorously oppose the dry forces in any or all local option elections.

(1952, pp. 276, 495) The E.C. reported continued efforts to defeat all attempts to put through a prohibition bill and the convention authorized continued vigilance in the matter.

(1954, p. 154) Efforts to enact legislation to place strict limitations on advertising of alcoholic beverages "in the mails or otherwise" between states, met opposition from the A. F. of L. The E.C. reported:

It has become the habit of many to underestimate the persistence of the prohibition forces and to belittle their efforts as was done in the days prior to 1918 when national prohibition was invoked. Our Unions appeared in strength before both Committees on Interstate and Foreign Commerce as did our own representative.

Proponents of the bills were not as persuasive in front of the Committees as they have been on individual members of the Congress. Even so, they succeeded in inducing some members to appear in their behalf.

Our main argument in opposition to the bills was alcoholic beverage manufacturing, distribution and sale are entirely legal so far as federal law is concerned. To place limitations upon a legal industry would be to hobble or destroy that industry.

The bills remained in committee.

(P. 591) The forces responsible for the passing of the Volstead Act are now operating in devious ways and through one device or another are attempting to bring about another program of national prohibition.

It is our hope that history will never repeat itself on this one question as we all know the passing of the Volstead Act brought about a breakdown of regard for all law. We strongly oppose any attempt to reinstate any form of prohibition.

Public Accounting (Industrial)—
(1931, pp. 82, 365) The interrelation between the interests of all groups and industries and the necessity for coordinated efforts to prevent excessive boom periods and business recessions, make very plain that the facts of all business enterprises should be public property. The idea that private ownership entitles the owners to secrecy in methods and decisions is out of keeping with the fact that these factors directly affect results for other groups. Private ownership may entitle owners to make decisions but full reporting of all the facts should make the information available to all concerned. The conduct of industry is a matter of so much consequence to all employed in the industry, to investors, to the communities, to the maintenance of markets, to our national economic balance, that we must work toward full and open records by prescribed forms of cost and production accounting. Any employer or groups of investors who have the privilege of operating gainful industry in any community ought to be required to make regular and prescribed reports. Public accounting according to prescribed methods is an obligation which accompanies the privileges to operate a business undertaking which affects the community as well as those who supply the credit and those employed by the undertaking. In a very definite way, interrelation of economic activities is increasing the degree of public interest in all business undertakings. This means that there should be public accounting on the facts of business which should be filed with the Federal Government and compiled there. The records should be open to responsible organizations.

Public Debt, Reduction in (Also see: Taxation) (1946, p. 608) The size of the public debt is already causing anxiety, for the debt is a considerable factor in our inflation problem as well as cause of high tax rates. However, the war and the war situation still exist. It is unsafe to reduce military expenses too drastically and our nation must assume new responsibilities in international fields and for the United Nations.

Our own Federal agencies must have funds with which to perform needed social services. In the coming year expensive war agencies will doubtless be liquidated and economies in administration can be made.

Congress and the Treasury must find ways to reduce the national debt before taxation can be materially decreased. In the meanwhile there should be more equitable distribution of the tax burden.

Public Domain and Natural Resources Preservation

(1954, pp. 119, 530) Your committee commends the officers of the Federation for their unceasing efforts to protect our natural resources and the public domain. We urge they continue to protect the natural forests and the public grazing lands. We further urge that the officers and the National Legislative Committee maintain a close watch on all legislation affecting the development of our water resources.

We note that the fight to erect a multiple purpose dam at Hell's Canyon is still continuing and urge continued support by the Federation for this project.

Your committee believes there is nothing more serious confronting this Republic than the conservation of natural resources. With the tremendous expansion of the population a great deal of thought should be given to this problem so that we will not become another China with many starving when we have so many natural resources that can be developed to take care of the increasing population.

There are many square miles of land between the Mississippi and the Pacific wholly unproductive now and we are going to have to put that land in production to take care of future generations. In some parts of the country where the water supply is diminishing, citizens are fighting the establishment of new industry due to this shortage, while in those areas many rivers and their tributaries are dumping billions of gallons of water into the ocean.

We believe in private enterprise but there are some things which private enterprise cannot do.

The altruistic program of the A. F. of L. on conservation is thoroughly approved and steps should be taken to guard against any give-away program on this very vital issue of conservation of the public domain and natural resources.

Public Employees (State, County and Municipal) (also see: Social Security Amendments)

Police and Fire Department Employees (Social Security)—(1940, p. 526) The action of the convention covering the wishes of state, county and municipal employees now covered by their own more desirable pension plans was inclusive of all such employees. The statement adopted by the convention provides for permissive coverage under social security for state and local government employees not covered under special retirement plans.

(Coverage under Social Security Act) (1940, p. 524) Certain employees of State and Municipal Governments had established their own pension funds prior to Soc. Sec. Act and do not wish to be included in the Federal Social Security program. Those not so covered, however, do want coverage. The convention adopted the following resolution dealing with this problem:

That the American Federation of Labor, in convention assembled, does hereby declare as its policy the extension of the Social Security Act and in particular its Old Age and Survivors' Insurance provisions in all cases where States, Political Subdivisions and Instrumentalities of these governmental bodies now have no established pension funds but that the policy of the American Federation of Labor shall be to unalterably oppose the inclusion in any manner by the Social Security Act of the States, Political Subdivisions or their Instrumentalities in the said Old Age and Survivors' Insurance provisions in all cases where established public pension funds are now in operation.

(Extension of Soc. Sec.) (1941, pp. 243, 284, 298, 620) The convention considered a number of resolutions all calling for the removal of the ban on public employees from coverage under Social Security. The resolutions were referred to the Social Security Committee.

(Coverage under Labor Laws) (1941, p. 252, 544) Convention unanimously adopted a resolution calling upon state federations of labor to include in their legislative programs efforts to extend general labor laws, such as the State Labor Relations Acts, State Unemployment Compensation Laws, and others, to include state and local government employees.

(Collective Bargaining Agreements with Public Agencies) (1942, p. 688)

Res. 42 brought to the convention the problems faced by public employees with regard to collective bargaining agreements. The convention unanimously adopted the resolution as follows:

Whereas, Public officials frequently take the position that they do not have authority to enter into agreements with unions of public employees, and

Whereas, The National Institute of Municipal Law Officers published a booklet in which they support the contention that state and local governments do not have authority to enter into such agreements, and

Whereas, Officials hide behind these opinions when opposing the use of collective bargaining processes in governmental agencies, and

Whereas, It is argued that the specific exclusion of government employees from the Wagner Act and from state "little Wagner Acts" indicates a policy to discourage organization among public employees, though the General Counsel of the American Federation of Labor has said. "This argument is readily refuted. First, the obvious intention of Congress was to enlarge and protect the rights of private employees and not to deal with, and certainly not to detract from, the rights of any other category of employees. Second, Congress clearly is without constitutional authority to regulate labor relations between state governments and their subordinate bodies and all of their employees." And,

Whereas, The improvement of economic conditions of state and local government employees is being seriously retarded by the attitudes and biases of public officials who oppose collective bargaining in public service, and

Whereas, Many local unions of public employees have actually engaged in collective bargaining and have negotiated agreements with their employers, and

Whereas, Governmental subdivisions should set an example for the highest type of employer-employee relationships rather than to stand in the way of development and progress, and

Whereas, State and local governments do have authority to engage in collective bargaining and to negotiate employment agreements within the limits of administrative discretion prescribed by law; therefore, be it

Resolved, That this convention of the American Federation of Labor, through its officers and executive council urge state federations of labor and central labor councils, to give all reasonable assistance to unions of public employees or unions which include public employees in negotiating collective bargaining agreements with public agencies and employers.

Post-War Planning—(1944, p. 553)

Whereas, in anticipation of establishing greater equity in the conditions of employment of those engaged by city, county, state, provincial or other employe groups with those employed in U.S. Federal service, and

Whereas, the granting of adequate leaves of absence from work will tend to assure employes of needed vacations, permitting time and means for extended travel which helps create a more homogenous nation, and

Whereas, a 26-day vacation period would increase employment both directly and indirectly, and

Whereas, steps should be taken now, and not after the war, to provide for the meeting of such a post-war problem as that presented by the necessity of spreading employment, and

Whereas, the U.S. Government has already granted to the majority of its employes leaves of absence totaling 26 days per year, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the 64th annual convention of the American Federation of Labor in convention assembled, go on record as favoring and adopting as part of post-war planning the establishing of all employes, whether in federal, state, county, municipal, provincial or other governmental or private services, an annual leave with pay of not less than 26 working days, and be it further

Resolved, That all state federations and central labor councils be asked to inform each of their affiliates of this action with the recommendation that they present such leaves of absence provisions in negotiations of contracts and inclusion therein and work for the adoption of the 26-day vacation principle by municipal, county and state governments.

(1946, p. 545) Res. 138, relating the working conditions in public hospitals in states, municipalities and counties, and calling for active campaigns to improve said conditions, was unanimously adopted as follows:

Whereas, In the public hospitals and other institutions in the states, counties and municipalities for the care of the mentally deficient, the mentally ill, for orphaned minors and for correctional and other purposes the pay, the required work day and work week and the living and working conditions generally have been improved but slightly for more than a quarter century so that such conditions and standards today are woefully inadequate and no longer tolerable, and

Whereas, Employees, inmates and patients in most of such hospitals and other institutions have been neglected and by-passed by legislative and appropriating bodies for so long that only an aroused consciousness by the public generally will result in placing squarely before the responsible law-making bodies these conditions and in awakening them to their several and collective duties, and

Whereas, The benefits of organization and affiliation with union labor have been brought to the employees in a few public hospitals and other institutions with astonishingly satisfactory results in higher wages, better working conditions, shorter hours, up-builed morale, improved care of inmates and patients and in greatly stepped-up efficiency, but the task of organizing the employees because of their isolation and other conditions under which they for long periods have lived make organization efforts difficult and expensive, therefore, be it

Resolved, That this 65th convention of the American Federation of Labor fully cognizant of the conditions described in this resolution and conscious of the responsibility of labor to help to correct them urges all state federations of labor and all subordinate bodies affiliated with the American Federation of Labor to make special efforts during the ensuing year to organize and bring about the affiliation of employees in the public hospital and other institutional services and thereafter to assist them in order thereby to finally establish such organizations firmly in the labor movement, and be it further

Resolved, That the American Federation of Labor through the state federations of labor and other affiliated labor organizations in the several States urges that active campaigns be instituted before the ensuing legislatures and before appropriating bodies of subordinate units of government in order to bring to the attention of such bodies the conditions herein described and to demand that adequate appropriations be made so that modernized employment standards and efficient public institutional and hospital service may result therefrom, and it is directed that copies of this resolution be sent to all state federations of labor and to all subordinate organizations of labor affiliated with the American Federation of Labor.

Collective Bargaining—(1952, pp. 60, 474) Res. 106:

Whereas—The right of public employees to organize and bargain collectively is being challenged in many parts of the United States both through adverse state legislation and through opinions expressed by Attorney Generals, and

Whereas—The right of public employees to bargain collectively is essential to a democratic society, and

Whereas—The International Labor Organization, which represents management and government as well as organized labor, has never taken a firm stand in favor of collective bargaining for public employees, and

Whereas—The consultative committee on white collar workers of the ICFTU has placed before the ILO a request that a strong stand be taken by the ILO in favor of collective bargaining for public employees, therefore, be it

Resolved—That the American Federation of Labor in convention assembled in New York City, in September, 1952, go on record in full support of the program of the ICFTU to secure from the ILO a strong stand in favor of the rights of public employees to organize and bargain collectively, and be it further

Resolved—That all affiliated bodies of the American Federation of Labor be urged to express to the ILO office in Geneva, Switzerland, an urgent request that action be taken immediately to assist in securing for public employees the right of collective bargaining.

Dual Coverage Under Social Security and Private Plans—(1953, pp. 399, 647) Res. 21:

Whereas—Public employees, under existing legislation, are eligible to receive social security only if they first surrender their existing pension plans, and

Whereas—Public employees are entitled to be eligible under both private pension plans and social security so long as the private pension plans came into existence after they were covered by social security, and

Whereas—This is an unique and inequitable treatment of public employees similarly situated, therefore, be it

Resolved—That the 72nd Convention of the American Federation of Labor support and take necessary action to obtain the introduction of legislation to remove this inequity.

Res. 59:

Whereas—The Social Security Act Amendments of 1950 make it impossible for state and local government employees who are working subject to a publicly supported retirement plan to obtain the benefits of Old Age and Survivors' Insurance by integration or supplementation with their existing systems, and

Whereas—According to current surveys retirement allowances of state and local government employees average less than fifty dollars per month and are woefully and increasingly inadequate to meet the high costs of living, therefore, be it

Resolved—That the American Federation of Labor reiterate its position and continue to demand an amendment to the Federal Social Security Law to make it possible for state and local governments to obtain for their covered employees the benefits of Old Age and Survivors' Insurance whenever such employees concur in such action, excepting only firemen and policemen.

Convention referred resolutions to Social Security Committee for action.

Unemployment Compensation—(1953, pp. 452, 655) Res. 144:

Whereas—Employees in state employment, in many instances, are subject to the same fluctuations in employment, and experience the same economic hardships during periods of involuntary idleness as employees in private employment, and

Whereas—Employees of state universities and employees of other agencies and political subdivisions of the state do not enjoy the benefits of unemployment compensation, and

Whereas—The absence of unemployment compensation inflicts certain hardships upon employees of political subdivisions within the states by reason of the seasonal and temporary nature of much of the work provided through state employment, and

Whereas—Employees of the states affected by seasonal and temporary layoffs would be encouraged to return to their employment if compensation was available to them during such layoffs, thereby reducing the cost of labor turnover to state agencies and political subdivisions, and

Whereas—Unemployment compensation for public employees has been approved in principle by the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives on August 8, 1951, when the committee advanced H.R. 5118 providing unemployment insurance for Federal civilian employees, therefore, be it

Resolved—That the American Federation of Labor seek amendments to the Social Security Act, extending the benefits of the unemployment section of the Act to persons engaged in federal and state employment.

Referred to A. F. of L. Committee on Social Security.

Public Health (also see: Social Security; Health)—(1926, p. 210) The A. F. of L. being deeply concerned with the machinery by which examining boards and other governmental agencies maintain professional standards in the healing arts urge that each state federation of labor be requested to interest themselves in the establishment of the best methods for securing the highest efficiency in the healing profession, and that each state federation of labor take recognition of the various legislative health measures proposed for the regulation and control of the machinery as well as the choice of members of the various examining boards in the several states whose duties involve the procedure of granting licenses to practice in the several branches of the healing arts.

The purpose of this resolution is the elimination of fake colleges and schools and requests Labor's support for legislation or adequate state supervision of those licensed to practice in the various branches of the healing arts so that all persons who are licensed to practice will first pass a proper test or examination supervised by qualified practitioners in that branch of the healing art, for which the applicant desires to practice.

(P. 218) The E.C. was instructed to secure through some agency an investigation of the harmfulness of the pneumatic air hammer in its effect upon the workers in the cutting and carving of stone.

(1928, pp. 84, 313) No greater problem confronts the American people than that of health. A bill to coordinate the public health activities of the government, which was supported by the A. F. of L., received splendid support in Congress but when it reached the President he refused to sign it.

(1932, p. 239) The E.C. was directed to take appropriate steps to have the facilities of the Public Health Service extended to the seamen and dredge engineers, either through executive order or amendatory legislation. In this way results may be more quickly obtained and if possible legislative confusion avoided.

(1935, pp. 91, 493) Medical care is a necessity of life. It usually ushers us into the world, attends us at the end, and helps us through our physical crises. It is, in fact, a necessity but economic conditions make it a luxury. While medical skill is by no means perfected, inadequate medical care for the great majority of persons is due to their inability to pay rather than lack of medical competence. Yet we know that the quality of its medical care is an index of a civilization.

The most informing inquiry into medical care which has ever been made in this country was that of the Committee on the Costs of Medical Care which made a five-year study of the subject. The committee found that in 1930 there were the following agencies for providing medical services: Approximating 1,100,000 persons who gave their full time to medical work from which they derived a livelihood. There were 7,000 hospitals with slightly under 1,000,000 beds. The number of hospital beds under government control had been growing steadily. In 1928, 63 per cent was governmental and in 1931, 66 per cent, providing 73 per cent of all patient-days of hospitalization. There were 8,000 clinics and out-patient departments of hospitals; health departments in every state and large city and some of the smaller ones, and in a few rural areas.

The committee found that medical facilities were distributed according to the ability of the community to pay which meant that doctors were crowded in metropolitan areas where some earned good incomes and others were poorly paid. Medical services were very inadequately distributed in rural sections and in the low income states. Doctors and institutions for medical service had to look for support.

The committee's study of medical services needed and received showed that families with incomes under $1,200 or $2,000 received far less medical service than those with incomes of $5,000, $10,000 or more. However, in even the high income groups medical services were about 20 per cent below the adequate standard.

With progress in the technical side of medicine, the capital investment needed for medical practice has steadily increased. The result is increased cost of medical service. It is significant that the capital investment is increasing under government control. With specialization in medical practice and increasing complexity in certain types of diagnosis, costs of sickness from certain causes is greatly increased. However, for common diseases there is little increased cost in diagnosis or treatment, but those have borne a share of the general increased costs.

The Committee on Costs of Medical Care, in its report, reaches this important conclusion:

No one single fact is more clearly demonstrated by the committee's study than this: that the cost of medical care in any one year may fall unevenly upon different families in the same income population groups. The heart of the problem, therefore, is the equalizing of the financial impact of sickness.

The committee found that though on an average only one family in five, or one person in seventeen, received hospital care in the course of a year, illnesses which involved hospitalization were responsible for 50 per cent of the total charges for medical care. The committee also found that 80 per cent of the families under $1,200 paid during the year less than $60 for medical service. On the other hand, 1 per cent of this income group paid $500 or more for medical service during the same year and 2.5 per cent paid between $250 and $500. Such extreme, even though occasional, medical costs were catastrophic to the family.

The committee also found that the reason for high medical costs was not the high incomes of doctors. In 1929 the incomes of one-third of the medical profession were less than $2,500. For every professional income over $10,000 they found there were two doctors receiving less than $2,500, hence the committee found that it was no solution of the problem of medical costs to reduce the average professional income.

In analyzing the studies of the Committee on Costs of Medical Care, Dr. Michael M. Davis said:

They demonstrated that about one-sixth of all families in any given year have to bear over one-half of the total expenditure for the care of sickness for all families; that the amounts expended increase with the income of the family; and that the unevenness of the incidence of expenditure is somewhat greater among the upper income groups. Sickness bills running from a third to a half of the annual income fall every year upon a small but significant percentage of middle-class families, and this fact alone is sufficient to account for an annual stream of complaint from individuals; and sickness costs less high but sufficiently large to be burdensome descend upon many middle-class families as well as upon the much larger group with smaller earnings.

When 21 per cent of all families have annual incomes of less than $1,000; 42 per cent have less than $1,500; and 71 per cent have less than $2,500; it is easy to understand why these families have no, or inadequate, medical service. At present charges it is impossible for 99 per cent of families to set aside reserves for illness. When illness comes it demoralizes family finances and standards of living, and leads to hopeless indebtedness or dependency.

Such conditions have led to the suggestion of pooling the costs of medical care on the ground that the nation needs sound and efficient citizens and should make available the information and medical service necessary to that end. Health insurance would provide against income losses due to illness.

During the past year the President's Committee on Economic Security studied the problem of sickness insurance but made no specific recommendations.

From such studies and materials as are available, the following principles stand out:

1. Sickness incidents and the cost of medical care fall very unequally and without predictability so that there is practically no way for the individual or his family to provide against such emergencies. Particularly is this true with the mounting costs of medical care. 2. Development of preventive medical service is definitely impeded by costs. 3. Cumulative developments of care for organized groups show that adequate service can be given for relatively low family costs. 4. The medical profession needs to feel its responsibility for organization for low-cost and adequate medical service to groups and communities. Public health services and departments should be greatly increased and developed as one phase of developing preventive medicine. In 1929 only 2-1.3 cents out of each medical dollar was spent for public health work. 6. Study of the problem of chronically ill persons should constitute a preliminary step in planning for adequate medical care for all and incomes for those disabled by occasional sickness.

It is obvious that the whole problem falls into two parts: providing incomes for those disabled by illness, and organization of the medical profession to give adequate service at reasonable costs.

The San Francisco Convention directed that studies be made of health insurance and medical services, but the Federation has neither the finances nor the facilities to carry out these instructions. We can better accomplish this purpose by urging the Federal Government to study these problems and by participating in such studies.

(1938, pp. 147, 454) Two separate developments in the past year have directed attention to need for provisions for better medical care.

The U.S. Public Health Service made public its National Health Survey. This survey, financed by the Works Progress Administration begun in the winter 1935-6, included 2,800,000 persons in eighty-three cities and twenty-three rural areas in nineteen different states. This survey related sickness to the economic and social background of the families included, with confirming evidence on every score that sickness and physical disability increase as family incomes decrease. Inability to pay for medical care permits disease to develop and sickness to be prolonged. Disability reduces the income still further and dependency follows. Disability in low income families is double that of higher income families. Chronic diseases are nearly twice as numerous in small income families as in higher ones. Days of disability in the low income families are three times more than in higher income families. These facts point to an important national problem. The second development came from the administration of unemployment compensation. One of the tests for eligibility for benefits is "able to work." A worker who lost his job through sickness and an unemployed person who became sick are not eligible for benefits—though their need may be greater than that of a person who lost his job and retains his health. Workers generally are questioning why this gap in social security. Social insurance plans of other countries include health insurance.

When the Social Security Act was drafted it was not deemed wise to include health insurance. However, in 1936 the President created the Interdepartmental Committee to coordinate Health and Welfare Activities of the Federal Government. In reviewing this field the Committee found need for a national health program which report was submitted to the President. The President directed the Committee to call a National Health Conference to consider proposals. That conference was composed of several hundred persons representing groups concerned with health problems. The conference considered first the need for a program and then the recommendations of the Technical Committee of the Interdepartmental Committee. These recommendations included: expansion of Public Health services; expansion of existing Federal-State cooperative plan for maternal and child health; improved hospital facilities with federal grants for construction and operation; medical care for the medically needy through federal grants in aid to states; expansion of tax-supported public medical services for persons of moderate incomes compensation for income loss through unemployment caused by sickness and a choice between health insurance or a plan of public medicine.

The President of the A. F. of L. submitted to that conference the following proposals: (1) Extension of the work and activities of the U. S. Public Health Service, adding to its preventive and research functions responsibility for planning for adequacy of local health facilities.

(2) Hospital facilities should be brought up to adequate standards through Federal grants. The resulting construction work would provide employment.

(3) Expansion of our program for maternal and child welfare services.

(4) Legislation to enable families with low and medium incomes to meet the costs of sickness. The National Health Survey showed that 80 per cent of all families covered had incomes less than $2,000 (minimum income that will provide standards of health and decency is $2500!) The insurance method of pooling funds to meet pooled risks offers the only practical way out. Only a compulsory plan is practical. Our President proposed a plan which involved adoption of no new policies—expansion of workmen's compensation legislation. Workmen's compensation provides for medical care and compensation for loss of wages in times of industrial injury by accident or occupational disease. By amending these laws to include medical care for workers and their families during sickness in addition to industrial injuries with compensation for loss of income to the income earners, security of workers would be greatly increased. Federal grants to help such an extension of workmen's compensation legislation would be conditioned on incorporation of prescribed federal standards, making all state laws uniform and bringing them under the federal social security program. Workers also should contribute to such funds.

Under workmen's compensation legislation free choice of physicians is established so there is no regimentation of the medical profession. This principle should be retained. A second and indispensable provision is an exclusive state fund for the custody of all funds. This social service should be in no way connected with business for profit.

It is obvious that legislation making proposals to meet the costs of medical care will be under general discussion. The A. F. of L. must develop a position on this issue. No social security program is adequate which ignores the insecurity due to sickness and costs of medical care.

Public Lands, Sale to Private Concerns—(1947, p. 651) Through Res. 46, protest was lodged with the convention against the sale of federally owned lands to private interests. The convention authorized the Executive Council to make a thorough-going study of the subject and to take such action as will protect public interest.

Public Relations (also see: Publicity, Press Service for Armed Forces; Veterans, and Syndicated News Column).

Public Relations Department Proposed (1942, p. 552) The importance of good public relations for the aims and purposes of the trade union movement was presented to the convention through a resolution No. 29 which was referred to the Executive Council for consideration. The resolution and convention action follows:

Whereas—It has become increasingly apparent that large sections of the American public still have no adequate understanding of the aims, ideals and achievements of organized labor and that suspicion and prejudice against the labor movement are systematically fomented and financed by anti-labor elements in business, industry and in public life, and

Whereas—Such anti-labor trends and activities not only tend to destroy mutual confidence and respect among the people of our country but also menace our national unity and undermine our war effort, and

Whereas—It is equally apparent that without the adequate support of a well-informed public opinion, the social gains achieved by the labor movement through decades of struggle and sacrifice, are in constant jeopardy, be it therefore

Resolved—That this convention instruct and empower the Executive Council to establish a Public Relations Department which shall be adequately financed through a special fund raised from contributions of affiliated international unions and federal locals in proportion to their membership.

It should be the function of this Public Relations Department to widen all avenues of contact between the organized labor movement and the general public; to interpret the true economic and social aims of the millions of organized workers to the American people, and to present to our fellow countrymen in every walk of life an undistorted picture of trade unionism as a constructive force in the national life and the national economy.

Your committee is in approval with the purpose of this resolution. It is evident that the application of this purpose cannot be adequately secured without first receiving careful consideration by the Executive Council and the affiliated organizations.

(1943, pp. 510-513) Seven resolutions were submitted to the convention calling for the establishment of a public Relations Department. The following committee report on the subject was unanimously adopted:

Your committee finds itself in accord with the spirit of all these resolutions, but does not concur in the thought of creating a public relations department, separate and distinct from all such activities carried on by the officers and the Executive Council of the Federation.

We would call attention to the splendid work having been and now being carried on, not alone by the Federation but as well by several of its departments and a number of our national and international unions. It is evident good use has been made of every available opportunity presented through the public press, the public forum, the radio, screen, and other means of communication in presenting organized labor's constructive efforts to the community and to the nation, to industry and our national economy, past and current; and in meeting unjustified and unwarrantable criticism and attack designed to place our movement in a false and unfavorable light.

However well may have been our past activities in this direction, there is room for improvement and enlargement of these activities. To that end we recommend, first of all, that the officers of the Federation make every possible effort to have all activities of this character of the several departments, and of our national and international unions, coordinated with like activities of the Federation.

We further recommend that the Executive Council, through its officers or a committee appointed for this purpose, consider how these public relations activities may be furthered and effectually enlarged, and that it likewise consider the setting aside of an appropriate sum of money out of the Federation's funds and insofar as its finances will permit, for this purpose, and that in the event it is essential or desirable to further enlarge such a fund for the purposes indicated, that the national and international unions be solicited for such voluntary financial contributions as will enable the Federation to engage in an effective and all-comprehensive public relations campaign.

Your committee understands that progress has been made by the Special Committee on the Labor Press and that it proposes to submit a report to an early meeting of the Executive Council.

The bona fide labor press has been of such great service to the labor movement in the past year that your committee feels the American Federation of Labor should make every effort to provide wider opportunities for its growth and development.

Your committee heartily concurs with the conclusion of the Executive Council that the "Labor For Victory" radio programs of the American Federation of Labor have been of great value in informing the public of labor's great contributions to the war effort.

We recommend that this convention formally express the whole-hearted appreciation of the American Federation of Labor to the National Broadcasting Company for making this radio time on its nation-wide network facilities available to the American Federation of Labor without charge as a public service.

Your committee is indeed pleased by the fact that President Green has appointed an outstanding committee to study ways and means by which the American Federation of Labor can be of greater service and assistance to the bona fide labor press which upholds its policies. This action was taken in conformity with the instructions of the 1942 convention at Toronto. The personnel of this new committee, guarantees that its recommendations will be of practical and constructive benefit to the bona fide labor press.

(1944, p. 277) Greater respect and consideration for Labor's opinion, attitude and abilities are evidenced everywhere. From the public relations point of view, the increased prestige and respect which have come to the American Federation of Labor as a result of its relief activities are not the least part of its achievements in this field. The American Federation of Labor's participation in community work has in many instances brought Labor for the first time into direct and friendly contact with elements to whom organized labor had previously been an almost unknown quantity. This first-hand knowledge and understanding of the aims and ideals of the A. F. of L., plus the widespread publicity that has been given to the League's work on behalf of the National War Fund and Community Chests, have been of immense value in helping to counteract the anti-Labor trend that has lately been evidenced in the reactionary press of the country.

Front-page articles in influential newspapers, advertisements of appreciation in Chest publications and daily papers, messages of appreciation on the radio, all reflect this general recognition of and respect for Labor's contribution to the welfare of the community. Further proof of Labor's new standing in the community can be found in the fact that there are already a number of significant instances where American Federation of Labor representatives have been elected chairmen of the community-wide campaigns, of budget committees, executive committees, and boards of directors.

Publicity, Radio and the Labor Press—(1944, p. 591) The convention considered the report of the E.C. dealing with attacks via public media on labor and adopted the recommendations of the committee, containing the following:

This portion of the Executive Council's report relates to the wave of anti-labor propaganda which has been launched against our trade union movement. In addition it refers to the volume and varied attack against labor on the home front, and the efforts of the publicity and information service of the American Federation of Labor to overcome the onslaught. The Executive Council indicates its purpose for the broadening and extending of the public relations program of the Federation, including greater use of the radio, and expanding and strengthening the labor press. It pays a tribute to our labor press, but indicates the necessity for greater helpfulness by the Federation.

It is the opinion of your committee that the immediate period following peace will require farther reaching and more widespread public relations than heretofore. Unquestionably public relations has become one of the outstanding requirements of our trade union movement.

Your committee recommends that the Executive Council review the entire question of publicity and public relations in all of its aspects, so that a program may be approved and set into action which will give the most effective publicity relations possible.

(P. 591)—Res. 12:

Whereas—While we regard these still unrealized decisions of the 1943 Convention as a step in the right direction, we still believe that the expansion and improvement of organized labor's public relations could best be effected through the establishment of a properly financed Public Relations Department by the Federation, therefore, be it

Resolved—That this convention approve the formation of such a public relations department in the American Federation of labor to interpret the true social aims of organized labor; to present a responsible picture of trade unionism as an element in the American way of life; and to establish close mutual relations of good will and cooperation with those sections of the public to whom labor is bound by a community of interest.

(1946, p. 534)—Res. 104:

Whereas—The forces of extreme wealth, spearheaded by the National Association of Manufacturers, have by their vicious and virulent campaign of villification against organized labor created a monstrous libel on our traditionally democratic labor movement, and

Whereas—This campaign of attack against our movement is prosecuted through the medium of the radio, the controlled press, controlled periodicals, and other avenues and instruments operated by the National Association of Manufacturers, and

Whereas—The control of public opinion in our country is in the hands of an unscrupulous group of talented and efficient propagandists, and

Whereas—These people are in the employ of the most economically powerful and politically entrenched confederation of greed ever formed for so vile and reprehensible a purpose, and

Whereas—The effectiveness of this campaign to remove organized labor from the economic scheme of things, is clearly demonstrated by the increasing number of anti-labor members of our National Congress, and not for their constituents who send them to our national capital, and

Whereas—To offset the distorted picture of labor-management controversy built up in the public mind, it now becomes a duty of public service incumbent upon organized labor to correct wrong impressions, therefore be it

Resolved—That the American Federation of Labor through its many powerful national and international brotherhoods and their thousands of affiliated local unions, seriously consider the necessity of launching a combined and intensive national educational campaign, and a public relations activity program in order that it may give Labor's side of the story to a fair-minded but ill-informed public.

(1947, p. 664) The need for a Public Relations Department in the A. F. of L. was projected through Res. 143 as follows:

Whereas—It is essential for the welfare of our country that the American Federation of Labor not only continue to merit public esteem and support but that it also shall gain and hold more public esteem and support, than at present, therefore, be it

Resolved—That the American Federation of Labor establish a new and permanent Public Relations Department, to fill the void of wisdom on the part of those who fail to realize the vital importance of organized labor to the welfare of our country, and be it further

Resolved—That in the establishment of said Public Relations Department, the American Federation of Labor Executive Council shall employ competent public relations counsel, to the end that all men and women in our country, both within and without the American Federation of Labor, shall become men and women of understanding who hold the peace and jointly work for the good of our country.

The resolution was referred to the E.C. for "study and such action as is deemed advisable."

(1947, p. 660) Res. 118, calling for a program of public relations, was unanimously adopted as follows:

Whereas — The labor movement, due to recent national legislation, needs now more than ever before to get its message before the American people regularly, and

Whereas — The American Federation of Labor and many of its affiliated national unions, did a remarkable job of getting labor's views recently through the medium of well-written advertisements in large daily papers and by means of a very good program on the air, and

Whereas—Those who are responsible for putting through many of the anti-labor measures recently have been doing and are continuing to do a tremendous selling job through their public relations programs, and

Whereas — Labor has been very backward in realizing the need for this very valuable medium and has utilized it only when in immediate danger of losing many of its gains, therefore, be it

Resolved — That this convention of the American Federation of Labor held in San Francisco, California, October 6, 1947, consider a program of public relations which will attract national interest so that labor's constructive work of elevating the standards of living of the American wage earners can be presented in an enlightening and educational manner which will show that labor unions are the best assurance for a greater America.

Expansion urged—(1947, p. 667) Attention was again directed to the need for expansion of the public relations program of the A. F. of L. through Res. 150, which was referred to the E.C. for consideration and such action as it deems most advisable. This resolution made the following proposal:

Resolved—That the American Federation of Labor expand its publicity by making of transcripts of educational programs to be sent out over the nation to central labor unions with a request that local radio stations be asked to broadcast them as a public service, in the same manner and without cost, as is now being done for the National Association of Manufacturers and other business groups.

(P. 562) A good public relations service is more essential to the Federation than ever before. We have the task of informing all who constitute the public of Labor's objectives and the reasons for them. It is important that the public realize Labor has a constructive program evolved out of experience and planned to help the masses of the people participate in democratic institutions and share in economic and social progress.

To be sure, we do not have the resources of those opposed to us, but we can secure the cooperation and the aid of sympathetic groups and thus bring indirect influence to bear on all the media which influence public opinion. We need to bring Labor's cause home to those who write the news and edit papers, those who manage magazines and weekly news publications, and those responsible for news reels.

We shall count upon a broader, more effective program than ever before.

(1947, p. 632) The need for better public relations was reflected in Res. 26 calling for plans to expand the A. F. of L. publicity through radio. The resolution was referred to the E.C. in connection with plans for an enlarged publicity campaign.

(1947, p. 211) In its report to the convention on the special advertising and radio campaign which was resorted to in order to combat anti-labor propaganda being leveled by the press and radio during the period when the Taft-Hartley Bill was being considered by Congress. It was pointed out that this was the first time in the history of the Federation when the organization "was compelled to buy space in newspapers and time on the air, day after day and week after week, to express its views in a way that would command public attention." the report further stated:

The fact that the Taft-Hartley Bill was eventually enacted over President Truman's veto does not detract from the effectiveness of the educational campaign against it which was carried on by the American Federation of Labor.

The need for the establishment and maintenance of a permanent public relations program for the purpose of offsetting the widespread propaganda activities of the powerful forces arrayed against organized labor is both very great and clearly apparent. In this connection it should be pointed out that the National Association of Manufacturers is planning a $2,000,000 public relations program for the coming year.

The American Federation of Labor program should be aimed not only at the repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act and the defeat of similarly repressive legislation, but it should also stress the positive achievements of the American Federation of Labor in behalf of the nation's workers and the American people as a whole.

(1948, pp. 262, 466) Res. 85 called attention to the need for a national public relations program to combat the campaign of attack being directed against the labor movement. The following was adopted:

Resolved—That this convention recommends that the American Federation of Labor through its many powerful national and international unions and their thousands of affiliated local unions, seriously consider the necessity of launching a combined and intensive national educational campaign and a public relations activity program in order that it may give Labor's side of the story to a fair-minded but ill-informed public, and be it further

Resolved—That the executive officers of the American Federation of Labor coordinate all of its resources toward this end as outlined in this resolution.

(1953, p. 497) The convention committee which considered the E.C. report on the subject of A. F. of L. activities in the field of public relations made the following statement which was unanimously approved:

We are gratified by the progress made by the American Federation of Labor in the important field of public relations.

We must face the fact that it has become increasingly necessary for us to bring home to the public the value of the services rendered by our labor movement to American workers, to the nation as a whole, and to the free world. Broad support of our objectives and policies can only come from widest possible dissemination of the information about the activities of our Federation and its purposes.

To tell the story of labor adequately, every available means should be effectively employed. We urge, therefore, that an integrated public relations program should be planned and put into operation by the American Federation of Labor during the coming year.

Public Schools (Education)—(see: Public Schools) (under Education)

Publications (Labor) for Military Forces

(1942, p. 548) A large number of Central Body and State Federation delegates attending this convention of the American Federation of Labor, have requested the Committee on Resolutions to draft a supplementary report calling upon all A. F. of L. International Unions to mail a generous supply of their official journals and publications to the libraries and recreation centers of every Army and Navy, or other Military Camps in the United States and the Dominion of Canada, in the belief that this is the best and most effective way to combat a growing anti-union sentiment reported to be in existence in some military training establishments.

A goodly proportion of the members of every local union have joined the armed forces of our nation, and are going out to fight in all parts of the world. These men are cut off from their trade union contact and when they leave these shores where labor papers cannot follow them, they will no longer be in a position to hear the trade union side of any question. The papers they will see will far too often be anti-labor. They will be among men unfamiliar with trade unionism. They know that their jobs are being filled by union men, and they will be open to fears for the future of those same jobs. They need to be kept in touch with their own trade, with their own union, and to be made to realize that they are still an integral part of the American labor movement.

With this thought in mind, your Committee on Resolutions respectfully requests every International Union to include on the mailing list of their official journal, and other official news publications, the camps of the Army, the Navy, the Air Corps, and all other military training and military recreation centers, so that union labor news and all other current union information will be made available to those who wear the uniform of the United States and the Dominion of Canada.

Publicity (also see: Public Relations)

(1946, p. 616) We believe that in order to create a more favorable state of public opinion toward organized labor and to counteract the attacks made upon it by inimical sources, the information service should be extended and expanded. Labor cannot hope to compete with the vast and expensive propaganda mills financed by big business, but it should take every opportunity, both nationally and at a local level to maintain an alert and effective publicity service.

(1946, p. 421) Res. 29:

Resolved—That the American Federation of Labor, in convention assembled, urge that a movement be brought about through a concerted effort to establish news broadcasts by radio, radio commentators, columnists in as many daily papers as possible, and to work toward the establishment of more daily newspapers throughout the United States which will editorially espouse the cause of organized labor.

In Labor Disputes—(1946, p. 474) The following resolution, No. 60, was unanimously adopted by the convention:

Whereas — Several states have enacted legislation which compels employers, whose employes are striking, locked out or engaged in a labor dispute, to insert such information in any advertisement seeking to obtain new employes, and

Whereas — Such legislation has been effective in preventing deception by employers in such condition and prevented them from recruiting strike-breakers, and

Whereas — Such legislation has assisted organized labor in increasing wages, reducing hours and improving conditions of employment, therefore, be it

Resolved—That the American Federation of Labor seek enactment of similar legislation in all States.

Publicly Owned Industries in Collective Bargaining

(1941, p. 471) Three resolutions (Nos. 2, 7, and 118) on the subject of Collective Bargaining in Publicly Owned Industries were unanimously adopted by the Convention, declaring it to be the right of employees of publicly owned or publicly operated industries to bargain collectively in the same manner that employees of privately operated industries bargain, and that the employes of publicly operated industries are within their rights in seeking signed working agreements with the managers of publicly operated industries, whether such managers be public officials of units of government or administrators legally designated by the proper public officials, and that such employes of publicly operated industries may properly use the same methods in securing signed agreements as the employes of privately operated industries may legally use in their negotiations.

Public Works (also see: Work Projects Administration; Alien Employment)

Public Works, Citizens on—(1928, pp. 81, 216) What is known as the Bacon bill, "to require contractors and subcontractors engaged on public works of the United States to give certain preference in the employment of labor," was favorably reported by the House Committee on Labor. It provides a remedy for a long standing grievance of Labor. At the same time reputable contractors, those who believe in paying fair wages and granting desirable working conditions, gave every support to the measure. It provides that where any work is being done for the United States preference shall be given to mechanics and laborers as follows:

1. To citizens of the United States and of the state, territory or district in which the work is to be performed who have been honorably discharged from military or naval forces of the United States if they are qualified to perform the work.

2. To citizens of the United States who are bona fide residents of the state, territory or district in which the work is to be performed.

3. To citizens of the United States.

4. To aliens.

For many years government contractors have gathered together large groups of "handymen" and taken them from state to state to work on government contracts. In the erection of many buildings and doing other work these "handymen" have been kept in barracks and are subjected to a sort of peonage. This prevents competent workmen in the various states from securing employment on government work. It also permits contractors who employ mostly "handymen" to underbid reputable contractors. The consequence is that buildings are not stably erected and other public works do not come up to specifications. The bill was reported favorably by the House Committee on Labor but no action was taken.

Puerto Rico (also see: Territorial Federations of Labor)—(1924, p. 202) We are in full sympathy with the hopes and ambitions of the people of Puerto Rico, for a greater autonomy in the affairs of their civil government. We approve the attitude and activities manifested by the E.C. for the early attainment of this end, and urge continuance of this effort on behalf of the people of Puerto Rico.

(P. 300) This complaint was presented to the convention:

That on the 4th of November, 1924, a general election was held on the Island of Puerto Rico, under the authority, laws and flag of the U.S. of America, for the purpose of electing all the officers of the government of the Island, except the governor thereof; and during the said elections a combination of the old political parties who control the economic and vital forces of the Island, using all kinds of force, violence and corruption, employing the public insular police and officials of the department of justice, and putting into practice the worst kind of devices, including actual use of force against the electors, the voting of paid agents with the name of thousands of legal electors, whereby the said legal electors all over the Island were deprived of their votes; making false returns and annulling enormous amounts of ballots which were perfectly legal; and finally, committing an innumerable set of outrages and violations of the law, proof of which is being prepared and shall be submitted to the Congress of the U.S. in the form of documentary evidence enough to contest and annul the legality of the election.

Convention directed President to submit complaint to President of U.S. and both houses of Congress.

(1925, p. 54) A bill introduced in Congress provided for an investigation of alleged frauds committed in the election held in Puerto Rico in November, 1924. The violations of election laws during that election, it was charged, were so flagrant that the people wanted the perpetrators exposed and provision made for honest elections in the future. Secretary of War Weeks opposed the sending of a commission to Puerto Rico and the bill failed of passage. H.R. 6583, providing a more ample civil government for Puerto Rico, attracted much attention, but failed of passage. Hearings were held by the judiciary committee of the House and the bill was reported favorably, but it was impossible to have it acted upon by the House. It provided for the election of a governor and vice-governor in January, 1928.

(P. 315) Convention directed the president of the A. F. of L. to request the President and Congress to appoint a commission as soon as possible to investigate the deplorable industrial conditions as well as the general government affairs of the Island, especially the living and working conditions of the masses of laborers in Puerto Rico, land and financial resources, and to ascertain how the Federal as well as the Organic Law of the Island have been continually violated by the big financial interests, corporations and individuals which exploit the people of the Island to the discredit of our Nation.

(1926, p. 167) The A. F. of L. proposes to continue to lend its worthy and unquestioned cooperation, influence, moral aid and all financial help possible to the working masses of Puerto Rico as represented by the "Free Federation of Workingmen in Puerto Rico" and to the people of that island in general, in their efforts to better conditions, to establish a decent scale of wages, a reasonable number of working hours, living conditions in harmony with civilization, the promotion of social legislation and the exercise of all their civil rights free from industrial or political tyrants.

(P. 234) Inasmuch as the people of Puerto Rico have been granted a civil form of government in harmony with our territorial form of government and being a law-abiding and peaceful race of people, that this convention, through its officers, request the President of the U.S. to transfer the official governmental business of that Island from the Bureau of Insular Affairs to a civic department, and in our judgment the Department of the Interior, which has always had official supervision over all our territorial forms and government.

(1930, p. 373) The president of the A. F. of L. is authorized and he is hereby earnestly urged to instruct and direct the Legislative Committee of the A. F. of L. toward the legislative demands of the Puerto Rican Federation of Labor, so that the case of Puerto Rico be properly presented and duly heard, and so that the proper action might be taken before Congress to secure adequate help from Congress and also to secure the extension to Puerto Rico of the laws above referred to.

(1931, pp. 114, 351) Congress created a Department of Labor in Puerto Rico, the head of which is designated as the Commissioner of Labor. This legislation has been asked by Puerto Rican labor for years. Heretofore labor interests have been looked after by the Agriculture Department. The provisions of the Act for the promotion of vocational education and rehabilitation of persons disabled in industry or otherwise was also extended to Puerto Rico. This will be very helpful to that Island as there are many thousands who will be benefited by the Act.

(P. 145) The Free Federation of Workingmen of Puerto Rico, which is the state branch of the A. F. of L., conscious of its mission has reiterated its most sincere support for all the American institutions in the Island as against those who have intended to create disruption, discredit and disloyalty of our form of democratic government. Puerto Rico is a part of the U.S. The justice that this nation extends to Puerto Rico has touched the hearts and the minds of the majority of the people in the Island. The Puerto Rican Federation of Labor has indorsed unreservedly the plans of economic rehabilitation and social justice being developed to make the Island a better community in which to live.

(P. 350) The president of the A. F. of L. is authorized to earnestly urge the President of the United States and recommend to Congress to favor the petitions of Puerto Rico on its general plans of rehabilitation as set forth in the report of the E.C.; and, furthermore, to instruct and direct the Legislative Committee of the A. F. of L. toward the economic plan of the Puerto Rican Federation of Labor so that the needs of the Puerto Rican people be properly presented and duly heard, and so that the proper action might be taken before Congress to secure adequate means of rehabilitation from Congress.

(1932, pp. 113, 301) The most significant labor event during this year was the preparation and celebration of the Twelfth Labor Congress, which took place during the 6th, 7th and 8th of September, 1931, at San Juan, together with the Labor Day celebration.

The Twelfth Labor Congress undertook the study of the great problems affecting the Puerto Rican community, especially the producing class, and passed a resolution placing greater stress upon labor propaganda and education through organization. It authorized its executive council to organize unions under a special apprentice or training system, with dues in consonance with the prevailing industrial and agricultural unrest, so that apprentices may stabilize their lives before applying for admission to the respective national or international unions.

Periodicals, magazines and newspapers of the national and international unions and of the A. F. of L. are used by an information bureau, and translations from English to Spanish are made for publication in the daily press of Puerto Rico. This work of public information is carried out for the purpose of enlightening the workers and public opinion in general as to the principles and activities of organized labor in the U.S.

The hopes of the Free Federation with regard to the creation and functioning of the Department of Labor and its beneficent and renovating influence have not been in vain.

The Twelfth Legislature, during its second special session (1931) and its fourth regular session (1932), passed the following Acts which extend the field of usefulness of the Department:

Act No. 4. To authorize the treasurer of Puerto Rico, with the approval of the Governor of Puerto Rico, to issue bonds of the people of Puerto Rico for the purpose of purchasing lands to be devoted to agricultural farms under the provisions of the homestead law; to provide for the payment of principal of and interest on said bonds, to repeal Act No. 9 of April 15, 1930, as amended by Act No. 41 of April 24, 1931, and for other purposes.

Act No. 13. To amend Sections 2 and 10 of an Act to determine the procedure in cases of claims of workers and employes against their employers for compensation for their work, approved November 14, 1917, and for other purposes.

Act No. 16. To amend Section 9 of an Act to prevent, and aid in the settlement of, strikes and lockouts, approved June 3, 1919, and for other purposes.

Act No. 36. To amend Sections 1, 3, 4, 6, 8, 9, 10, 12, and 14, and to repeal Sections 5 and 11, of Act No. 13, entitled "An Act to regulate the operation and handling of cinematograph machines, and for other purposes, approved July 3, 1923."

Act No. 37. To amend Sections 2 and 3 of "An Act to prevent and aid in the settlement of strikes and lockouts," approved June 3, 1919, as subsequently amended, and for other purposes.

Labor has declared its support for the indivisible association and unification of the people of the Island with the people of the U.S. and has declared also that such association and unification has given to the people of Puerto Rico American institutions of freedom, the help of civilization and progress, is the right to avoid in the future oppression and despotism on the part of those who are claiming to be the masters of our Island.

Puerto Rico Labor favors every political advancement for the Island, but it is more concerned in bettering the economic conditions of the masses of the people. The president of the A. F. of L. was asked to present the following plank in behalf of the workers and people in general of Puerto Rico at the Republican and Democratic conventions:

Since Puerto Rico is a part of the U.S. with over 1,500,000 inhabitants who are American citizens, we believe that the spirit of its people and the purposes of its Organic Act are entitled recognition in good faith, and that therefore, Congress and the President should include the Island in all legislative and administrative federal measures enacted or adopted for the economic rehabilitation of their fellow citizens of the mainland.

The A. F. of L. succeeded in obtaining the incorporation of the above plank in the Republican platform. The A. F. of L. has always been in favor of such fair recognition and has opposed every intent of the reactionary element of the Island who has appeared before Congress with the purpose of restricting the constitution of the Island as against the rights of the people politically, economically and otherwise.

(1933, pp. 139, 279) The laws enacted by the national Congress extended to Puerto Rico, especially those tending to eliminate unemployment, as the National Recovery Act and others dealing with the bettering of the working and living conditions of the people, serve as an incentive to promote a permanent and systematic campaign of organization throughout the Island. Conferences, lectures, and open air meetings are being held daily by the various trade unions and federal labor unions so as to enlist the largest possible number of members in their ranks, and thus be in better condition to receive the benefits of the National Recovery Act.

A special convention of labor representatives from all over the Island was held at the insular capitol on July 22; 150 delegates attended representing about 25,000 workers. This conference was called by the E.C. of the Free Federation of Labor. The commissioner of labor, in behalf of the governor of Puerto Rico, has invited the leading employers of Puerto Rico to a joint conference with representatives of the labor organizations to discuss the application to Puerto Rico of the National Recovery Act and to draft codes of fair competition to be submitted to the approval of the national administrator. This conference was held at San Juan, July 28.

Most active among the various labor unions are those of the needleworkers and its kindred branches, which give employment to about 60,000 workers, mostly women. It is expected that within a very short time a very large proportion of these workers will be joining their unions and prepare themselves to affiliate with the national and international unions of its kind or to the A. F. of L. direct. The needlework industry represents a business of nearly $15,000,000 annually. One of its chief aims is the elimination of home work and the unfair competition of contractors, subcontractors and all sorts of middlemen who prey on the workers' wages.

Next to the needleworkers, the most active are the tobacco strippers, chauffeurs and the building trade unions.

Agricultural workers, laundrymen, button makers, printers, barbers, bakers and confectionerymen, retail clerks, stenographers, longshoremen, shoemakers, and many others are continuously on the go with the only purpose in view of enlisting 150,000 workers, men and women, within the ranks of the Free Federation of Labor. A revival of the old spirit is now in progress and the results are near at hand.

(1934, pp. 170, 357) Important developments have taken place in Puerto Rico during the past year, all of which have brought practical results in strengthening the already existing organizations and in organizing new unions.

The hope instilled in the minds and hearts of the Puerto Rican workers by the New Deal, intensified their enthusiasm for organization. Hundreds and thousands of workers of all trades, especially those employed in the sugar industry and needle trades, crowd the federation halls anxious to join their respective unions, or to apply for charters for new ones.

There is no doubt but that Section 7 (a) of the National Industrial Recovery Act has been a great help in the organization drive throughout the Island.

There are now 450 local unions with a membership of approximately 80,000 covering all trades and occupations under the jurisdiction of the Free Federation of Labor of Puerto Rico. Great credit is due to the earnest, capable work of the volunteer organizers and the representatives of the organized labor movement of the Island for the steady progress in organization. They have rendered yeoman service through open air meetings, conferences, lectures and personal interviews.

Sugar and needle trades being the leading industries in the Island, it follows logically that unions of agricultural and needle workers lead the organized labor movement. About 125,000 workers are employed in the sugar industry, including factory and plantation workers. In the needle trades it is estimated that nearly 100,000, mostly women and children are employed, ninety per cent or more of whom are home workers.

The workers in Mayaguez, mostly women, the leading center of the needle work industry, last October made a most courageous protest against unbearable conditions through a general strike. This gradually affected the entire industry. Through the cooperation and mediation of the commissioner of labor, who took charge of the situation at the request of the governor, an agreement was secured by which the workers received an increase in wages ranging from 15 to 25 per cent.

As a result of the strike, unions have been organized in the greater number of the needle trade centers. At present more than 75 per cent of the factory and shop workers are organized. A start has been made to organize home workers. There are now 35 local unions with a membership of about 12,000. This includes 9 unions, exclusive of home workers, with a membership of more than 3,000.

A campaign has been started to bring all the needle workers' unions under the banner of the Ladies Garment Workers International Union.

Act No. 17, approved August 24, 1933, providing pensions for destitute widowed mothers, assigned the sum of $100,000 annually for its expenses and administration, said sum to be taken from the tax on beer and light wines.

A pension board composed of five members was provided in the law; the commissioner of labor, the commissioner of health, and a representative of the Free Federation of Labor were designated besides two other persons.

Officers were installed and thousands of petitions were filed and classified, but, for some unknown reason, the treasurer of Puerto Rico did not set aside the sum appropriated by the insular legislature.

At the 1934 regular session of the legislature, the law imposing a tax on beer and light wines was amended to include tax on all kinds of liquors; and, as the law does not specifically provide the appropriation for the "Widows' Pension Fund," even though it is specifically provided for in the original Act, the governor and the treasurer of Puerto Rico ruled that the law is not in operation.

The economic commission of the legislature and the pension board have requested from the attorney general of Puerto Rico an opinion on this matter.

(P. 172) The federal emergency laws have been made applicable to Puerto Rico, due to the active efforts of the representative in Congress from Puerto Rico. The Island has been benefited to a great extent through these laws. More could be accomplished if the works undertaken were of a permanent character.

(1935, pp. 162, 447) The annual convention of the Free Federation of Workingmen of Puerto Rico was held on Labor Day. The social and economic condition of the workers of the Island was discussed at large. It is estimated that there are 375,000 unemployed workers in Puerto Rico and of these, 60,000 are sugar and tobacco workers.

In view of this situation the convention resolved to request the secretary of agriculture to enforce protective regulations of labor, with regard to minimum salary, hours of work, child labor and other conditions which appear in the contract of agricultural adjustment for the sugar industry and which are enforced in the beet sugar and sugar cane industry in the United States. Another resolution also provided that a request be made to the Agricultural Adjustment Administration at San Juan to hold meetings with employers and employees in order to reach a satisfactory agreement to be in force for the grinding season 1935-36.

A resolution was also approved requesting that preference be given to 25,000 sugar and tobacco workers who had been left without employment because of the restriction of crops in all public works in rural districts.

The convention petitioned the Congress of the U.S. that the processing taxes now paid by the citizens of Puerto Rico in accordance with the agricultural adjustment legislation be levied and collected by custom officials of Puerto Rico to create a special fund in the insular treasury for public works, community aggrandizement measures and to protect the health and for the general welfare of the people of the Island.

Delegates attending this convention represented 75,000 workers.

Collective agreements were signed in January, 1935, between the Association of Sugar Growers and the Insular Council of Factory and Agricultural Workers Unions covering 123,000 workers and between the shipping companies and the dock laborers of Puerto Rico, affecting 20,000 workers.

Strikes among the bed and mattress workers, carpenters, salt workers and other trades, involving 5,000 workers, were settled by the mediation and conciliation commission.

The Governor and the Commissioner of Labor cooperated in the satisfactory settlement of these conflicts.

The annulment of the National Recovery Act by the Supreme Court of the U.S. did not affect materially labor conditions in Puerto Rico. During its functioning in Puerto Rico only three codes were approved: for loading and unloading of fertilizers, for needlework and for bakeries. The approval of these codes not only limited the activities of labor in its struggle for better conditions but also imposed inferior wage rates and working hours as compared with those previously in force.

The legislature of Puerto Rico passed numerous laws beneficial to the people of Puerto Rico. Among the most important ones were the following:

An act permitting the people of Puerto Rico to levy taxes on alcoholic beverages, which contains a provision that $30,000 be set aside for the construction of model houses for laborers, which shall be leased with right to ownership.

A plan was approved setting forth all the economic and social problems affecting the people of Puerto Rico, dealing with the insular and municipal debts; municipal charities; the necessity of creating subsistence farms to absorb a large number of rural laborers; rural electrification and irrigation, and unemployment, and other measures for the protection of commerce, industry, agriculture and labor in general.

The term fixed for the construction of the Labor Temple of the Federation was extended five years. Ten thousand dollars has been collected and fifty thousand dollars is needed.

An Act establishing an exclusive state fund for workmen's compensation.

An Act appropriating a yearly sum of $150,000 to meet the deficit caused by the Workmen's Compensation Act since the year 1928 to the present time. The total sum owed to clinics, injured persons, and for other expenses amounts to $700,000.

With a view to facilitating the securing of homes and agricultural farms by industrial and agricultural workers, a reassessment of all the property under the jurisdiction and administration of the homestead division of the Department of Labor was ordered.

An Act establishing the eight-hour day in all commercial and industrial establishments.

The Department of Labor was granted a bigger appropriation in order to increase its personnel and enlarge its activities.

Voting powers were granted all citizens of both sexes, literate and illiterate. The election law including this provision is believed to be the only law of its kind in the world.

The President established the Puerto Rican Reconstruction Administration.

An extremely conservative estimate of the burden directly and indirectly imposed upon Puerto Rico by federal recovery legislation, shows after deducting amounts received by Puerto Rico through allotments of public work and emergency relief funds, that Puerto Rico has been penalized to the extent of twenty-four and a third million dollars during the past year. All funds allotted from the emergency relief appropriation constitute in every sense a part compensation of such burden and hence must not be considered as emergency relief.

The Puerto Rican labor movement requested federal authorities to extend the Social Security Law to Puerto Rico and the program of workers' education.

Puerto Rico, with the exception of Canada, is America's best overseas market in the new world.

(1936, p. 119) On January, 1936, agreements between the agricultural and factory workers unions and the Sugar Producers Association and between the longshoremen unions and ship companies were renewed. These agreements bettered to a great degree the relationship between employers and employees, wages and conditions of employment.

The legislature in its last session held February, 1936, approved many legislative measures tending toward the betterment of social and economic conditions of the workingmen. To relieve the unemployment situation the legislature approved a $6,000,000 public works program. The funds for this program will be obtained through the issuance of bonds to be redeemed by a tax on gasoline which normally amounts to $1,500,000 a year.

The Widows Pension Bill failed of enactment this year, but efforts will be continued toward the enactment of this measure.

A campaign of organization was carried on throughout the Island. Many public meetings were held and conferences for the education of workers conducted.

After many petitions from the organized labor movement of Puerto Rico and with the aid of the A. F. of L., a training center for workers' education teachers was established in Puerto Rico the latter part of last year under the Federal Workers' Education

Division of the Relief Administration. The training center secured the cooperation of prominent educators, including members of the faculty of the University, and the work of training teachers was carried through.

The enthusiasm of the students was unusually great. Toward the end of this project and when teachers already trained were ready to start workers' education classes throughout the Island, the Puerto Rican Reconstruction Administration, which supplanted the FERA, did not provide funds to continue this educational work. Professors and students of the training center, feeling the great usefulness of this work in Puerto Rico, have given their services voluntarily and established a temporary workers' education bureau under the Department of Labor, which was inaugurated by Commissioner of Labor through a radio broadcast. The workers of Puerto Rico insisted that educational service should be included under the federal grant as has been done in the U.S. and they ask that the A. F. of L. shall continue to aid toward this end.

The labor movement and a great majority of the people of Puerto Rico were greatly shocked by the introduction of a bill in Congress intended to provide for holding a plebiscite for independence of the Island. The bill was introduced without consultation with its citizens, or the legislature or any officials of the Island.

Through the establishment of American institutions in Puerto Rico and the aid of the A. F. of L., the workers of Puerto Rico were able to secure guarantee for public assembly and the right to organize and exist. The workers firmly believe that under independence there is the possibility of reversion to old practices which would imply repression for labor unions and the masses of the people. Independence would spell economic ruin for the Puerto Ricans. The feeling for independence is confined to a very small group of people while the majority believe that the protection of and relationship with the United States have afforded the best opportunity for development and progress.

The workmen of Puerto Rico, through the Free Federation of Workmen, have always labored for a closer and permanent union with the aid of the A. F. of L. In the elections which will be held on November 3, 1936, the workers will go to the polls to elect not only men who have always defended our economic interests but also who firmly believe in Puerto Rico's permanent association with the U.S.

The Puerto Rican workers have expressed their gratitude to the A. F. of L. for the assistance that it has been given during the year. They have expressed the hope for continuation of that assistance, especially with regard to the extension of federal legislation to Puerto Rico with the purpose of bettering economic and social conditions of the people, such as the Social Security Law, and the permanent establishment of a workers' education center.

(P. 474) We urge that the proper authorities undertake to secure an amendment to the Social Security Act by the Congress to provide the benefits of the Social Security Act to the workers of Puerto Rico and all other territory comprising the U.S. of America.

(P. 494) The A. F. of L. instructs the E.C. to request the U.S. Congress that the benefits of the Wagner-Peyser Act be made applicable to Puerto Rico through an adequate amendment to such Act by the Congress of the U.S.

(P. 496) In view of the fact that uncertainty, doubts and confusion have been created during the past year in the Island of Puerto Rico because of the agitation for independence; taking into consideration that the effects of this agitation have been felt in business, and other activities in the Island and in the continental U.S., all of which has been most detrimental to the interests of both the U.S. and Puerto Rico; and having in mind that the people of Puerto Rico are anxious that this situation be brought to an end, the E.C. of the A. F. of L. is further instructed to take action on this proposal as soon as possible.

(1937, pp. 213, 315) At a meeting held by the E.C. of the Free Federation of Workingmen of Puerto Rico on November 19, 1936, a "Three Years Organization Plan" was approved to be inaugurated on January 1, 1937. This plan was recognized as "Tres Años de Renovación y Vida," the purpose of which was to inject new life to the organized labor movement throughout this Island. The first activity conducted in compliance with the above mentioned plan was a meeting of representatives of agricultural labor unions affiliated and unaffiliated with the state federation to discuss the terms of a collective agreement to be submitted to the Sugar Producers Association of Puerto Rico, as the grinding season was to begin about thirty days after this meeting was held. Two additional meetings of the same representatives were held at weekly intervals and finally a committee was appointed to meet the representatives of the Sugar Producers Association to discuss the stipulations and terms of the agreement to be in force for the whole year 1937. The terms preliminarily agreed upon by representatives of both sides were submitted to the ratification of the different local unions and a collective agreement was approved by which some 140,000 workers were benefited.

An agreement between the Longshoremen Unions of Puerto Rico and the Shipping Companies was again renewed by which the workingmen received an increase of 16 per cent on their salaries and full control is granted to the Insular Council of Longshoremen Unions employing their members in the different ports of Puerto Rico.

Approximately twelve thousand longshoremen and dock workers throughout the different ports of Puerto Rico are covered by this agreement.

As a result of the action taken by the Commissioner of Labor of Puerto Rico, in declaring that Act No. 45 of 1919, establishing minimum wages for women employed in industrial and commercial occupations was constitutional and in full force in Puerto Rico, beginning April 1, 1937. That is, after the Supreme Court of the U.S. of America decided the case of Elsie Parrish vs. West Coast Hotel Company, a general campaign was conducted among the women tobacco strippers to have them organize and insist upon demanding that they be paid the minimum wage provided by law.

The result of this campaign has been that, at the time of writing this report, over twenty-five employers in the tobacco stripping business, have signed collective agreements with the different unions.

Act No. 45, approved June 9, 1919, established minimum wages for women. This Act declares it to be unlawful for any employer to pay women (girls included) in industrial or commercial occupations or public service undertakings lower wages than those specified by law, to wit:

At the rate of $4.00 per week to women of 18 years of age; and $6.00 per week to women over 18 years.

The Supreme Court of Puerto Rico rendered decisions declaring this Act to be constitutional in 1920 and again in 1921.

Later, in the year 1924, by virtue of jurisprudence handed down by the Supreme Court of the United States in Adkins vs. Children's Hospital (Dis- trict of Columbia, 261 U.S. 525, which declared unconstitutional an act similar to ours, in regard to the fixing of minimum wages for women), the Supreme Court of Puerto Rico revoked its former decision and decided that Act No. 45, approved June 9, 1919, was contrary to the Constitution because it violated the principles of free contracting.

On March 29, 1937, the Supreme Court of the United States handed down an opinion in West Coast Hotel Company vs. Ernest and Elsie Parrish, upholding the constitutionality of the law in regard to minimum wages for women of the State of Washington, thus reversing its former decision.

As soon as this decision was rendered, the Free Federation of Workmen of Puerto Rico requested from the Commissioner of Labor information as to the legal status of the women workers under the circumstances. The attorney general of Puerto Rico rendered a legal opinion to the effect that the minimum wage law of Puerto Rico had been revived automatically by the decision of the Supreme Court of the U.S.

Due to the efforts of our organization, having a substantial representation in the House of Representatives and Senate of Puerto Rico, thousands of the employees of the People of Puerto Rico have received increases in their monthly salaries this year. The efforts of the organized labor movement in Puerto Rico have proved successful in the general elections which took place in our Island in November last, and the possibilities are that there will be less difficulty in securing the adoption of better social legislation in the near future than in previous years.

Our organized labor movement was affiliated this year to the Workers Education Bureau. Although our institution is in lack of funds to carry on a systematized plan for workers education, diffusion of educational matter has been made in the form of printed matter, through radio broadcasting and on the public platform in cooperation with the Labor Department of Puerto Rico.

In connection with the workers education plan, the Fifty-sixth Annual Convention of the A. F. of L. unanimously adopted a resolution asking the president of the A. F. of L. to urge the proper federal authorities to carry on workers education in Puerto Rico as is done among the different states of the Union, and that funds from the Puerto Rico Reconstruction Administration, or from any other available source be allotted for this activity.

It is reported that there are active unions in Puerto Rico affiliated and unaffiliated numbering 195, and that there are unions affiliated and unaffiliated which are inactive, numbering 157, making a total of 352, and 7 central bodies.

In addition to the natural difficulties confronted by the labor movement in Puerto Rico, as in so many other parts of the continental U.S., of an economic and social character, the labor movement of Puerto Rico had to confront political conditions created by small groups agitating for the separation of the Island from the United States. The president of this federation was the victim of an assault while delivering a speech last October in Mayaguez, when shots aimed at him, intended to take his life, were made by one of the members of such groups who claimed to believe in independence, but not in liberty and freedom.

The organized labor movement of Puerto Rico has been, since its inception, in favor of a permanent union of Puerto Rico with the U.S. It has been our duty not only to fight against social and economic evils, but also against political evils which would deprive the people, and very particularly the workers, of all intervention in the organization of our government. Political conditions, on account of the actions of these groups practicing terrorism, were unsettled to such an extent that our labor movement had to take a strong stand to protect the leaders of our movement against assault and assassination. Fortunately, the government has succeeded in stopping terrorism and conditions at present are different from what they were about a year ago.

Taking into consideration the economic, social and political difficulties we had to confront during the year and the lack of adequate funds to conduct our campaign; as well as unemployment which is general in the Island and also the result of seasonal employment of many of our very limited industries, the three years organization plan as being conducted has produced very satisfactory results which have been of great benefit to the working people of the Island.

The moral support of organized labor, as represented by the A. F. of L., its ideals and principles which have always been an inspiration for us, constitute the strongest grounds upon which our organization campaign has always been based and we are grateful to this movement for all it has been able to do for Puerto Rico and will continue to do in the future.

(1938, pp. 127, 533) The E.C. of the Free Federation of Workingmen of Puerto Rico, in line with the organization plan approved on November 19, 1936, has worked during this year with the same zeal and enthusiasm displayed last year. Activities were intensified and results have been highly gratifying, both in connection with city workers as well as rural laborers. The Tres Años de Renovación y Vida (Three Years of Rehabilitation and Progress) campaign has exerted a valuable influence in renewing the interest and enthusiasm of labor leaders and labor people in general, and has notably contributed to the defense and maintenance of the ideals, tactics and procedures of the A. F. of L. and this Puerto Rican state branch.

(P. 131) Taking advantage of the situation created in the dock controversy by some irresponsible persons, the reactionary forces in the legislative assembly of Puerto Rico introduced a bill to establish compulsory arbitration and making obligatory the awards made by an arbitration committee created thereby. This bill was consistently fought by the Free Federation of Workingmen of Puerto Rico, through its loyal members occupying seats in our legislature, through the press, through meetings and other means. The Insular Department of Labor was also against this proposed legislation. Fortunately for the working people, so many amendments were made to this bill that as finally enacted it is unimportant and harmless.

(P. 429) The A. F. of L. believing Puerto Rico to be a full part of the U.S., therefore makes the recommendation that an incorporated territorial form of government be initiated and established in Puerto Rico by the Congress of the U.S. without further delay and that the people of Puerto Rico be enabled to rapidly develop full and complete economic and political self-government by granting the right to elect its governor and other high officials.

(1939, pp. 284, 562) Regardless of the position adopted by different industries of Puerto Rico who have been opposing the Federal Wage and Hour Law, the Free Federation, in line with the policies of the A. F. of L., has always maintained that the extension of this statute to Puerto Rico would be highly beneficial. On May 31, 1938, our institution sent the following cablegram to the U.S. Congress:

Puerto Rico Free Federation of Workingmen, affiliated to A. F. of L., organized 1899 and the only bona fide labor organization following American ideals representing more than hundred thousand workers respectfully demands that in approving hour and wage bill no discrimination shall be made detrimental to our working classes. We hope to be treated as continental American citizens. Our institution also urges approval in this session of bills extending to Puerto Rico federal, social and economic legislation.

For several months after the passage of the law there existed in Puerto Rico a state of uncertainty, in industrial as well as labor circles, owing to the fact that the machinery necessary for enforcing the law had not been organized in this Island. This situation gave rise to intense doubts. Many employers of the tobacco and needlework industries closed their shops, thus laying off thousands of workers who earned their livelihood in these industries. The campaign waged by employers against the Fair Labor Standards Act, in Puerto Rico as well as in the mainland, reached a surprising state of intensity, creating in many circles an apparent spirit of opposition to the law.

(Governor to be appointed)—(1940, p. 547) Convention unanimously adopted a resolution expressing gratification over new appointment of Admiral Leahy (former governor of Puerto Rico), to become Ambassador to France, and further recommending the following procedure in selection of new governor:

... That in view of our interest in the well being of the inhabitants of Puerto Rico, the president of the A. F. of L. be instructed to wait on the President of the United States and to convey to him the message of this convention that in appointing a new governor for Puerto Rico, the interests of labor constituting the great majority in the Island, be taken into consideration.

That the president of the A. F. of L. be also instructed, in learning of the appointment of a new governor for Puerto Rico, to confer with him and advise him on the necessity of following the very well established policy of keeping at the head of the Department of Labor in Puerto Rico, a man from the ranks of labor selected from among the members of the A. F. of L., as it has been the case in Puerto Rico since the organization of the Labor Department in 1931.

(Social Security)—(1941, pp. 296, 618) A resolution was adopted by the convention directing the E.C. to continue efforts to amend the Social Security Act so as to include workers of all territories and possessions of the United States. With that objective the matter was referred to the Social Security Committee.

(1943, p. 189) On February 5, 1943, the Social Security Commission of Puerto Rico submitted to the governor and legislative assembly (pursuant to a law approved April 2, 1941, creating the Commission) a report containing recommendations and drafts for the establishment of an Island-wide public assistance program. The commission is composed of five persons appointed by the governor, with the advice and consent of the Senate of Puerto Rico. The first vice president of our federation represents the labor interests. Plans following the lines of the A. F. of L. have been submitted by him to said commission. The commission was created for the purpose of studying, drafting and reporting to the governor and the legislative assembly the plan or plans necessary for the establishment of a social security program. Appropriations made are definitely inadequate to meet the local needs.

The Free Federation of Workmen has repeatedly demanded, through the conventions of the A. F. of L., the full extension to Puerto Rico of the Social Security Act.

(1948, pp. 325, 468) Reaffirmed previous demands for extension to Puerto Rico of Titles I, IV and X of the Social Security Act.

(1949, pp. 336, 495) Res. 104 called upon the A. F. of L. to "vigorously reiterate its demand to Congress for the urgent extension to Puerto Rico of the Social Security Act as a means to improve social and economic conditions of said American territory and provide the Island with an appropriate legislative measure that may permit the people of Puerto Rico to face the problem of social insecurity and unrest."

(1951, p. 289) Res. 39 called for instructions to the E.C. to continue efforts to secure legislative measures extending and applying fully to Puerto Rico all the titles and provisions of the Social Security Act.

(P. 561) Referred to committee on Social Security.

(1953, p. 397) Res. 15 reaffirmed position of A. F. of L. in favor of the extension of federal aid to education in Puerto Rico as well as in favor of the extension of all the titles of the federal Social Security Act to the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico; 2—Instruct the E.C. and its officers to continue their efforts to have these federal statutes extended to our fellow American citizens in Puerto Rico.

(P. 646) Your committee recommends that this resolution be referred to the Social Security Committee with instructions to discuss the matter jointly with the Committee on Education.

(Wagner-Peyser Act)—(1941, p. 611) Res. No. 155 calls attention to the fact that the Wagner-Peyser Act, creating a new United States Employment Service, which was enacted by the 73rd Congress, made no provision for extending its benefits to Puerto Rico. It also recites a resolution upon this subject adopted by the 56th annual convention of the A. F. of L. at Tampa, Florida, November 16-27, 1936, and requests this convention to instruct the E.C. to redouble its efforts to secure an amendment that will extend the benefits of the Wagner-Peyser Act to Puerto Rico.

(Self-Gov't)—(1943, p. 456) Res. 11, reaffirmed by the 1943 convention, registered opposition to legislation introduced in the Congress looking to independence for the Island of Puerto Rico. Resolution also called for support to efforts to make the Island a state of the Union.

(1944, p. 414) The report of the E.C. lists numerous bills introduced in the 78th Congress dealing with affairs in Puerto Rico, and cites the action of the A. F. of L., in cooperation with the labor movement of Puerto Rico, in regard to them.

Many bills have been introduced providing for extending to the people of Puerto Rico a greater measure of self government and selection of administrative officials by popular election. One measure provides that the compensation of U.S. government employees in the Territory of Puerto Rico shall be at a rate of twenty-five per cent higher than for similar employment in the continental U.S.

Your committee recommends adoption of this section of the E.C.'s report and also that the E.C. be instructed to continue its cooperation with the Puerto Rico Federation of Labor to secure a greater measure of self-government and improvements in economic conditions.

(Constitution Proposed)—(1948, pp. 327, 469) The right of Puerto Ricans to draft their own constitution was endorsed through Res. 120 as follows:

Resolved—That the A. F. of L. in convention assembled in Cincinnati Ohio, in harmony with its well-established lished policy of fostering the political liberties, rights and privileges of the people of the U.S., their territories and of mankind, declares that inasmuch as the people of Puerto Rico have shown with clear evidence to the nation and to the world their maturity and capability toward a complete self-government within the American political structure; and inasmuch as the U.S. Congress through the Treaty of Paris assumed the delicate responsibility of determining the political destiny of the people of Puerto Rico, Congress should not postpone any longer the definite clarification of the political status of Puerto Rico and to that effect considers it desirable and highly justified that the territory of Puerto Rico be granted the right to draft and approve its own constitution five years after November 2, 1948, subject to the final approval of said constitution by the Congress and the President of the United States; and that the E.C. of the A. F. of L. be authorized and empowered to carry on the purpose of this resolution through those actions which might be deemed advisable in behalf of the people of Puerto Rico; and that copies of this resolution be sent to the President and the Congress of the U.S. and to the governor of Puerto Rico.

(1950, pp. 169, 457) The E.C. reported that the labor movement of Puerto Rico supported legislation favoring a constitutional government for Puerto Rico. This constitutional government, however, was not designed to affect basic relations with the U.S.

(Protection of Labor Rights in Constitution)—(1951, p. 289) Res. 40 called upon the AFL to assist the people of Puerto Rico in the drafting of a constitution satisfactory to those governed thereby.

(P. 561) Your committee is in sympathy with the resolution and recommends that this convention empower the officers of the A. F. of L. to assist in securing a constitution acceptable to the people of Puerto Rico, and render every assistance to the Puerto Rico Free Federation of Labor.

(Social and Economic Conditions)—(1944, p. 474) (Res. 21) Resolved—By the Sixty-fourth Annual Convention of the A. F. of L.:

1. That the E.C. of the A. F. of L. be authorized and directed to appoint a committee to investigate at the earliest possible moment the social and economic conditions of Puerto Rico so as to enable the E.C. of the A. F. of L., upon the report of this committee, to recommend to the President of the United States and to Congress those measures that might be considered just, reasonable and necessary to ameliorate social and economic conditions of the inhabitants of the Island and that would also permit Puerto Rico, through its duly accredited representatives to participate in all the post-war plans and programs intended to rehabilitate our nation and dependencies.

2. That said committee be also empowered to investigate how the labor movement of Puerto Rico is functioning and to find out what cooperation could be rendered to carry out its work to improve conditions of the toiling masses of Puerto Rico and to protect and maintain the principles and ideals of the A. F. of L.

Your committee recommends that this resolution be referred to the E.C., with the expression of the committee that it has thorough-going sympathy with the problems of our brothers in Puerto Rico.

(Full franchise for)—(1946, p. 524) Res. 39, adopted, as follows:

Whereas—The President of the United States, Hon. Harry S. Truman, appointed Hon. Jesus T. Pinero, a Puerto Rican-born American citizen as governor of Puerto Rico with the consent of the Senate of the United States, and

Whereas—This is the first time in our political history that a Puerto Rican has been selected for the governorship of the Island, and

Whereas—In the inaugural ceremonies the Secretary of the Interior read a message sent by President Truman offering his support and that of the nation to Governor Pinero, and

Whereas—The A. F. of L. has given constant support to the Puerto Rico Free Federation of Workingmen and the people of Puerto Rico in their demands, toward bettering the political conditions of the two million American citizens living on this Island, therefore, be it

Resolved—That this 65th convention of the A. F. of L. held in Chicago, Illinois, expresses its satisfaction to the President of the U.S. for the appointment of Mr. Jesus T. Pinero for the governorship of Puerto Rico, a step which is considered as the initial one toward the strengthening of the local self-government of the Island, and be it further

Resolved—That this convention recommends to the Congress of the U.S. that the Organic Act of Puerto Rico be amended to the effect of granting the people the right to elect the governor at or before the general elections to be held in November 1948, consistent with the resolutions of previous conventions of the A. F. of L. and the demands of the people of Puerto Rico, and be it further

Resolved—That said Organic Law be liberalized to the extent that its provisions be in conformity with the rights that should be vested in the Puerto Ricans as American citizens and in accordance with the Treaty of Paris.

(Political Status)—(1947, p. 625) Res. 5, unanimously approved by the convention, called for a clarification of the political status of Puerto Rico as follows:

Whereas—The sixteenth convention of the Puerto Rico Free Federation of Workingmen held at the City of Arecibo during March 14, 15 and 16, 1947, unanimously approved a resolution asking from Congress and the President of the United States the immediate clarification of the political status of Puerto Rico, and

Whereas—Puerto Rico has been under the American flag since July 25, 1898 and under the Spanish colonial regime since Columbus discovered the Island in 1493, and

Whereas—The people of Puerto Rico have lived during the last half century in a democratic climate having proved once and again its capacity as a matured and well-seasoned community, and

Whereas—The loyalty of the two million American citizens living in Puerto Rico to the American flag, to the nation it represents and to the ideals and principles it symbolizes has been evidenced during the first and second World Wars, and

Whereas—The clarification of the political status of the Island of Puerto Rico will enable the orientation of the educational processes to practical objectives, and

Whereas—The world is living in an international hour of clarifications, definitions and liberties, therefore, be it

Resolved—That this sixty-sixth convention of the A. F. of L. held in the City of San Francisco go on record declaring that the American territory of Puerto Rico has reached such a point of maturity, capability and loyalty as a progressive community within the jurisdiction and under the auspices of the U.S. that the Congress of the U.S. is morally obligated to a clear definition of the political status of the Island of Puerto Rico through those measures compatible with the rights and privileges of the American citizenship vested upon the people of Puerto Rico in 1917; and that the E.C. be authorized to take such action as deemed advisable to carry on the purpose of this resolution and to ask Congress and the President of the U.S. for the approval of such measures that may definitely clarify the political status of the two million American citizens living in Puerto Rico; and that copies of this resolution be sent to Congress, to the President of the U.S., to the State Department and the Department of Interior.

(Sugar Processing and Marketing)—(1948, p. 329) Res. 122 directed attention to the problems facing the Puerto Ricans under the Sugar Act of 1948. The resolution was referred to the E.C. for study and appropriate action. The resolution specifically requested the following:

Resolved—By the A. F. of L. in convention assembled that it expresses its vigorous condemnation of any attempt by any part of the government of the U.S.; by Congress or the government of the U.S. itself to place Puerto Ricans in the category of a second-class citizenry or to limit the rights, privileges and immunities recognized to them or bestowed upon them by the Congress of the U.S. through the Treaty of Paris, the Organic Law or through legislation or action of Congress and the government of the U.S.; that it recognizes the existence of an apparent discriminatory measure approved by the Secretary of Agriculture interpreting the Sugar Act of 1948 that merits a thorough investigation of the case presented in this resolution toward the redress of any damage or injustice imposed upon the sugar refiners of Puerto Rico and the people of the Island in general and to that effect authorizes and entrusts the E.C. of the A. F. of L. to conduct such investigation as complete as possible making the proper recommendation to the U.S. Congress, to the President of the U.S. and the Department of Agriculture; that copy of this resolution be sent to the above mentioned entities and to the governor of Puerto Rico and that copies of the final recommendation made by the E.C. of the A. F. of L. be sent to the Puerto Rico State Federation and to the governor of Puerto Rico.

(Wage-Hour Law)—(1949, pp. 336, 495) The A. F. of L. convention was requested, through Res. 103, to instruct the E.C. to endeavor to secure the enactment of the necessary legislation to include Puerto Rico within the Wage-Hour Law.

(Committee to Study Conditions)—(1949, pp. 337, 495) Res. 105 proposed that the A. F. of L. appoint a special committee . . . "to carry on a thorough investigation of the social, economic, political and industrial conditions of the working people of Puerto Rico so that said special committee may render a report with the necessary recommendations to the E.C. of the A. F. of L." Referred to E.C. for inquiry and appropriate action.

(Sugar Act of 1948)—(1949, pp. 337, 497) Res. 106. Resolved—By the A. F. of L. in convention assembled in the city of St. Paul, Minnesota:

1. That in view of the prevailing economic conditions of the Island of Puerto Rico it vigorously and earnestly urges from the U.S. Department of Agriculture and from the Marshall Plan Organization that steps be taken so that the American territory of Puerto Rico could find the way to sell its surplus production of sugar through the channels of said Marshall Plan Organization or through those that could be appropriately fixed by the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

2. That the E.C. of the A. F. of L. be instructed to order a thorough study of the Sugar Act of 1948 in order to recommend to the U.S. Congress the corresponding amendment to said Act to protect not only the domestic area of Puerto Rico but thousands and thousands of workers employed in the sugar industry in the United States.

(Federal Benefits to Workers)—(1950, p. 173) The council recommends that continued support be given to the workers of Puerto Rico in order that they be treated on the same footing as the workers of a state of the Union, for the purpose of receiving the benefits of the Social Security Program, Housing, Federal Aid to Education, Minimum Wage, and other federal benefits.

(Fair Labor Standards)—(1950, pp. 167, 457) The E.C. reported on efforts made to secure full application of the Fair Labor Standards Act to the Island. Convention endorsed the E.C. report and authorized continued efforts to be made.

(Wage Rates)—(1950, pp. 52, 484) Resolved—By the 69th convention of the A. F. of L. that the administrator, in the light of industrial conditions in the continental U.S., of the leather, leather goods and related products industry, and, further in consonance with the spirit, intent and specific provisions of the Act, approve an hourly wage rate of 75c per hour or as close to 75c as possible for the workers of Puerto Rico, engaged in the leather goods and related products industry, and be it further

Resolved—That copies of this resolution be forwarded with all prompt dispatch to the Wage and Hour Administrator and to the Special Industry Committee No. 8 for Puerto Rico. . . .

Your committee is in accord with the aims and objectives of the resolution and recommends that its provisions be extended to protect all workers by amending out of this resolution the references to "employees in Puerto Rico engaged in leather, leather goods and related products industry" and substituting in lieu thereof the words "all employees in Puerto Rico covered by the Act."

(Wages and Hours Law)—(1951, p. 290) Res. 41 called upon the A. F. of L. to protest against the provisions of the Wage and Hour Law as amended in 1940 as applied to Puerto Rico, and to assist in having this discrimination eliminated.

(P. 561) Convention expressed itself as in accord with this resolution and referred it to the officers for appropriate action.

(Federal Aid)—(1951, pp. 291, 398) Res. 43 proposed that the A. F. of L. assist in having federal aid to education extended to Puerto Rico on a state basis.

(1952, pp. 269, 454) The establishment of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico with full self-government and autonomy represents an important milestone in the march of the freedom-loving people of Puerto Rico toward the full realization of democracy. It is evidence also of the sincerity and good faith of the U.S. in its policy of furthering liberty and self-government everywhere. . . .

The Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, although independent and self-governing, remains an integral part of the U.S. as an "associated state" of this nation. This relationship to the U.S.—which, as the E.C. reports, is neither statehood nor complete independence—was freely chosen by the overwhelming majority of the people of Puerto Rico in a popular referendum.

As trade unionists and fellow Americans we must continue to give to the people of Puerto Rico every assistance in their efforts to develop their economy. The A. F. of L. is seeking to organize the workers of Puerto Rico into bona fide unions within the ranks of our federation in order to advance the living standards and improve working conditions of the workers of Puerto Rico as rapidly as possible.

(Federal Aid to Education)—(1952, pp. 272, 493) In this section of its report, the E.C. states the facts upon which its interest in legislation for adequate support of education in Puerto Rico is based and of the activity of the A. F. of L. on behalf of the adequate provisions along those lines. The E.C. is to be commended for its support of this project and your committee urges that such support be continued.

(Industrial Expansion)—(1954, p. 148) The E.C. devoted special attention to a report on industrial expansion and working conditions in Puerto Rico. In approving this section of the report, the convention committee submitted the following which was unanimously approved: (page 587)

The rapid development of the economy of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico represents both a challenge and a threat to the labor movement. Our challenge is to assure that the workers of Puerto Rico share fully in the fruits of industrial and economic progress. The threat will exist, however, so long as this industrialization is taking place on the basis of substandard wages and working conditions for Puerto Rican workers. Continuance of such conditions means not only a continuing low-wage level for Puerto Rican workers, but also an unfair competitive advantage for Puerto Rican employers, which jeopardizes the labor standards of workers employed in competing industries on the mainland. The far-reaching program for raising living standards which the governor of Puerto Rico has described to this convention is indeed encouraging.

Puerto Rico's rapid industrial growth requires an ever-increasing skilled and semi-skilled labor force. In order to meet this problem, Puerto Rico has established various training programs, including modern vocational schools, apprenticeship programs sponsored by Joint Labor-Management Committees, and supervised on-the-job training.

From the viewpoint of organized labor, it is crucial that these new industrial workers be organized in the unions affiliated with the A. F. of L. Unfortunately, at present over 90 per cent of the industrial workers of Puerto Rico are not organized. This not only depresses the labor standards in Puerto Rico, but offers an incentive to anti-labor employers to avoid collective bargaining with unions by transferring their operations to Puerto Rico.

Unfortunately, the Federal Wage and Hour Law has helped to perpetuate substandard wage conditions in Puerto Rico. This law permits Puerto Rican employers to pay their workers far less than the 75 cent minimum hourly rate required by the Act for mainland workers. Under a special industry committee procedure authorized by the Act, the Wage and Hour Administrator has established minimum rates for Puerto Rican industries as low as 17½ cents an hour. This convention has unanimously recommended that the minimum wage for Puerto Rico be brought up to the mainland level within three years. Pending enactment of this amendment to the law, the industry committee procedure should be drastically revised so that the minimum wage for each industry is reviewed annually and revised minimum wages are put into effect promptly.

Your committee directs the attention of this convention to the large-scale migration of Puerto Ricans to the mainland in recent years, which can be attributed almost entirely to the search of low-paid Puerto Rican workers for better wages. Higher wages and decent working conditions would keep many of these workers in Puerto Rico, and thereby help to strengthen the Puerto Rican economy and its industrialization program. Organization of Puerto Rican workers into unions would mean that even if they did choose to migrate to the mainland, they would have been imbued with the spirit and aims of the trade union movement and would tend to become good members of mainland unions.

Thus, the organization of Puerto Rico's new industrial workers presents a challenging frontier for the A. F. of L., which should receive serious consideration and a high priority in the program of our federation. We should develop an effective program geared to the special conditions of Puerto Rico to make possible the rapid expansion of A. F. of L. unions in Puerto Rico.

Puerto Rico Free Federation of Labor (1940, pp. 220-226) A rather comprehensive report on the activities of the Free Federation was submitted in the report of the E.C. Included in this report was a memorandum which had been prepared covering the economic and social problems of the Island. Since the memorandum covered major objectives of the Free Federation it is quoted in its entirety herein: (p. 222)

The points of view of our Puerto Rican State Branch of the A. F. of L. on the economic and social conditions of Puerto Rico and our recommendations thereon may be summarized as follows:

1. In spite of the sound cooperation given the Island of Puerto Rico by the federal administration, our country undergoes a serious economic crisis, as particularly shown by the existence of over 400,000 unemployed.

2. Puerto Rico depends on a very few industries and is mostly an agricultural country. Sugar production is our main source of income. It can employ about 150,000 workers but production is limited through a system of quotas that has aggravated our economic crisis and deprived many thousands of workers of a living. We believe that our yearly sugar quota should be increased at least to 1,500,000 tons in order to put a level to our depressed economy and that our country should not be discriminated against to favor foreign countries.

3. The decision of the United States Supreme Court in favor of the people of Puerto Rico, upholding the constitutionality of the law limiting the possession of land to 500 acres, has led us to the conclusion that a definite program is necessary to serve as a basis for a conscientious and reasonable agrarian policy toward the permanent solution of our economic problems. The government of Puerto Rico lacks the funds necessary to expropriate lands owned in excess of 500 acres wherefore we suggest that a $150,000,000 loan be granted by federal authorities to the government of Puerto Rico to carry out an agrarian policy that would solve the problems involved. We suggest the establishment of an Insular Economic Board, with representatives from capital, labor and the government, to be charged with the execution of definite plans connected with investment of the aforementioned loan.

4. We favor the government control of our hydroelectric resources, wherefore we earnestly endorse the Puerto Rican TVA bill introduced in the Lower House providing the government control of our hydroelectric service in order to promote the industrialization of our country and the carrying of electric light to the urban and rural zones of Puerto Rico at a low cost.

5. The people of Puerto Rico are pro-American and have during a period of forty years shown their loyalty and spirit of public sacrifice toward the U.S. Our Island constitutes a cardinal point in the defense of American interest in the Western Hemisphere. Inasmuch as the Puerto Rican masses want to live permanently linked to the U.S., we request that our political status be solved as early as possible by granting us the right to become a state of the Union.

6. We are of the opinion that Puerto Rico should not be exempted from the Wage and Hour Law. We believe, however, that flexible changes must be effected to conform the law to local conditions, and that there must be approved legislation of this sort to cover workers in industry as well as in commerce and agriculture in interstate and intrastate commerce as well. With respect to amendments to this law that would facilitate the operation of certain insular industries we ratify our viewpoints expressed in a resolution approved by the E.C. of the Free Federation of Labor in March, 1939, to which we have previously referred.

7. The Lafayette experiment must be continued on a basis that would guarantee its success. Workers should be given reasonable and just participation and intervention in its administrative control. Organized labor was not represented on the committee that investigated the Lafayette Cooperatives. The report rendered by this committee attributes the failure of the experiment to factors that have no bearing on the workers because they never had participation in the management of the experiment.

The principle established by these cooperatives must be amplified throughout all the Island by means of plans properly studied which would ensure success.

8. The principles of collective agreement must continue to have the recognition by the federal government in Puerto Rico. These principles have succeeded in maintaining industrial peace and the best relations among employers and laborers. A proof of the effectiveness of this principle is shown by agreements entered into since 1934 by the Association of Sugar Producers of Puerto Rico and the Free Federation of Labor, those signed by the shipping companies and longshoremen unions, besides the ones approved by employers and workers of the tobacco stripping industry.

9. We look to the A. F. of L. to cooperate with us in obtaining larger appropriations for vocational education and that the teaching of the English language be expanded.

Larger appropriations should be made for the National Youth Administration agencies in Puerto Rico in order to help our poor children continue their school training.

We want the A. F. of L. endorsement to our petition requesting the establishment of a Pan-American University in Puerto Rico.

10. The committee acknowledges the effectiveness of the cooperation heretofore received from the A. F. of L. and hopes that this cooperation will be maintained in behalf of the fraternal bonds uniting our Puerto Rican movement with our brethren of North America, in whose free institutions we have placed our faith.

(1940, pp. 220, 558) In approving the report of the E.C. on activities of the Puerto Rico Free Federation during the preceding year, the following statement was also included in the committee report:

. . . your committee calls attention to the problems of organized labor in Puerto Rico, including the formation of a dual movement with the improving standards for labor and the opportunity for extended trade union organization. Your committee recommends that the officers of the A. F. of L. give every possible assistance to the trade union movement of Puerto Rico.

(1942, p. 562) Some of the most pressing problems of the working people of the Island were presented to the convention through a resolution (No. 36) which was adopted by the convention. The resolution called for increased organizing activity in Puerto Rico; protested against the Tugwell Administration there; again demanded independent status for the Island; endorsed the efforts being carried on to establish a better standard of living for the workers there; and called upon the E.C. to take all legal and practical steps necessary to achieve the objectives of the resolution. The plight of the people of Puerto Rico was projected at length by the delegate to the convention from the Island. The convention voted the committee recommendation that the labor movement in Puerto Rico should be more adequately represented in the administrative agencies of that Island; and that the conditions referred to should be called to the attention of the President of the U.S. by the president of the A. F. of L.

(1942, p. 547) A rather comprehensive report on conditions in the Island was presented to the convention which in turn adopted the following statement:

This portion of the E.C.'s report is in effect a report of the many activities of the Puerto Rico Free Federation of Workingmen, which is affiliated with the A. F. of L. It records the many collective bargaining agreements negotiated under the federation's auspices, hearings in Congress, and in particular the difficulties it has encountered under the administration of Governor Rex Tugwell, who, immediately after his inauguration, eliminated labor representation from his cabinet, and who has, apparently, failed to appreciate the part which organized labor must play in any satisfactory administration of Puerto Rico, and its unquestioned right to have a representative voice in the activities of the administration.

It is to be regretted that the nation's administrative representative in Puerto Rico should have created a condition where, because of all lack of representation, it is difficult, if not impossible, for organized labor in Puerto Rico to adequately cooperate with him.

(1949, pp. 278, 475) The regular report of the Free Federation of Puerto Rico was included in the E.C. report. The following convention action was taken on the subject matter:

The report of the E.C. under this caption shows that there is a nucleus of sound unionism in that Island. After a struggle for decades the workers are coming to an understanding of the practices of sound trade unionism. There has been under way in the Island an economic development program which now shows definite progress although they have had little outside help. To this undertaking the unions have contributed collective bargaining. The biggest problem of the Island is over-population. As we have recommended elsewhere, surplus agricultural workers could be integrated with agricultural workers on the mainland, and under the protective services of the National Farm Labor Union join groups of migratory crop harvesters as well as find jobs on farms.

Your committee urges that it is high time to bring aid to Puerto Ricans in making plans for future progress and in more thoroughly organizing workers in free trade unions.

Puerto Rico is our eastern outpost—an island strategic for our commerce as well as military defense. It lies adjacent to Communist centers in the Caribbean area and is constantly subject to Communist offensives.

Your committee further urges the E.C. to make Puerto Rico a strong outpost of free trade unionism to protect our homeland and to develop leaders to help in extending economic unions throughout South America.

Pullman Sleeping Car Porters—(1932, p. 398) The A. F. of L. endorses, commends and pledges support to the significant, militant and worthy fight of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters to eliminate the Pullman Company Union through injunction procedure, as did the Brotherhood of Railway Clerks, which will not only establish the right of self-organization to the porters, but help break down the company union movement in general which is a deadly menace to trade union movement organization. A motion was adopted calling upon affiliated organizations to make contributions to aid the porters in their court fight.

(1933, p. 519) The A. F. of L. herewith condemns the policy of oppression and exploitation of porters and maids by the Pullman Company through low wage rates and the chain ganging of runs that boost the hours of work of porters from four hundred to five hundred a month, a policy which is in direct contravention of the spirit of the National Recovery Program.

(1939, p. 494) The Order of Sleeping Car Conductors has an agreement with The Pullman Company which has been interpreted by the National Railroad Adjustment Board in its Award No. 779, issued December 12, 1938, to mean that wherever it is established that conductors' work exists, they have the right to perform it. The Pullman award and continues to operate portions of the run without conductors. The A. F. of L. condemns this violation of National Railroad Adjustment Board Award No. 779, interpreting Company has refused to obey that the agreement between The Pullman Company and its conductors.

Pulp, Sulphite and Paper Mill Workers vs. Wall Paper Crafts (See: Wall Paper Crafts)

Pulp, Proposed Regulation of Imports (Also see: Tariff) (1939, p. 431)

Res. 74 was unanimously adopted as follows:

Whereas—In the pulp and paper mills of the U.S. many mills are operating but two and three days per week; and

Whereas—The U.S. consumes enough pulp and paper to keep all mills running full time if pulp and paper made in the U.S. were used before any foreign made pulp and paper were used; and

Whereas—Pulp and paper is brought into the U.S. duty free from Canada and the Scandinavian countries where much of this product is produced by low paid labor; and

Whereas—Much of the imported pulp and paper is not labeled so that its origin is unknown; and

Whereas—The unemployed and part-time employed men in the pulp and paper industry present flagrant example of this sabotage of national recovery; therefore be it

Resolved—That the A. F. of L. in convention assembled go on record to petition the Congress of the U.S. to set quota on the importations of pulp and paper into the U.S. to the extent that local mills can operate at full time; and be it further

Resolved—That foreign-made pulp and paper shall be labeled, stating place of origin.

(Tariff)—(1939, p. 431) Res. 73, calling for endorsement of an investigation to ascertain the effects upon the American wood pulp industry from the importation of large quantities of wood pulp from foreign countries which maintain low wage scales and which enjoy other competitive advantages, was unanimously adopted by the convention.

P.W.A. for White Collar Workers— (1936, p. 645) The A. F. of L. declares in favor of a permanent works program for all unemployed white collar workers, whether on relief or not (such as statistical, research, technical, educational, social, recreational workers, and artists, writers, actors, dancers, musicians, etc.), at trade union wages and working conditions similar to that provided for by the Public Works Administration.

(1947, p. 562) A good public relations service is more essential to the Federation than ever before. We have the task of informing all who constitute the public of Labor's objectives and the reasons for them. It is important that the public realize Labor has a constructive program evolved out of experience and planned to help the masses of the people participate in democratic institutions and share in economic and social progress.

To be sure, we do not have the resources of those opposed to use, but we can secure the cooperation and the aid of sympathetic groups and thus bring indirect influence to bear on all the media which influence public opinion. We need to bring Labor's cause home to those who write the news and edit papers, those who manage magazines and weekly news publications, and those responsible for news reels.

We shall count upon a broader, more effective program than ever before.

Racial Discrimination (also see: White Primaries; Poll Tax; Discrimination, Fair Employment Practices Commission, Negroes, Segregation (Schools), Ku Klux Klan, Religious Discrimination; Education and Training)

(1942, pp. 573, 580) Several resolutions were considered by the convention all protesting against discrimination on account of "race, color, religion or national origin," and all called for intensified efforts to abolish such discrimination. The following committee report on these resolutions, considered jointly, was adopted:

The American Federation of Labor, at every convention where the subject has been introduced, has vigorously and unequivocally, declared against race discrimination—any discrimination because of race, color, religion or national origin. The American Federation of Labor has been the outstanding organization in the United States and Canada to make such declaration, and to further the interests of the colored race.

It is unfortunately true that because of geographical situation and other reasons, there still remains a degree of discrimination, not only against the colored race, but against other groups, because of their racial origin; but we have no hesitancy in comparing the record of the American Federation of Labor on the question of race discrimination with the activities of any other organization in the United States and Canada.

It was the American Federation of Labor which pioneered the organization of the colored people. Experience has led us to believe that the most effective way of eliminating race discrimination is the education of the trade union movement and of the public. Without this education the progress which has been made in organizing the colored men in North America would not have made the progress which it has. We are doubtful whether any other method than the educational one can make the progress which is necessary, for experience has been that where compulsory methods are applied, prejudices are increased instead of diminished.

Your committee voices its approval of the recent Executive Order of the President intended to accomplish the praiseworthy elimination of racial distinction between the wage earners and the citizens of the United States.

(1943, p. 421) The convention gave serious consideration to a group of resolutions (Nos. 24, 28, 29, 32), all of which dealt with some phase of discrimination because of race, color, religion or national origin. The following was unanimously adopted in lieu of the resolutions:

The founders of the American Federation of Labor since their inception, were opposed to any prejudices, traditions, social or religious demarcations which could be applied to interfere with, or prevent thorough-going organization of all wage earners. They made one of the corner-stones of the great trade union structure they were determined to erect—the principle that the right to work, or membership in a trade union should not be limited, or restricted in any manner, because of creed, color or race.

The American Federation of Labor at that time, and ever since, has been the principal constructive and influential force in our country in giving practical application to that basic principle. We can examine the record of progress made in eliminating prejudices against so-called minority groups, with gratification and sincere pride.

The principle announced over sixty years ago has been given increasing practical application. Distinctions, because of national origin within our trade union movement, have been very largely eliminated. The color bar has been removed to such an extent that labor representatives of our colored members inform us that over half a million of their race are now dues paying members of the American Federation of Labor. This is the largest organization of colored workers in the world.

It is evident, however, that in some portions of our country there still remain among workers lingering suspicions, prejudices and traditions fostered by conditions long since passed, but which still operate to prevent the complete application of that great principle upon which our trade union structure has been erected.

The world war in which our country is now engaged, which involves safeguarding the vital principle of free institutions under government by law, enacted by the peoples' representatives for the people, demands that national unity must be had and that all prejudices which interfere with this unity must be eliminated.

Those in our armed forces are risking their lives in our country's defense, without thought of national origin or the color which nature has given them. All of them are the nation's defenders. When the war ends those who are wage earners must be free to return to peaceful occupations as equals in the enjoyment of all the rights and opportunities enjoyed by others in our trade union movement.

National origin, race or color must in no manner or form restrict any American from a free opportunity to prepare himself to become a skilled mechanic, a craftsman, and take his place as such in any employment requiring the skill which he has acquired. The doors of our trade union movement must be open. This country must not maintain an industrial standard which discriminates against a wage earner because of his color.

Substantial progress has been made in eliminating prejudices, but there still remains an obligation upon the American Federation of Labor to carry on and expand the good work it has already done, so that the principle of industrial equality of all men will be established beyond question to every section of our country.

It is obvious that the goal we aim for, the best interests of the American people as a whole, and our democratic way of life, cannot be secured by one strike or through the method of decrees, mechanical orders or threats handed down from on high. What is required is the intelligent, systematic, educational efforts to speed the day when there will no longer exist in the industrial field any prejudices or handicaps because of racial origin or color.

So that vitality and action can be given to this declaration of principle and of policy, your committee recommends that these declarations be given the widest possible publicity, and that all of the educational facilities of our trade union movement be used in furthering the objectives which have been herein set forth.

Your committee recommends reaffirmation of the action taken by the last convention endorsing the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice.

The Post War Problems Committee of the A. F. of L. has appointed a subcommittee to deal with this and other minority questions. On this subcommittee the minority groups, including the colored race, are represented. Your committee is confident that as the results of this committee's work definite progress will be made.

(1944, pp. 250, 593) The convention approved the report of the E.C. on racial discrimination embodied in the report on the Fair Employment Practices Committee as follows:

Wherever Americans have fought for democracy they have fought for the right to equal opportunity. The right to an equal chance to get a job and to be promoted to a better job without discrimination because of race, color, religion, or sex is an inalienable right of every American so long as democracy endures. The American Federation of Labor has been in the past, and is today, unalterably opposed to any form of discrimination because of race, creed, color, or sex.

In the days of transition from war to peace the American Federation of Labor will have a special responsibility to extend the work it has done in the past in eliminating prejudices to the end that industrial equality of all men be firmly established in every part of the United States. In these times there exists an intensified need for systematic and positive educational efforts to remove handicaps and barriers of race or color in industrial employment, assuring full equality of economic opportunity to all Americans. Not only is the attainment of this goal essential to the fulfillment of the full promise of democracy, but it will also serve the best interests of Labor and of the American people as a whole.

The Executive Council recommends reaffirmation of the actions taken by previous conventions endorsing the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice. It is our belief that, while protection of non-discriminatory employment is needed, especially during the difficult years that lie ahead, compulsory government regulation of free and voluntary associations of workers is inimical to the basic right of freedom of association. Government controls, interfering with the self-government of labor organizations, must not be permitted.

The right to union membership without discrimination because of race, creed, color, or sex is a basic tenet irrevocably established by the American Federation of Labor. During the past year great progress has been made toward the universal acceptance of this principle by all constituent unions of the American Federation of Labor. The Executive Council is confident that this objective may be reached in the near future through the exercise of the prerogative of free self-government of our member unions.

(1944, p. 508) Res. 26

Whereas—The Master Race Doctrine is responsible for the threat of Hitler's Nazism, Mussolini's Fascism and Hirohito's Militarism to modern democracy, Christianity and free and voluntary trade unionism, the ruthless and inhuman persecution of the Jews, Catholics and Protestants of Germany and other lands and the Negro people in the United States of America, therefore, be it

Resolved — That this convention of the American Federation of Labor assembled in New Orleans, La., November, 1944, go on record as condemning the Master Race Doctrine as mythical, unsound, unscientific and a menace to peace and the democratic way of life.

Your committee is in accord with the substance of the "whereas" which condemns the Master Race Doctrine as applied by Nazism, Fascism and Japanese militarism, and any other social or political doctrine based upon the principles that one race is superior to another. But your committee cannot give approval to the "resolved" for we hold, and the Federation always has maintained, that there is no Master Race, and that all races, white, black, red or yellow stand upon a basis of equality, and belief in the basic doctrine taught by the Carpenter of Nazareth, the Fatherhood of God, and the Brotherhood of Man.

(1944, p. 557) Res. 157, containing the following "resolves" was unanimously adopted as A. F. of L. policy on discrimination because of race, creed, etc.

Resolved—That the 64th annual convention of the American Federation of Labor, held in the City of New Orleans, November, 1944, issue a warning to the American people against the danger of allowing the wave of racialism to rise in this country, and against the evil of discriminating against minorities, no matter who practices the discrimination and against what group it is directed, and be it further

Resolved — That the unions affiliated with the A. F. of L. be particularly cautioned to be on guard in their readjustment to post-war conditions, lest they fall victim to the disruptive attempts of the union-wreckers whose interests bigotry serves, and be it further

Resolved — That this convention demand the immediate abolition of the poll tax and the establishment, by act of Congress, of a permanent Fair Employment Practices Commission, authorized to eliminate discrimination because of race, color, religion or national origin, in private industry as well as in government work, and be it further

Resolved — That the unions affiliated with the American Federation of Labor be urged to wage an unrelenting struggle against the groups responsible for the spreading of the poison of anti-Catholicism, anti-Protestantism, anti-Semitism, anti-Negroism and other forms of racial prejudice, and that the Executive Council give all possible support to the international and local unions in the undertaking and carrying out of an educational program calculated to promote tolerance, understanding, and amity among the various groups comprising the family of American organized labor.

Whereas — There are some million or more Negro workers who are loyal members of the American Federation of Labor who have racial-labor relations problems that require adjustment from time to time by the federal, national and international unions, not only for the welfare of the Negro workers but also to advance the organization and increase the power of the federal, national, international unions, city central bodies and state federations, therefore, be it

Resolved — That this sixty-fifth convention of the American Federation of Labor, assembled in Chicago, October, 1946, go on record as favoring the appointment of a paid Labor-Racial Relations Worker, with trade union understanding and sympathy with the program and philosophy of the A. F. of L. as a part of the staff of the President of the A. F. of L., with adequate facilities and means and co-operation, to conduct a long-range, sound and constructive educational program among the members of the A. F. of L., with a view to eliminating the dangerous doctrines of the master race that threaten and endanger the American labor movement, the citadel of our American democracy.

Your committee is in sympathy with the objective of the resolution, and recommends it be referred to the Executive Council, A. F. of L.

White Primaries—(P. 490) Res. 6:

Whereas—The United States Supreme Court went on record in the Texas Primaries case outlawing white primaries as an invasion of the constitutional rights of citizens set forth in the 15th Amendment of the Constitution, and

Whereas — This decision of the United States Supreme Court has been defied by Biblo, Talmadge and other southern political leaders, therefore, be it

Resolved—That the 65th convention of the American Federation of Labor go on record as condemning the practice of certain southern states designed to invalidate the constitutional rights of Negro citizens by intimidating them at the polls and by the employment of other deceptive and terroristic practices to prevent these citizens from exercising their right to vote as being un-American, undemocratic and unconstitutional and to support the fight now being waged by civic, religious and labor organizations.

(1948, p. 148) Since its inception, the American Federation of Labor has fostered the principle of equality of opportunity to all. Through the years of our growth, we have encountered many situations in which discrimination and intolerance were deeply embedded. The source of discrimination cannot always be easily ascertained or readily stamped out, but our record of many decades of direct experience in dealing with this issue has conclusively demonstrated that the most powerful single force behind discrimination against persons because of their color or creed is economic discrimination. This experience makes it absolutely clear that to assure healthy economic growth of the nation, to safeguard and sustain the general welfare of the people of America, it is the duty of our legislative branch of Government to uphold the principles of equal opportunity for all, a principle to which this Nation is dedicated.

Convention Headquarters — (1950, p. 27) Res. 20: Protested against practice of hotels in Houston refusing to accommodate colored A. F. of L. delegates, and called upon the convention to "go on record as adopting the policy of refusing to hold its annual conventions in any city in which hotel accommodations are not available to all delegates to the convention.

(P. 473) Since the E.C. was delegated to select the next convention city, resolution referred to E.C. for attention.

(Pp. 26, 2471) Res. 17 adopted as follows:

Whereas—The Korean war is an unmistakable and strong reaffirmation of the fact that a normal conflict exists between world democracy and world communism which appears destined to become more violent and threatening to world peace, and which may eventuate into a world atomic war, which according to the best scientific minds, will bring an end to our civilization as we know it today, and

Whereas — If the Korean conflict is localized, it will not represent an end of warfare between the United Nations and U.S.S.R. but will only be a stage where it will assume a new form of an intensified cold war among all peoples of the world, with emphasis upon civil wars and insurrections in various world areas comparable to Korea, such as Iran, Indo-China, East-West Germany, Yugo-Slavia, Greece, India and Africa, therefore, be it

Resolved — That the 69th Convention of the American Federation of Labor, assembled in Houston, Texas, September, 1950, go on record as calling upon the United States government in the interest of increasing the strength of the appeal of democracy to the peoples of the world, especially the world of color, to re-state our democratic creed so as to reflect a basic economic and ethnic content which will give assurance to the peoples of Africa and Asia that the U.S.A. represents a new deal for them in land reforms and recognition of their nationalistic aspirations and racial equality. This is necessary for the peoples of Asia and Africa and Europe and will increase the faith in the declarations of American democracy, for the idea of political democracy upon which chief emphasis is placed by American leaders, while necessary and important, cannot alone meet the needs of the peoples of the world who are in poverty and want and under the oppression of colonialism.

(1951, p. 275) Res. 8:

Whereas — Racism is a form of aggression against the dignity of the personality of an individual by denying him or her rights and privileges, economic, political and social, by discrimination, on account of race, color, religion, national origin or ancestry, which results in dividing the workers, thereby weakening the trade union movement and lessening its power to fight the battle of labor, and also makes a mockery of our democracy, and puts a powerful propaganda political weapon into the hands of Russian Communism, the enemy of the free trade union movement and the free world, therefore, be it

Resolved — That this seventieth convention of the American Federation of Labor, assembled in San Francisco, California, September, 1951, go on record as condemning racism in all of its varied forms as a danger to free trade unions, democracy and world peace.

(P. 549) Your committee is in full accord with this resolution. We commend it to you for indorsement and adoption.

In this connection, your committee desires to point out that in recent years, while our country has been making progress in eradicating this pernicious evil, racism has taken on new and even more dangerous expressions in various parts of the world.

In the so-called Soviet "paradise" there are now rampant new styles of race prejudice resulting in the economic strangulation, cultural ostracism and suppression, and genocide against citizens of Jewish, Lithuanian, Estonian, Latvian strain and other minority peoples.

In other parts of the world, the Cominform has exploited the understandable lingering resentment amongst newly liberated peoples against some European nationals on account of their prejudices and mistakes of the past in order to generate race hatred and create a vicious racialism in reverse against those of Caucasian origin.

In urging full approval of the above-mentioned resolution, your committee condemns both new and old racist vices. We solemnly declare that it is the duty of all free trade unionists to fight against every manifestation of racialism—regardless of where it may occur, or the flag behind which it hides.

District of Columbia

(1953, pp. 416, 651) Res. 57 protested against practices existing in the District of Columbia of discrimination and segregation and contained the following:

Resolved — That this seventy-second convention of the American Federation of Labor assembled in St. Louis, Missouri, call upon President Eisenhower and the Congress of the United States to fulfill their campaign pledges to end discrimination and segregation in Washington, D. C., by taking immediate steps to assure all persons in the District of Columbia full and equal privileges and opportunities in employment, in places of public education, accommodation, resort, entertainment and amusement.

(Pp. 415, 651) Res. 54:

Resolved — That the seventy-second convention of the American Federation of Labor assembled in St. Louis, Missouri, call upon affiliated unions to continue and extend their activities in behalf of civil rights, and be it further

Resolved — That this convention express its gratification at the headway and progress made by A. F. of L. affiliates during the past year in the elimination of existing barriers within the trade union movement, and urge the elimination of the last vestiges within the labor movement of distinctions among workers based on race, creed, color or national origin, and be it further

Resolved — That this convention call upon the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor to continue to use its good offices to assist and promote further progress and leadership in this area.

Housing

(1954, page 381, 465)—Res. 27:

Resolved — That this Seventy-third Annual Convention of the American Federation of Labor, assembled in Los Angeles, California, September, 1954, go on record as condemning and opposing segregated housing and the use of government funds to promote same as contrary to justice, fair-play and sound, democratic principles as set forth in Supreme Court decisions striking down segregated housing.

The convention referred the resolution to the executive officers of the A. F. L. for such action as may be warranted.

(P. 302) The American Federation of Labor has again taken the lead in efforts to assure equality of employment opportunity to all workers. In Congressional hearings, our Federation has this year again strongly urged enactment of a fair employment practice law which would prohibit discrimination in employment because of race, creed, color or national origin. . . .

Our affiliates should insist that employers with federal contracts adhere to the letter and spirit of the non-discrimination clause. They should also, whenever possible, inform individual employees and applicants for employment of their rights under the clause. By giving such support to the non-discrimination program, our affiliates can make a notable contribution to its success and thereby help eliminate discrimination in a large sector of American industry.

Armed Forces, Integration in.—(1940, p. 511) Acting upon a proposed resolution calling for complete integration in the armed forces of the country, the convention adopted the following statement:

Your committee in reporting on the resolution calls attention to the heroic part played by negroes from the period of the American revolution to the last war in which our country was engaged. Their record of bravery, loyalty and patriotism is a tribute to the part they have played as citizens.

Your committee believes that the record of the colored race justifies them to the same consideration given to every other citizen in connection with the present program for national defense.

This equality between the races in our country is already largely recognized in the manufacturing industries.

The resolution makes specific reference to military service and military organization. We believe that this is the province of those authorities charged with the conduct of military activities, and that we should not attempt to interfere with such policy unless there developed evidence of racial discrimination.

(1944, p. 471) Res. 11:

Whereas — The constitution of the United States guarantees to the citizens of this country equal rights before the law, and that there shall be no discrimination because of race, creed, or color, and

Whereas — The Selective Service Act specifically states that no member of the armed forces shall be discriminated against because of race, creed or color, and

Whereas—It is now charged that the Selective Service Act is being violated in that the negroes inducted into the Armed Forces are discriminated against, particularly, this is true in the Air Forces by the establishment of a segregated Air Base at Tuskegee Institute at Tuskegee, Alabama, and

Whereas—These negroes in the Armed Forces have given a good account of themselves in the conflict and have assumed their full responsibility with credit to themselves and to the nation, therefore, be it

Resolved — That the American Federation of Labor investigate the allegation made that the discrimination is being made against negroes in the Armed Forces, and that every opportunity be afforded to those making the charge to present their evidence to the end that all such alleged discrimination shall be eliminated and that the people of the United States, both negroes and whites, will have full confidence that prohibition against discrimination is being fully observed.

Civil Rights—(1948, pp. 234, 455) Res. 6 requested the A. F. of L. to "go on record as demanding the abolition of discrimination and segregation through municipal, state and federal legislation so that the dignity of the human personality, regardless of race, creed or color, will not be humiliated and insulted, and that the city central labor bodies, the state federations and federal and local unions, national and international organizations affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, be called upon and urged to use their influence and strength in the interest of securing civil rights for all peoples, creeds, colors and countries in the interest of labor solidarity, one of the most effective weapons against reaction, bigotry and hatred.

(1949, pp. 43, 484) Res. 23 adopted in amended form as follows:

Your committee is in full accord with the objectives sought by this resolution. To avoid placing the Federation in the anomalous position of condemning legislation dealing with the internal relations of the affairs of our trade unions, on the one hand, and furthering trade union regulatory legislation on the other hand, your committee recommends the approval of this resolution amended to read:

Whereas—Lynching and mob violence are violations of the dignity and sacredness of the human personality—all men, regardless of race, color, religion, national origin or ancestry, being children of one God, and

Whereas—The poll tax denies to white and black workers the opportunity to exercise their sovereign right of free citizenship in the American democracy, and

Whereas — Federal fair employment practice legislation will help the elimination of discrimination in industry based upon race, color, religion, national origin or ancestry, and

Whereas — Discrimination and segregation in the Armed Forces because of race, color or religion, denies the sacred right to an American citizen to fight and die for his country as a free man, therefore, be it

Resolved — That the sixty-eighth annual convention of the American Federation of Labor, assembled in St. Paul, Minnesota, October, 1949, go on record as supporting legislation which seeks to abolish lynch-law, the vicious poll tax, the elimination of discrimination and segregation in industry, and the Armed Forces, and, herewith, expresses its support and approval of President Truman's Civil Rights Committee Report and his Civil Rights Program, submitted to the 81st Congress, and pledge to fight for the enactment of legislation sought in the President's Civil Rights Report and Program.

In presenting this amended resolution for approval your committee directs attention to existing laws in some of our states making mandatory the segregation of workers and others, based on color distinctions. We have no hesitancy in condemning such unjustified restrictions on freedom of association and the unjustifiable dividing of our people on color lines. We urge every effort be made for the early and complete repeal of such laws.

Then too, we would counsel all our trade unions to avoid falling subject to criticism we direct against others for their failure to deal with all of our people, on a basis of equality and without distinction as to race, color, religion, national origin, or ancestry.

(Pp. 340, 498) Res. 111:

Whereas — During the last war and the succeeding period it has become apparent that there are certain flaws existing in our fundamental democratic rights, and

Whereas — It has become increasingly necessary to remove the inequities, prejudices and archaic and sectional incumbrances upon the fundamental rights of large portions of our population, and

Whereas — The Constitution of the United States guarantees the equal protection of the law to all our people, and

Whereas — Civil rights have been denied to many citizens because of their color, race or creed, and

Whereas — The denial of such rights to minorities has been accompanied by restrictions upon their opportunities to be gainfully employed and also to exercise all the rights, privileges and prerogatives of American citizens, and

Whereas — These deprivations of rights to minorities constitutes a threat to the collective rights of all citizens, and

Whereas — It is essential for our great country in discharging its obligations as a world leader for democracy and democratic rights to set an outstanding example to which the people of the world will respond, and

Whereas — We have confidence in our collective ability to remove injustices existing in our democracy, and

Whereas — Both major parties pledged to enact an adequate civil rights program to extend democratic and civil rights to all peoples and to remove archaic restrictions against minorities, therefore, be it

Resolved — By the 68th Convention of the American Federation of Labor that we endorse without qualification the full and complete civil rights program which was presented to the Congress by President Truman in his message and urge that this program, which was subscribed to by both major political parties in their platform.

(P. 238) The E.C. reported continued efforts to secure the enactment of proposed anti-poll tax and anti-lynching legislation.

(P. 386) Convention authorized continued efforts to secure enactment of aforementioned legislation.

Whereas — President Truman's Committee on Civil Rights Report involving lynching, mob violence, poll tax registration, discrimination for the exercise of the right of suffrage and fair employment practice, represent principles and action which A. F. of L. conventions have endorsed and supported in the past because they are in accord with the ideals of sound trade unionism and the traditions of our great movement, therefore, be it

Resolved — That the 69th Convention assembled in Houston, Texas, September, 1950, go on record as endorsing and supporting President Truman's Civil Rights Report and call upon its affiliated unions, central and state bodies, to support efforts to secure the enactment of the proposals of this Report into legislation since discrimination on account of race, color, religion, national origin or ancestry constitutes the most powerful propaganda political weapon in the hands of Communist Russia whose commitment to cold and hot wars represent the gravest threat to democracy and civilization modern man has ever faced, and the victory of western democracies is only possible if the U.S.A. and other democracies repudiate white racial superiority or white supremacy as a principle of national policy and take a stand for complete racial equality.

(P. 471) Your committee recommends re-application of our declaration of a year ago on this subject in view of this resolution and which unqualifiedly endorsed President Truman's Civil Rights Report. In keeping with this action the American Federation has called upon our affiliated unions, central and state bodies, to support all possible efforts to secure the enactment of the proposals of this report into legislation. Your committee again urges and recommends a like direction and appeal to our affiliated unions, central and state bodies.

(Pp. 34, 479)

Whereas — There is need for all good Americans to give consistent attention to problems of civil rights and discrimination, and

Whereas — The American Federation of Labor has done an outstanding piece of work in defending and securing recognition of civil rights and has worked consistently and valiantly to overcome discrimination and segregation, and

Whereas — The American Federation of Labor could do a more consistent and effective job in this area if someone were employed for this special task than has been done to date in spite of the value of the work so far accomplished, and

Whereas — The very designation of someone to work in this field of discrimination would in itself constitute helpful public notice of our concern with this problem, therefore, be it

Resolved — That this Sixty-ninth convention of the American Federation of Labor meeting in Houston, Texas, recommends to the Executive Council early consideration of the establishment of a new, regular headquarters department to work in the field of civil rights and discrimination.

The convention referred the resolution to the President of the A. F. of L. "with the thought that he might designate someone to perform the task involved."

(1951, pp. 353, 566) Res. 109 directed attention to the need for international unions, state and local federations to develop programs for the advancement of civil rights and the improvement of human relations, and that the A. F. of L. urge the extension of these activities to the end that the cause of Labor and democracy may be advanced.

(1953, p. 315) Under the title of "Civil Rights" the Executive Council outlined the traditional policy of the A. F. of L. in opposition to discrimination, and in defense of freedom guaranteed under the Constitution. The report stated:

From the date of its founding, the American Federation of Labor has been deeply devoted to the American heritage of equality, freedom and justice under law. Our Federation has staunchly defended from the outset the right of every American to equal economic opportunity and his unfettered right to exercise freedom of speech, of conscience and of assembly. Indeed the growth of trade unionism in this country has been due in no small measure to our steadfast adherence to these principles on which our Republic was founded.

Discrimination in Employment

In recent years our Federation has intensified its efforts to assure equal economic opportunity to every worker. We have sought to eliminate discrimination in employment based on race, creed, color or national origin and have called for the enactment of fair employment practice legislation. Despite the widespread popular support of legislation which would safeguard the worker's right to equal economic opportunity, every effort to obtain enactment of a federal fair employment practice statute has been blocked by the deliberate dilatory tactics and outright filibustering of the Dixiecrat forces, supported by other reactionaries in the Senate. These tactics have successfully prevented enactment of legislation which would afford to Negroes and other minority groups the opportunity to improve their economic and social status.

The main obstacle blocking the enactment of fair employment practice legislation has been the Senate Rule 22. This rule makes it virtually impossible to stop a well-organized filibuster by requiring an affirmative vote by two-thirds of the entire Senate to limit and close debate. We have sought the amendment of Senate Rule 22 to permit the majority of Senators present and voting to limit and close debate. Such a change would make impossible irresponsible procedures which make mockery of the democratic process in the highest legislative body in the land. It would permit the enactment of fair employment practices and other civil rights legislation.

With the great expansion of government purchases in the present defense program, the Federal Government has taken administrative action to require firms awarded federal contracts to adopt and practice non-discrimination in their employment policies. On December 3, 1951, President Truman established the Committee on Government Contract Compliance. This committee was given the responsibility of developing procedures for securing compliance by Government contractors and subcontractors with provisions in their contracts forbidding discrimination because of race, creed, color or national origin. The committee put into effect regulations requiring such compliance and, on January 16, 1953, made its report. Its major recommendations were:

- (1) Establishment of a specific agency of the Government to receive and investigate complaints of violations of the non-discrimination provision in Government contracts. Such an agency would, in addition, be responsible for preliminary efforts by conciliation, mediation and persuasion, to effect compliance by contractors and it would also recommend necessary action to the contracting agencies.

(2) Establishment by each agency of the Government of administrative procedures to insure compliance with non-discrimination requirements in Government contracts.

(3) Revision and strengthening of the non-discrimination clause in Government contracts, including a requirement to post notices to inform employees of their rights.

While the life of the first committee expired with the issuance of its report, it is understood that President Eisenhower is contemplating the appointment of a new committee to deal with Government contract compliance.

In addition to Federal administrative action to effectuate non-discriminatory employment practices, state and local fair employment practice laws are in effect in twelve states, the Territory of Alaska and in 25 municipalities. Most of these laws contain enforcement provisions. Experience has shown, however, that, once enforcement powers are in the law, they seldom have to be utilized. Main reliance has been placed on persuasion and assistance to harmonious integration.

Progress has been made in the past year in a number of communities by voluntary effort as well as through action by local legislative bodies, administrative agencies and the courts in ending discrimination in housing, education, recreation, and in restaurants, hotels and theaters. Of special note was the Supreme Court decision forbidding discrimination in restaurants in the District of Columbia. In many communities, our affiliates have vigorously cooperated with civic, religious and anti-discrimination groups to secure the fullest measure of democratic rights and privileges for all persons.*

* "The Freedom We Defend" program—(see 1953, beginning p. 315).

(Page 636) Gratifying progress has been made in recent years toward the adoption of more state laws prohibiting discrimination in employment. We urge all state federations of labor to give this subject urgent attention in their legislative work.

Segregation in Schools (1954, pp. 396, 556) Res. 65:

Whereas — The recent Supreme Court decisions outlawing the infamous "separate but equal" doctrine have reaffirmed our faith in the spiritual and moral attributes of our Constitution and have raised significantly our stature as a democratic force in the global conflict, and

Whereas — These decisions have substantiated in large measure the position of the American Federation of Teachers when they recognized the social and psychological implications of integration, the essential dignity of the individual and the trend of history toward desegregation, and

Whereas — The American Federation of Teachers foresaw the important role that teachers must play in this human drama when it filed amicus curiae briefs in 1950, 1952 and 1953 before the Supreme Court against the "separate but equal" educational dogma; when it ruled "separate but equal" locals illegal within its own ranks; and when it integrated its own Washington, D. C., locals, and

Whereas — Teachers in a democratic society if they are truly dedicated to the ideals of the Hebrew-Christian ethics and the preservation of our heritage of freedom, cannot regard themselves simply as passive instruments of the law, but must take an active part in assuring that this decision will continue to be upheld and not subverted in any way, therefore, be it

Resolved — That in the near future when the Supreme Court will hear arguments as to the most feasible procedure to follow in carrying out its decisions, that the American Federation of Labor join the American Federation of Teachers in furnishing facts that will aid desegregation without compromise of principle, and, be it further

Resolved — That the American Federation of Labor nationally and through its affiliated bodies make it unmistakably clear that labor will insist on fair labor procedures so that no group of teachers or administrators will suffer.

(Pp. 395, 555) Res. 62:

Whereas — The United States Supreme Court declared, May 17, 1954, that segregated public schools are unconstitutional and its decision is now the law of the land, which imposes upon all good, loyal American citizens the moral obligation to help bring about desegregation, including administrative staffs, teachers and pupils, in the public schools in every community now plagued with this social evil, and

Whereas — This historic decision will have far-reaching definite and monumental significance in winning the confidence, faith and good will of the teeming millions of peoples of color all over the world in the profession and deed of our Democracy, and serve as an effective refutation to the propaganda of the "big lie" by the Kremlin about racial relations in our country, with a view to discrediting the United States in the councils of the world, and will, thereby, give strength, reality and integrity to the foreign policy of our country much more effectively than military might, therefore, be it

Resolved — That this Seventy-third Annual Convention of the American Federation of Labor assembled in Los Angeles, California, September, 1954, go on record as applauding, endorsing and supporting the aforementioned Supreme Court decision and call upon the central bodies, state federations, international and national unions and federal locals to join hands with law-abiding government officials, business, church, fraternal, civic and professional groups and housewives, white and colored, Catholic and Protestant, Jew and Gentile, in the local communities in the South in helping to bring about full and complete implementation of this decision, in the interest of a peaceful, orderly, methodical transition from the segregated public schools to the non-segregated pattern of public schools, with the realization and conviction that if our youth, black and white, can fight together and die together on the battle fields in every war involving our country to preserve our American way of life, its national sovereignty and honor, they can, by the same token, go to the same school together and study together, which democratic procedure is certain to make and keep our country great; for well did President Eisenhower state in his message to the recent convention in Chicago of the American Federation of Teachers, that: "No task can be greater than the promotion of democracy in education, for democracy without education, free government cannot survive; without democracy, education loses its significance."

(P. 303) Under the sub-title "Equality and Democratic Rights," the E. C. reported:

The past year has witnessed notable gains reinforcing and extending principles of equality and democracy. On May 17, the Supreme Court unanimously ruled that segregation in public schools is unconstitutional. This decision has paved the way for early elimination of racial segregation in the nation's public schools in those states where it still prevails. The detailed procedure for carrying out this far-reaching change will be determined when the Supreme Court in the next session issues the decrees to guide local and state officials in areas where segregation exists in conforming to the decision. Since the schools to which Negroes have been restricted have been greatly inferior to the schools for whites, the elimination of segregation in education will mean that in many areas children of all races will have equal educational opportunities for the first time.

In the school decision the Supreme Court overruled the "separate but equal" doctrine to which the Court has adhered since 1896. This historic decision will, therefore, result not only in the abolition of segregation in schools but it will hasten the ending of segregation in the use of all facilities publicly sponsored or supported with public funds.

Perhaps the most notable record of elimination of racial segregation in recent years has been made by the armed forces. Under executive directives, all branches of the armed services have shifted, in only a few years, from almost complete segregation to nearly 100 per cent integration. Despite the ominous warnings of foes of civil rights, this transformation has been accomplished smoothly and virtually without incident. Indeed, the experience with elimination of discrimination in the armed forces provides positive proof that equality and democratic rights can be established in our civilian life as well.

With the strong support and leadership of many of our local affiliates, notable advances have been made in a large number of local communities toward the elimination of discrimination and segregation. While the pace of progress is by no means equal everywhere, in community after community racial barriers have been removed in schools, public housing, places of amusement and recreation, local transit lines, hotels, theaters and restaurants. Recent progress toward racial equality in the District of Columbia has been particularly gratifying because of the attention centered on Washington as the nation's capital and the capital of the free world.

(P. 319) The Supreme Court of the United States has given meaning to our law, but even more to our basic belief in freedom of each and in the dignity of every man. Segregation in our schools by law betrays our country's ideals and distorts our concepts of equal protection under the law. We have now a great opportunity and a grave responsibility to help implement these laws.

We recommend that a program of action be prepared to help effect a constructive approach through which to help communities meet their responsibilities as set forth in the decision of the Supreme Court on segregation in our nation's schools.

(Page 560) Your committee concurs in the report of the Executive Council and urges full support from all affiliated bodies in helping us as a nation realize the democratic goal which the decision envisages.

(1955, p. 200) In addition to the progress made toward elimination of segregation in the schools, noteworthy gains have been made during the past year in many communities toward removing discrimination in housing, theaters and other recreational facilities, hotels and restaurants. Our affiliates have played a leading role in efforts to establish patterns of equality in all aspects of community life.

In quite a number of cities, our affiliated central bodies have established special committees which have worked both in our own movement and in the community at large to eliminate any discriminatory policies and practices that may exist. These efforts by A. F. of L. unions and their members to eliminate discrimination have contributed to the extension and strengthening of equality of opportunity for all.

Our affiliates have made substantial contributions in many other ways toward extending the principle of equality. In some areas where white and negro union members have previously had separate local unions, they have joined together in a single union. Often action by the international unions in support of the A. F. of L. policy against discrimination has been particularly effective in bringing about the amalgamation of such local unions.

A. F. of L. state federations and city central bodies have spearheaded the fight for state and local fair employment practices legislation. These efforts resulted in enactment of such laws this year in Michigan, Pennsylvania, and Minnesota and in a number of municipalities. In all, 11 states and a considerable number of cities now have fair employment practices laws in effect.

In various localities, A. F. of L. city central bodies have sponsored meetings, institutes and conferences to discuss some of the knotty problems involved in eliminating discrimination. Such meetings have helped develop effective means for extending the principle and practice of equal opportunity in the trade union movement and in the community at large.

Union membership (1939, p. 230) Res. 33 called upon the A. F. of L. to go on record as calling upon all national and international unions and departments, to eliminate the color bar and all forms of discrimination which serve to exclude workers from membership on account of race or color; and directing the President and E.C. of the A. F. of L. to call upon the conventions of such national and international unions as have color clauses in their constitutions barring negro workers from membership, to create a committee to report on the question of the color bar and various forms of racial discrimination to their respective following conventions for discussion and abolition. The resolution was concurred in and "recommended to the Executive Council in the spirit in which it is submitted."

(P. 458) Res. 23: The convention substituted the following statement of policy for the original wording as follows:

As a substitute for the WHEREASES and RESOLVES of the resolution, your Committee recommends that this convention reaffirm its past declarations for the abolition of all forms of discrimination on account of race or color, and call upon the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor, State and City Central Bodies, as well as Federal Local Unions, National and International Unions, and the various Departments of the American Federation of Labor, to express their definite moral opposition to the destructive practice of race discrimination, and to support legislation intended to secure for the Negro people full civil and political rights.

(1940, p. 507) The convention was asked to seek the establishment of an Interracial Committee to investigate cases of discriminations by trade unions against certain workers on account of race or color. The convention directed that affiliated national and international unions be requested "to give the most sincere consideration to policies which will assist in the elimination of any tendency to discriminate against workmen because of race, color, or creed". It was pointed out that the A. F. of L. in previous conventions declared its opposition to racial or religious discrimination within the trade union movement, or within the nation.

(1941, p. 475) Convention reaffirmed action taken by New Orleans 1940 convention in lieu of resolution introduced in 1941 which was substantially the same as the one approved in 1940.

(1946, pp. 549, 490)

Two resolutions were considered by the convention dealing with alleged discrimination against colored workers in trade unions (1) calling for the abolishing of such racial discrimination and (2) authorizing a study of the charges made that negroes are discriminated against in trade unions. Both resolutions were unanimously adopted as follows:

Res. No. 5:

Whereas—Discrimination on account of race, creed, color, national origin or ancestry in the trade union movement makes for division and division makes for weakness which robs the workers of the power to protect and defend their interests and rights against the ruthless attacks of organized business, and

Whereas—Discrimination based on race, color, creed, national origin or ancestry has been used by Hitler in Nazi Germany to create scapegoatism for the victimization of the Jews which helped to lead to the Second World War, resulting in the destruction of billions of dollars of property and millions of human beings, and

Whereas—The American labor movement must stand as the bulwark of democracy and freedom in the United States and give to America the spiritual and moral leadership of the democratic forces of the world, therefore, be it

Resolved—That this 65th convention of the American Federation of Labor condemn discrimination in all trade unions, international and local unions, central and state bodies, as a disruptive and destructive evil which gnaws at the heart of organized labor and go on record calling upon the international's locals and federal bodies to set up anti-discrimination committees for the purpose of teaching the membership, through discussion and the dissemination of literature, the dangers of discrimination because of race, creed, color, national origin and ancestry to our American democratic system and world peace.

Res. No. 144:

Whereas—The following discriminatory practices are known to exist within the American Federation of Labor: (1) Restrictions excluding negroes from membership, (2) Limiting the right of negroes to skilled trades, (3) Preventing the fair upgrading of negroes according to their seniority rights, (4) Refusal of certain city central bodies to admit to membership locals composed of negro members, (5) Maintenance of separate seniority lists for members of different races, therefore, be it

Resolved—That the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor initiate immediately a study of the discriminatory practices of various unions for the purpose of abolishing such practices toward the ultimate end of breaking the pattern of separate unions for white and negro members, and be it further

Resolved—That recommendations resulting from this study be presented to the next convention of the American Federation of Labor for action.

(1947, p. 632) Res. 23, unanimously adopted, reaffirmed the established position of the A. F. of L. in opposition to discrimination against membership in unions because of race, color, creed or national origin.

(Auxiliary Locals)—(1941, pp. 251, 536) A resolution was considered by the convention "condemning the auxiliary form of organization, since it denies workers, because of race, color, religious or national origin, the privilege of full fledged membership, in the national or international union, enjoyed by other workers, and that this convention, in harmony with sound trade union principles, calls upon the national and international unions that have auxiliary local unions to disestablish said auxiliary local unions."

During discussion it developed that many international unions have established auxiliary local unions, and that the membership of these auxiliary locals is not based upon any distinction or discrimination of race, color or creed, but are intended solely to increase the field of organization.

Attention was called to the fact that several organizations against whom there has been charges of discrimination because of color, have established auxiliaries for the purpose of bringing colored workers into the trade union movement.

As this resolution would condemn all such auxiliaries, the convention non-concurred.

(1944, pp. 44, 491, 495) Res. 23:

Whereas—Auxiliary unions deny workers, on account of race and color, the right in the form of a voice and vote, to participate in the making of the laws, constitution, general rules and policies that govern the national and international union, since they cannot attend and share on a basis of equality with other workers in the deliberations of the national conventions, and

Whereas — The auxiliary unions even deny the workers, on account of race and color, a voice and vote in the selection and designation of representatives who negotiate agreements concerning rates of pay and rules governing working conditions that vitally affect their work and life, therefore, be it

Resolved—That this convention of the American Federation of Labor in New Orleans, Louisiana, November, 1944, go on record as condemning the auxiliary unions and call upon all international and national unions that have such devices to abolish said auxiliary unions on the grounds that they are undemocratic, unfair and against sound trade union principles, and constitute taxation without representation, which the A. F. of L. cannot consistently countenance and tolerate as it fights for the rights of wage earners from business and government.

Your committee is not aware of any changes during the past year which should alter the positive declaration of last year's convention. We therefore recommend re-affirmation of the declaration of the Boston Convention, 1943.

(1946, p. 557) Res. 162:

Whereas—Auxiliary unions based upon race, color, religion, national origin or ancestry are contrary to and destructive of sound trade union principles, practice and philosophy, un-American and undemocratic, and are a species of racism and fascism that constituted the basic causes of the Second World War which destroyed millions of human lives and billions in property, and

Whereas—Certain international unions affiliated with the American Federation of Labor still maintain auxiliary unions based upon color and race that deny their members voice and vote in the determination of policies affecting their wages and working conditions, resulting from the negotiation of agreements, or in the selection and election of officers that direct the affairs of the national or international organization, or delegates to the international or national conventions, therefore, be it

Resolved—That this sixty-fifth convention of the American Federation of Labor, assembled in Chicago, October, 1946, go on record as condemning auxiliary unions as a form of taxation without representation, and call upon the national and international unions to abolish said auxiliary unions in the interest of justice and democracy to all of the members of unions, regardless of race, color, creed, country or ancestry.

In lieu of the resolution your committee recommends that the convention reaffirm the action of the Boston convention, 1943, and the New Orleans convention, 1944, on this subject.

Racketeering (also see: Gangsterism)

(1923, p. 511) The president of the A. F. of L. is commended, in cooperation with national and international unions for purging the labor movement of the rackets, racketeers and anti-union agitators and urge the continuation of these activities until the labor movement is entirely free of these undesirables.

(1933, p. 523) The A. F. of L. stands firmly and boldly against racketeering and gangsterism of all forms. It is the particular duty of the officers of the Federation and its E.C., and its organizers and other representatives, and the officers and members of all international and national unions, state federations of labor, city central bodies, local unions, and of all other divisions of the trade union movement, to use every means within their power to prevent the entrance of any form of racketeering or gangsterism into any part of the movement, and to purge it of any taint of this menace which may have entered into it in any part of the country.

The trade unions are an essential factor in our industrial, economic and social life. They are necessary to the social welfare of the community. They are the only means through which working people can effectively participate in the determination of their wages and working conditions. Through trade unions alone is it possible for the workers to be adequately represented at hearings and conferences relating to laws and public regulations which vitally affect their interests. The trade unions are the only medium through which the organized voice of the workers can be heard in a representative manner in the legislative halls of the city, state and nation. In a thousand ways, trade union organization, that is to say, the organization of workers of common or allied occupations for the purpose of discussing their common problems and needs, especially as relating to wages and working conditions, is of such tremendous importance in the lives of the working people that it is difficult to imagine anything that can be more dangerous to the commonweal than the misuse or perversion of any of these organizations to purposes other than those for which they were brought into existence by their members. Through them, the worker finds the means of a happier and better life, that reaches not only into his place of employment, but into his home, to his wife and even to the very babe in the cradle. The progress he makes through trade union activities enhances his opportunity to secure for his children the education to which they are entitled. It enables him to participate more actively in the civic life of the community. It means for him greater freedom to make the sort of social contacts so necessary to the fulfillment of life. Higher wages, better sanitation, greater safety and shorter work time at his place of employment send him out to his home with more to give to his family, a stronger, cleaner, healthier man, with time to sit at his own fireside, to meet with his neighbors, to assume his place in the political life of the community, and to participate in all of its social activities.

There is certainly no place in any of these splendid organizations for gangsters or racketeers or others who would misuse the good name of the trade union movement, or any of its divisions. The E.C. and the affiliated national and international unions have, whenever necessary, taken action in particular cases of such a character as to leave no doubt as to the attitude of the A. F. of L. on this point. In view of the fact, however, that the question has been raised at this convention, your committee has deemed it wise to present this statement for approval here in order that no enemy of the movement may be in a position to say that the convention failed to reiterate the position of the A. F. of L. on this subject. The E.C. is instructed to send copies of the declaration to all affiliated organizations for their information and guidance in order that action may be taken wherever and whenever necessary, through all available means, to protect and safeguard every division of our great trade union movement against any and every encroachment by racketeering or gansterism in any form or under any guise.

(1934, p. 629) Our trade unions are a most essential factor in the Nation's industrial economic and social life. They constitute the only practical method by which workmen can have a definite voice in the determination of their terms of employment and conditions of labor. Our trade unions constitute the only effective method through which the voice of Organized Labor can be heard in a representative capacity in connection with local, state and federal legislation. Our trade unions have been the source through which wage earners have secured a clearer understanding of their rights as free men, and through which they have secured practical knowledge of the problems which face them, and the most effective manner of dealing with them. They have been the source from which Labor found inspiration and encouragement. It is our trade-union movement which first demanded a free public school system, so that the workers' children would have full opportunity to secure an education. It is our trade union movement which has taught the principles of true brotherhood, of a proper recognition of the rights of others, and of the sacredness of contracts. In the industrial field our progress has been influenced largely through the practice of collective bargaining, a practice which required confidence in our integrity if employers are to freely accept this method of establishing industrial relations with their employes. All that is uplifting and ennobling in our trade union movement; all that we have accomplished which has met with the approval of sincere, honorable men in all walks of life; all that we have done which is a part of the splendid record of achievements for higher standards of living, a higher level of citizenship; the announcing of principles, and the declaration of purpose, which have met with the approval of the great religious denominations of our country, and which has received legislative support in our state and federal legislative bodies, is stained and besmirched when racketeering and gangsterism in any of its forms secures an entry, whether masked or openly, in our trade union movement.

(1935, p. 589) The spread of racketeering, corruption and gansterism in any section of the labor movement seriously effects the whole movement and every part of it. This convention instructs the E.C. to initiate a determined campaign to eradicate every sign of racketeering, corruption and gangsterism in the labor movement, taking all necessary measures to overcome the resistance of those elements in the trade unions who are today tolerating and protecting these evils.

Compliance With Law

(1940, pp. 26, 64-65, 150, 504-507) A. F. of L. took definite stand for preservation of law and our form of government and American institutions. Autonomy of national and international unions over their administrative policies reaffirmed, but racketeering, gangsterism and lawlessness deplored in following statement of Executive Council:

The American Federation of Labor is an American institution definitely committed to the preservation of our form of government and our American institutions. From the moment when the American Federation of Labor was launched, it has sought through official pronouncements and the formation of administrative policies, to develop and promote respect for and observance of the laws of the land. We seek to operate within the law and to secure economic betterment and higher standards of life and living for all working men and women through the utilization of lawful methods. That is the high aim and lofty purpose of the American Federation of Labor.

Unfortunately, we have found that men who have been influenced by criminal instincts have penetrated our movement and through a seizure of power and control have resorted to exploitation of helpless workers for purely selfish purposes. We are compelled to deal with the realities of the situation, to organize men and women as we find them, to accept into membership wage earners who are willing and qualified to join. The economic success of the workers in each industrial calling depends largely upon the percentage of workers who become organized and who assume union obligations. Wage earners are wage earners. We accept all qualified wage earners into membership in our unions. They in turn, exercising their democratic rights, elect their officers.

We seek to establish and maintain our unions upon a high moral, ethical and law-abiding basis. We disavow racketeering, gangsterism and disregard for law most emphatically and without reservation. These forces of lawlessness inflict great injury upon the membership of organized labor. We want none of it in our movement. We know that public opinion, which after all is a vital and controlling force in American life, will support organized labor when it is right, and will turn against it when it is wrong. We seek to keep the American Federation of Labor right because we are inspired by a sincere desire to lift the standard of life and living among working men and women to a higher level. As a voluntary organization, we realize that our progress and our achievements will depend very largely upon the support of a healthy public opinion.

The millions of members who make up the American Federation of Labor are honest, sincere, law-abiding citizens. They exercise a wholesome influence in the promotion of the civic and moral betterment of each community. Invariably they take an active part in all movements launched in their respective communities designed to advance community and individual interests. Their interests must be protected and their welfare promoted.

In order to accomplish this high and lofty purpose the Executive Council calls upon all members of unions directly chartered by the American Federation of Labor to exercise all care and diligence in preventing exploiters and gangsters from securing official positions in their organizations and from exercising control over their administrative policies.

In dealing with this question, however, it must be pointed out that national and international unions chartered by the American Federation of Labor are autonomous organizations, exercising full and complete authority over their own administrative policies. Full and complete control is vested in the membership of these national and international unions to formulate and execute their policies, to adopt their own constitutions and to elect their own officers. All of this is in entire conformity with the voluntary as well as the democratic procedure established and followed by the American Federation of Labor since its formation over sixty years ago. The American Federation of Labor could not confer upon these organizations full and complete power to administer their own affairs and at the same time reserve to itself the right to exercise dictatorial control. Such attitude would be contradictory.

However, the Executive Council urges that the membership of national and international unions select and elect men of character, of known honesty and integrity to official positions, and prevent those with criminal records from either holding official positions or from representing them in any capacity whatsoever.

(Pp. 504 - 507) Resolution submitted to convention authorizing A. F. of L. Executive Council to act in charges of racketeering involving officials of affiliated unions. Convention committee made lengthy and important report on policy in this matter as follows:

Resolution No. 32:

Whereas—Recent instances of racketeering in a few labor organizations by individuals in high places, who have exploited the labor movement for personal gain and aggrandizement have cast a reflection on the good name of the entire labor movement, and

Whereas—These instances have been seized upon by unscrupulous enemies of labor to discredit the cause of trade unionism and hamper its progress, and

Whereas — Racketeering provides hostile government officials with a convenient excuse for interfering with the legitimate activities of bona fide trade unions under the guise of prosecuting racketeers, and

Whereas—The integrity of the labor movement in the nation demands that it take prompt and effective action to eliminate from its ranks officers found to be corrupt or to have been convicted of crimes involving moral turpitude, and

Whereas—The American Federation of Labor has hitherto lacked the constitutional authority to take effective action against affiliated organizations harboring such unscrupulous officers owing to the autonomous powers which such organizations have traditionally enjoyed, and

Whereas—It has long been recognized that a formula must be devised of affiliated organizations, will enable the American Federation of Labor to remove from its ranks such individuals who degrade the labor movement. Therefore, be it

Resolved—1. That the American Federation of Labor, through its Executive Council, or any agency authorized by it, have summary power to order the removal by any national or international union affiliated with it or federal local chartered by it, of any officer or officers convicted of any offense involving moral turpitude or conviction of using their official positions in their unions for personal gain, in all cases where such national or international unions or federal locals which, while preserving the autonomy have failed to do so;

2. That all constitutions of national and international unions affiliated with it and of federal locals chartered by it, contain appropriate provisions for adequate disciplinary action against such of their officers as may be charged with the above acts;

3. That whenever any union fails to institute proceedings in accordance with its constitution against any officers charged with the above acts, the A. F. of L. shall use its full moral force to compel the filing of charges and the holding of a hearing upon the same.

Your committee is in complete accord with that portion of the Executive Council's report which declares that it is our purpose to maintain a high moral standard in our trade union movement, and that we definitely disavow racketeering and gangsterism, and that we want none of it in our movement.

Your committee, without qualification, condemns the action of trade union officials who use their position of trust, confidence and high responsibility, for the purpose of exploiting those whom they represent, the employers and the public, for their private gain.

While such conduct is reprehensible, and in every way injurious to our trade union movement as a whole, we direct attention to the fact that a far larger number of men in the professions, in public life, and in business, have manifested criminal tendencies and have been found guilty.

We submit with pride the record of honesty and integrity of the thousands of trade union officials as a whole, either in local, state or national capacity. The record for integrity which they have established with their membership, with public officials and with employers, is a just source of gratification.

Those who make use of instances where trade union officials have erred, for the purpose of condemning the trade union movement and its leadership as a whole, are guilty of grave social harm.

There is a direct moral responsibility on the part of the trade union movement to keep its ranks free from every tinge of racketeering and gangsterism. The membership of our trade union movement, and the public, have the right to expect that the leaders of labor will be men of unquestioned personal integrity.

Your committee believes that declarations by this convention to be effective, must be accompanied by provisions which will place the American Federation of Labor in a position where the subject under consideration can be dealt with in an effective manner.

In so doing we must keep in mind that the American Federation of Labor is a federation of self-governing national and international unions who have been guaranteed their right to self-government, which includes their election and selection of officers and control over their conduct.

On the other hand the national and international organizations have the power and the obligation to protect the integrity of the trade union movement by the enforcement of disciplinary action which will safeguard the good name of their own organization, and the reputation of the American Federation of Labor.

We direct attention to the well established policy of the American Federation of Labor in connection with the directly affiliated local organizations. Whenever charges have been filed against officers of local and federal labor unions and investigation has shown the charges well founded, such officers have been removed from their positions of trust, and when necessary to maintain the integrity of trade unionism, offending organizations have had their charter annulled.

In lieu of Resolution No. 32, and in support of the Executive Council's report, your committee recommends that all national and international unions affiliated with the American Federation of Labor be advised to adopt rules or amendments to their constitution or where no provision now prevails embodying appropriate provisions for adequate disciplinary action against any of their officers and/or members who may have been found guilty of betraying the trust reposed in them, or of having used their official position for personal and illegal gain, who have been or may be convicted of such acts which cast discredit upon the labor movement.

That whenever the Executive Council has valid reason to believe that a trade union official is guilty of any such offense, and the National or International Union in question seemingly evades its responsibility, the Executive Council shall be authorized to apply all of its influence to secure such action as will correct the situation.

The foregoing recommendations must not be construed as preventing any person from rehabilitating himself.

Attention is also called to a certain type of gangsterism which requires vigorous action on the part of the trade union movement.

There have been men of ill repute who, in some instances, have succeeded, through stealth and armed force, in securing control of existing local unions, or in organizing new ones, using the power they have acquired for illegal purposes. This is a most difficult evil to eradicate. It calls for the application of every means available.

(1941, pp. 69, 541, 663) The Executive Council possesses a keen consciousness of the responsibilities of the American Federation of Labor to the public, and the value of a sound, favorable public opinion. We assert with all the power at our command that it is the purpose of the officers and members of the American Federation of Labor to establish and maintain the American Federation of Labor as a great American organization, a supporter of our free institutions and our democratic form of government. We are determined to maintain the basic principles of freedom and justice upon which the superstructure of our government rests. We yield to none in our respect for law, order and orderly procedure. . . .

The Executive Council disavows and repudiates with all the power at its command, lawlessness of any character, racketeering in any form, and exploitation wherever practiced. Such procedure is no part of the administrative policy of the American Federation of Labor. We will cooperate fully with the officers of the law in the efforts they put forth to impose proper punishment upon those found guilty of the commission of crimes and the violation of law. . . .

Respect for law, the law which governs the conduct of an officer and the law which governs their associate officers and members, is fundamental to the success of any great movement such as the American Federation of Labor. These laws cannot be transgressed at will when some who hate our movement feel they should be transgressed; they must be religiously observed even under the most trying and difficult circumstances and conditions.

The members of the American Federation of Labor, who are also American citizens, call for the punishment of any man, whether he be an officer or member of the American Federation of Labor, for violation of law or for the commission of a crime. Responsibility for the punishment of law violators rests with the officers of the law and with those charged with the duty of enforcing the law. All we ask is that those charged with the commission of crimes be given a fair trial as provided for in the laws of the land. It is inconceivable that when a representative of Labor is charged with the crime of extortion that the membership of the organization who are the victims of said extortion would tolerate or condone such action. Those who are exploited cannot willingly become the victims of the exploiter.

The Executive Council calls upon the officers and members of all organizations affiliated with the American Federation of Labor to be vigilant and to guard against the employment of those who for selfish purposes seek to utilize the labor movement for the sole purpose of promoting their material welfare. Insist and demand that the representatives of organized labor shall possess honesty and integrity of the highest degree and shall administer the affairs of the organization in accordance with the laws of the organization and in accordance with the laws of the land.

The following strong statement presented by the convention committee was unanimously adopted:

The founders of the American Federation of Labor were trade unionists, affiliated with their respective organizations. For the purpose of strengthening their organizations and the promotion of the welfare of their members, they determined to bring into existence a federation of trade unions. They considered the form and structure which would be most effective in accomplishing their purposes. They determined to adopt the form and structure of the Federal Government as outlined in the Constitution of the United States.

They determined that each National and International Union, affiliating with the Federation, shall be a sovereign, autonomous organization. They reserved to each National and International Union all powers to deal with their internal affairs; manage their properties, deal with every problem affecting the officers, the local unions, and the members of such National or International Union. They granted to the Federation only such powers as were expressly delegated in the written Constitution then adopted and as amended from time to time.

These autonomous National and International Unions have deemed it wise to maintain the form and structure borrowed from the Federal Constitution. Thus the power and authority to discipline officers, locals and members of National or International Unions for wrong-doing, has been reserved to the National and International Unions. By virtue of such reservation there is no power in the officers and Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor to exercise disciplinary authority for any offense committed by an officer or member of a National or International Union.

As the report of the Executive Council points out, limitation of authority in this respect is identical with the constitutional limit placed on the President of the United States and his Cabinet. The President of the United States cannot discipline an official of any state or municipality for any wrong or violation of state or municipal law committed by such officer of a state or municipality. The framers of the American Constitution concluded that this reservation of power to the states was consistent with democratic institutions. It determined that a contrary policy would lead to dictatorship. So, with the affiliates of the American Federation of Labor they, too, adopted this procedure of democratic government.

The National and International Unions have established and maintained clean and honorable labor organizations given over to the promotion of benefits and interests of its members. That is manifested by the thousands of agreements with employers providing for fair wages, limited hours and improved working conditions for the members of these unions. It is further manifested in the hundreds of state and national legislative enactments establishing the best working standards for workers anywhere in the world.

However, in organizations, the membership of which totals more than five millions of persons, there will be found a few dishonest individuals. These individuals may be ordinary members or may be persons in high office. The dishonest individual and the law-breaker is not confined to any particular class or position, nor to any particular institution. They will be found among the membership of Bar Associations, Medical Associations, Fraternal Organizations, Religious Organizations, and in Trade Unions. Human propensities, whether for good or bad, are not limited to class, race, creed, color or institution. Wrongdoers and violators of the law have been found among presidents of Bar Associations, of Medical Societies, of Stock Exchanges, bankers, governors of states, judges, and even Cabinet members. Considering however, the fact that labor organizations accept into membership numbers which far exceed the membership of most other organizations, or institutions, those officers or members of trade unions who have offended against the law are, by comparison, considerably less than those found in other organizations or institutions.

But just as these other organizations and institutions do not condone any dishonesty or violation of law on the part of officers and members, likewise the affiliates of the American Federation of Labor condemn these practices. The affiliates of the American Federation of Labor, and the American Federation of Labor itself, have condemned the racketeer, the gangster and the criminal in most vigorous terms, whether he is in the ranks of labor or in the ranks of any other organization or institution.

Where proof exists of violation of the public laws, the unions themselves have asked that prosecution be instituted against the violators. Where members have violated the constitution and rules of the organization, disciplinary measures have been taken against offenders by the tribunals of such trade unions.

It may be well to observe, however, that courts have not in all instances been cooperative with trade unions which have sought to impose punishment upon union officials and members who have violated the laws of the union. It has proved discouraging to organizations which have tried and disciplined an officer, or member, for violation of union laws, to find that the court has reversed the action of the union and reinstated the offender. Likewise courts have at times injected themselves into the internal affairs of organizations, as the result of which unions which have taken action on these matters through their own tribunals have been subjected to long, troublesome and expensive litigation in order to sustain their own action.

Although the American Federation of Labor has no authority to discipline officers of International Unions, or locals affiliated with Internationals, or the membership affiliated with such locals, it has nevertheless called upon National and International Organizations to take prompt and decisive action, when men of this kind are found, to discipline offenders within their organizations and to rid themselves of criminals, racketeers, dishonest persons and violators of law. The law requires that regardless of the position in the union of the person accused and regardless of the character or magnitude of the accusation, charges must be preferred and a hearing accorded the accused. A number of International Unions, which have in the past year held conventions, have revised and amended their constitutions so as to vest specific power in the general officers and boards to prefer such charges, to conduct such trials, to take over local unions and appoint receivers for them, and to make mandatory upon local unions their duty to expel any officer or member who has been found guilty of crime or serious wrong-doing which tends to bring dishonor on the union. It is gratifying to the American Federation of Labor to observe this ready response on the part of these Internationals to the request of the American Federation of Labor.

The American Federation of Labor again calls upon all National and International Unions to re-examine their constitution, laws and rules, and at the earliest opportunity amend the same where amendments are necessary, so that prompt and diligent action may be taken against locals, officers and members who are guilty of offenses against public laws, and the laws of the National or International Union.

The anti-labor columnists and the newspapers which publish their articles, do not promote public welfare by condemning all organized labor for the misdeeds of a few officers and members. In their vicious and misleading attacks upon the entire institution of organized labor they harm the interests of the public as well as labor, because by such malicious and untruthful attacks they encourage anti-labor forces in State Legislatures and the Congress to endeavor to pass legislation which would effectively destroy the free democratic institutions of organized labor.

Labor has always sought to maintain a clean house. With the surge and influx of new members since the end of the depression, the problem of preventing the entrance and activities of the racketeer and the criminal, has become of utmost importance. Millions of men and women who belong to trade unions will not tolerate the racketeer, the gangster, and the criminal in their midst. They will eliminate him, and have eliminated him. Insofar as public prosecutions are concerned, the law vests that function only with the public authorities. No one more than the labor movement itself, understands the value of public confidence. The American Federation of Labor appreciates the necessity for National and International Unions and their affiliates to maintain that confidence by elimination of the racketeer and the criminal from their ranks.

Therefore, the American Federation of Labor once again calls upon its affiliates to take prompt action whenever racketeering, wrong-doing, or other crime is engaged in by any of its officers or members, which tends to bring dishonor on the trade union movement. To that end the American Federation of Labor will give every aid and support to its affiliated organizations.

Insofar as the American Federation of Labor is concerned with respect to those directly affiliated organizations over which there has been delegated to it the power to discipline officers and members of such unions and to discipline such unions, the American Federation of Labor has acted with promptness and decisiveness. Members have been ordered expelled, officers removed, and charters revoked when, after trial, an offender has been found guilty.

In order to further the program of wiping out racketeering and crime wherever it may exist, the American Federation of Labor directs all central bodies to refuse the seating of any delegate from a union who has been convicted of serious wrong-doing which reflects dishonor on the trade union movement; and such delegate, if convicted after being seated, shall be unseated by such central labor body.

Hobbs Act—(1943, pp. 91, 300) The Hobbs bill (H. R. 653) passed the House of Representatives April 9, 1943, but is pending in the Senate. It repeals the present so-called "anti-racketeering Act" of 1934 and enacts a new law dealing with interferences with interstate commerce by "robbery" and "extortion." The Hobbs bill makes it a felony, punishable by 20 years imprisonment, or $10,000 fine, or both, for any person in any way or degree to obstruct, delay, or affect commerce by robbery or extortion, or to conspire or attempt to conspire, or to participate in any attempt to do so. The American Federation of Labor offered an amendment to this bill so as to preserve the exemptions accorded Labor in the Clayton Act, the Norris-LaGuardia Act, the National Labor Relations Act, and the Railway Labor Act. Although the amendment proposed was not adopted in the form submitted, as a result of the efforts of the American Federation of Labor a proviso was inserted in the bill to the effect that it shall not be construed so as to modify or affect the labor provisions in the Clayton Act, the Norris-LaGuardia Act, the Railway Labor Act, or the National Labor Relations Act.

The Hobbs bill also contains a specific provision making it a crime for any person knowingly and willfully to interfere with, obstruct, or retard the orderly transportation of persons or property in interstate or foreign commerce. Here again the penalties are $10,000 fine or imprisonment for not more than 20 years, or both.

The bill is avowedly anti-Labor. The American Federation of Labor will continue its efforts to defeat its passage in the Senate.

A. F. of L. Counsel reported the following:

The American Federation of Labor undertook to propose an amendment to this bill which would have preserved the exemptions accorded labor in the Clayton Act, the Norris-LaGuardia Act, the National Labor Relations Act, and the Railway Labor Act. Although the amendment proposed by the American Federation of Labor was not adopted in its precise form, another amendment was adopted to the effect that the Hobbs Bill shall not be construed so as to modify or affect the labor provisions in the Clayton Act, the Norris-LaGuardia Act, the Railway Labor Act or the National Labor Relations Act. Not only were the efforts of the American Federation of Labor rewarded by this amendment which makes the bill considerably less harmful than it was when first introduced, but the opposition to it has had the effect of causing it to lie dormant in the Senate. It is a vicious bill, and of course, ought not to be passed.

(1943, p. 518) As pointed out in the Executive Council's report, the Hobbs' Bill seeks to repeal the present so-called "anti-racketeering act" and substitutes a new law making it a felony, punishable by 20 years' imprisonment, or $10,000 fine, or both, to interfere by "robbery" and "extortion" with interstate commerce. The Federation sought to defeat the passage of this bill. When enactment seemed inevitable, the Federation sought an amendment. Although the amendment submitted was not adopted in precise form, in substance, it was adopted thus rendering the bill less harmful. The House passed the bill and sent it to the Senate where it is now pending. The Federation is opposed to this bill and will exert all efforts to defeat it.

Whereas — The legislative history of Title 18, U.S. Code, Section 1951, popularly known as the "Hobbs Act," shows conclusively that the Act was intended by Congress to curtail and render more difficult the activities of predatory criminal gangs, of the Kelly and Dillinger types, and

Whereas — That legislative history further shows that Congress did not intend that the Act should be used to hamper, interfere with or restrain in any way legitimate activities of labor unions, and their officers and agents directed toward proper, union objectives, and

Whereas — Notwithstanding such legislative history and intent, union officers and members have been indicted and/or convicted under the Hobbs Act for engaging in activities which had always been considered as being in furtherance of proper union aims and objectives, and

Whereas — A glaring example of the misinterpretation of the purposes of said Act is United States v. Kemble, 198 F. 2d 889, in which one Aaron Kemble, business agent for Teamsters Local 676 of Camden, New Jersey, was indicted, prosecuted and convicted under said Act, because, in the exercise of his duties as such business agent, he sought to induce the employment by a trucking concern of a competent union helper to do the unloading of said truck, and in so doing uttered a threat to the driver and someone let air out of his tires, and

Whereas — In said prosecution, the Government conceded that no inference could be drawn that either the union or Kemble was interested in "protection money" from the trucking concern, but took the position, concurred in by the majority of the Court, that even though the purposes of Kemble were to secure work for members of his union, he would still be guilty under the Hobbs Act if the demand was accompanied by any violence or threats, and

Whereas — In the majority opinion issued in the Kemble case, it is inferred that in proper cases there might be a violation of the Hobbs Act if coercion is involved in the normal demand for wages as compensation for services desired by or valuable to the employer; for example, a strike for higher wages, and

Whereas — In a separate dissenting opinion issued in the Kemble case, Judge McLaughlin pointed out that the prosecution arose from a reputable union's genuine attempt to organize a trucking corporation, and that the sole purpose of Kemble was to procure work for capable union men, whereas the Hobbs Act was directed at blackmail and racketeering, and he further held that if violence occurred in connection with legitimate union activities, such violence or other misconduct should be left to state supervision, and

Whereas — In a separate dissenting opinion issued in the same case, Judge Staley pointed out that if the majority opinion were sound, a union and its officers and members, who struck in violation of a no-strike clause or who were engaged in a strike and picketing for any unlawful purpose, could be indicted, prosecuted and convicted under the Hobbs Act because any strike constitutes the use of force to obtain property of another, and

Whereas — Such construction of the Hobbs Act as was made by the majority court in the Kemble case encourages indictments and prosecutions of union officers, engaged in the pursuit of what have long been considered as proper union objectives, so that if such prosecutions and indictments are unchecked, it will probably result in officers and members of labor unions being reluctant to engage in any strikes or picketing where interstate commerce is involved, because of the possibility that the purpose thereof may be declared to be unlawful and because violence might ensue as tempers flare, now, therefore, be it declare that it deprecates the interpretation of the Hobbs Act which has been made by our courts in cases such as the Kemble case, and calls upon Congress to so amend the Hobbs Act as to remove any possibility that officers or members may be indicted, and/or convicted under said Act for activities directed at what have traditionally been considered as proper union objectives, and that if violence, threats, coercion or intimidation occur in connection with attempts to carry out said proper union objectives, that regulation and prosecution thereof be left to the states under existing state statutes.

Resolution approved and referred to the officers of the A. F. of L. and the Comm. on Legislation for further action.

Radio (also see: Public Relations) (1925, p. 316) The E.C. was directed to investigate the feasibility of entering into arrangements with existing and future broadcasting stations for the transmission of Labor's message by radio through and under the direction of Organized Labor.

(1926, p. 59) The Atlantic City convention recommended that the E.C. investigate the feasibility of broadcasting Labor's message by radio under the direction of Organized Labor.

Letters were directed to unions in all cities in the United States and Canada where broadcasting stations are located.

While the replies to these communications were not numerous, the responses that were received indicated live interest.

In Chicago, Labor has established a radio broadcasting station. This radio station is administered and operated by a corporation composed and controlled by Labor representatives.

Talks by representative Labor men over the radio were reported from all parts of the country.

Under the law enacted in 1912 the consent of the Department of Commerce and the assignment of a wave length were the necessary steps before the operation of a radio broadcasting station, but decisions by two courts as well as by an opinion of the Attorney General have nullified this.

On February 5, 1923, the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia held that the duty imposed by the law of 1912 to issue radio broadcasting licenses gave the Secretary of Commerce no discretionary power over such issuance and further held that the duty of naming some wave length only was mandatory upon him. This wave length was to be one which would result in the least possible interference with other stations and the fixing by the Secretary of Commerce of a wave length was but merely a restriction upon the license.

Since this decision the Secretary of Commerce had refused to assign wave lengths for various applicants for licenses, but in April of this year the Federal District Court for the Northern Division of Illinois has held that the 1912 law conveyed no grant of power to the Secretary of Commerce to establish regulations regarding the licensing of broadcasting stations, since such regulations were contained in the 1912 law itself and that Congress had accordingly withheld from the Secretary of Commerce the power to prescribe additional regulations.

Shortly after this decision the Department of Commerce asked the Attorney General for a definition of its powers and duties. The opinion rendered held that the Department was without power to enforce or deny the use of particular wave lengths or to fix the power of individual broadcasting stations.

Use of such wave lengths is a matter to be determined by the individual stations, pending subsequent legislation by Congress. While an applicant for license must select a wave length, he is not obliged to use it solely, but may use any other wave lengths, except between 600 and 1600 meters, reserved for government stations.

Anyone may now obtain a radio broadcasting license, and the license will show the wave length selected.

There is already an intimation abroad that stations using a heretofore exclusive wave length, have secured a proprietary interest therein, and that an action at law for damages, and an injunction with damages at equity will lie. This is also claimed as regards any station, which is interfered with by another station appropriating a higher and interfering wave length.

Congress will consider legislation changing this condition in the next session. Meanwhile the industry is controlled by voluntary agreements between stations.

Such will be our endeavors when this subject comes again before Congress.

The enactment of legislation providing for the regulation of broadcasting raises very fundamental issues as to the bases upon which franchises should be granted.

Radio service is a new medium of communication. Freedom of speech is involved in a new relationship. The radio is already an important force in formulating public opinion and it is of the utmost importance that there be equality of opportunity for all. It is evident there must be administrative control over broadcasting and that the control must be in the federal government. It is equally obvious that this administration should be safeguarded against arbitrary decisions and policies not in accord with public interests. The time limitations on franchises is another important issue. The possibility of vested rights in licenses or wave lengths involves definition of property rights in either.

(P. 247) The need for safeguarding freedom of speech over the radio is urgent. Danger of any control which would involve a limitation of this freedom is a serious matter in a medium of communication of such far-reaching influence. At present although all broadcasting stations must obtain a license to operate from the Secretary of Commerce, there are no restrictions as to wave length used due to legal situations following court decisions and inaction by Congress. The wave length is now regulated only by voluntary agreements between stations. It is intimated, however, that certain stations have obtained a proprietary interest in their respective wave lengths and that they may take legal action against anyone using a wave length interfering with them. This matter represents a possible danger which should be guarded against by legislation.

Congress is to consider legislation regulating broadcasting privileges at its next session. All citizens should work to promote such legislation as will safeguard free speech over the radio. Practical measures which will act toward this end are: Limitation of the franchise to short periods of time such as one year; Federal control over the radio.

The E.C. is directed to study the specific problems involved in this matter in order to promote legislation which will be effective in exercising needed control.

(P. 247) The 45th annual convention of the A. F. of L. endorses the Chicago Federation of Labor broadcasting station and referred the subject matter of radio broadcasting station to the E.C. for further consideration and action. In so doing attention is directed to a tender made by the Chicago Federation of Labor to the A. F. of L.

(1928, p. 115) Under the terms of Resolution No. 80, as adopted by the Los Angeles convention, an investigation of the entire field of radio broadcasting was authorized. To have attempted to investigate the broad field of radio activity in all its phases would have been impossible and would have resulted in opinion half formed and based upon incomplete conclusions. The E.C. has, however, watched with increasing interest the developments which have taken place in this field.

It realizes the vast assistance which radio stations owned, maintained and operated by the labor movement, can be to trade unionists and to the country at large. This assistance can be especially helpful in presenting Labor's position and aims before the general public. It can also be utilized to familiarize our movement with the latest developments within our own ranks and can be very greatly used for the transmission of addresses to our membership from prominent trade union officers. We oppose and will oppose any movement which will tend to weaken our position in this field and will assist in every way the extension of trade union activities in the radio world. The vast growth of nation-wide hook-ups in the radio field may cause some annoyance and some thought of monopoly of the air, but in this practical day there is no other way by which the country as a whole can be reached for their enjoyment, enlightenment and education. It is true that there may be some hardships worked, but this is inevitable and with the systematic development of radio activity, coupled with proper functioning by the Federal Radio Commission, this will be reduced to a minimum.

Radio broadcasting is properly a part of interstate commerce. As such it should be susceptible to those regulations as are applicable to it. Again, the Federal Radio Commission is clothed with power to prevent abuses and to cure them where they exist.

(P. 214) There is going on at the present time a fierce struggle for desirable wave lengths. The desirable wave lengths or frequencies available for broadcasting in the U.S. are extremely limited. Great business and corporate interests have put in their claims. They are vigorously contesting for the right to use the limited broadcasting field for commercial purposes.

Only one broadcasting station in the U.S. is owned by and operated in the interest of organized labor. That is station WCFL, owned and operated during the past three years by the Chicago Federation of Labor, a regularly chartered city central branch of the A. F. of L.

In the recent reallocation of wave lengths, time and power, by the Federal Radio Commission, that commission assigned to station WCFL a wave length which does not permit of broadcasting from Chicago after eight o'clock in the evening at this time of the year, and also reduced its power to 1000 watts. The effect of this action of the Radio Commission is not only to restrict the area over which WCFL can be heard, thus treating the station as though it were purely local in interest and usefulness, but also to keep it off the air entirely during most of the evening, which is the only time that persons employed during the day have the leisure to use their receiving sets.

In order to give the working people of the nation the service to which they are entitled from this station, it must have an exclusive national channel with unlimited time and ample power. An application for such exclusive channel, full time and the necessary power for station WCFL is now pending before the Federal Radio Commission.

In its broadcasting program, the station is earnestly endeavoring to carry out the principles and policies of the A. F. of L. The officers of the Chicago Federation of Labor, including those who are actively engaged in the management of station WCFL, have requested the advice of the A.

F. of L. in relation to the program of the station and assistance in the efforts being made to secure the necessary allocation of wave length, time and power.

The President of the A. F. of L. is authorized and instructed to appoint a standing committee of such number or to select some person or persons as he may deem wise to advise station WCFL in relation to matters affecting organized labor in connection with the programs of that station, such committee, person, or persons to report at regular intervals, and to take such further steps and enter into such further understandings as will insure the full observance of labor's ideals, principles and policies enunciated from time to time by the A. F. of L., and carry labor's constructive, beneficial and humanitarian voice to all parts of our land and into every home.

Every effort should be made to secure from the Federal Radio Commission the desired allocation of wave length, time and power, and that the officers of the A. F. of L. be therefore authorized to render such assistance in this respect as may be in their power, and further, that the officers of all national and international unions be likewise urged to assist in the efforts to secure the necessary allocation and permits from the Federal Radio Commission for station WCFL.

It is further recommended that in event these efforts fail, steps be taken to bring the entire matter to the attention of the Congress of the United States. It is understood that the station will continue to adhere strictly to the principles and policies of the A. F. of L.

(P. 254) Radio broadcasting presents new potentialities for publicity, so great as to challenge the imagination. It is a medium through which all sorts of propaganda may be carried directly into the privacy of the very homes of the people in a great number of ways. The advertising methods now used in radio broadcasting are of such a character as to indicate that a new technique is being formed for the development of public opinion. Musical entertainments, stories and jokes, as well as speeches, are being used as a means of leading the thoughts of the listeners toward various objectives. There is grave danger that this great field of publicity may be placed under the control of a few corporations which will then be able to dictate what may or may not be broadcast and thus materially affect public opinion to suit the pleasure of such corporations. Steps must be taken to make certain that this great avenue of publicity will not be closed to organized labor.

(1929, pp. 103, 291) Unless Labor finds a way to get its message on the air, it will be excluded from what has come to be a method of communication that now rivals the press. Just as the Labor Movement must have the recognized right to own, publish and control its papers and magazines, limited in circulation only by the financial means of the trade unions and the willingness of the people to subscribe and read, so it must obtain and hold the right to own, operate and control its own broadcasting facilities, limited only by its financial and managerial ability to maintain the necessary stations and the willingness of the listeners to "tune in." Organized Labor, therefore, should be allotted at least one clear full-time air channel or wave-length, with the right to use high-power broadcasting apparatus. It is to secure this allotment and to establish this right for the use of the trade union movement that Station WCFL is endeavoring to secure the necessary time, wave-length and power rights. In this effort WCFL is receiving, and should continue to receive, the support of the A. F. of L. and the affiliated organizations.

For the same reason that the representatives of the Labor Movement and its various divisions take advantage of opportunities to present the cause of Labor through the medium of the public press, they should seek opportunities to send the message of Organized Labor to radio listeners through whatever broadcasting station may be available for the purpose. Arrangements for broadcasting programs are not matters to be undertaken without committees to plan and carry them through. Your committee is in full accord with the warning that, if Organized Labor does not take the initiative to secure for itself proper time on the radio, Labor will be practically excluded from the field. In the establishment and maintenance of Station WCFL, the Chicago Federation of Labor has taken the initiative in the effort to secure full time on the air for Labor broadcasting purposes.

(P. 291) The A. F. of L. endorses the efforts of Broadcasting Station WCFL to secure the unlimited use of a radio frequency, with adequate power and time of operation, in order that it may serve the Labor Movement and the general public by the promulgation of the principles and policies and ideals of Organized Labor. Therefore we respectfully call the attention of the Congress of the United States, and the other responsible officials of our Government, to the facts hereinabove set out, and that we urge such action on their part as will protect the interests of the American people in the field of radio broadcasting.

(P. 293) The A. F. of L. protests against any effort to repeal or to weaken the anti-trust provisions of the present Radio Law of the U.S. and it petitions Congress to strengthen these anti-trust sections of the law and demand their enforcement by the Federal Radio Commission and the Department of Justice of the U.S.

(1931, p. 344) The possibilities of the medium of the radio in the field of adult education is unlimited. Perhaps no event since the invention of the printing press has equalled the possibilities of the radio in education. Labor early recognized this new medium in the creation of WCFL in Chicago. But Labor also recognized and has utilized the facilities placed at its disposal from time to time by the national chains and the local stations.

The recent creation of the National Advisory Council for the Radio in Education is a significant trend in the adult education movement. The endeavor of this Council to secure a contact with Labor through the Workers' Education Bureau is but another indication of the recognition which the Bureau has won. The further offer of the Council to arrange a broadcast of the record of Labor's contribution to the public welfare in various fields of endeavor over a nationwide hookup should be a service of the first importance.

(P. 469) The A. F. of L. hereby petitions the Congress of the U.S. to appoint a joint committee of Senators and Representatives to investigate the Federal Radio Commission's allocations of channels, wave lengths, and radio facilities, and to inquire into the administration and interpretation of the radio laws of the U.S. by the Federal Radio Commission and recommend to the Congress of the U.S. appropriate legislation whereby Organized Labor will receive its proper share of the radio channels, wave lengths, and facilities equal to that of any other firm, company, corporation or organization.

(1934, p. 611) The E.C. is directed to prepare dramatization of Labor history, statements of the principles and purposes of the A. F. of L., organization addresses and other addresses dealing with the problems of Labor for electrical transcription so that these will be available to all broadcasting stations. Also to petition the Federal Communications Commission so that fifty (50) per cent of all radio facilities will be allocated to organizations or to associations operating upon a non-profit basis and that should it become necessary to accomplish this purpose that adequate legislation be introduced in Congress.

(P. 617) The A. F. of L. unanimously approves the application of WCFL for an assignment by the Federal Communications Commission of a clear channel of 970 kilocycles, with unlimited time and with power equal to the maximum power assigned to any channel in the U. S. The convention also commended the courage, persistence and constructive, farsighted policy which led the Chicago Federation of Labor to establish station WCFL.

(1935, p. 795) Available information is conclusive that the ownership and control of radio broadcasting is rapidly passing into the hands of the daily newspaper publishers. There being but two avenues by which the great mass of our citizens can be reached, your committee believes that to permit a monopolized private control of either or both methods would constitute a serious menace to political democracy and the welfare of our people. Newspaper publishing and radio broadcasting are rapidly passing under a more centralized control. While the Constitution guarantees a free press it is observed only in maintaining freedom of expression for those who own and operate newspapers and those whose utterances the publishers desire to admit to their columns.

Radio and newspapers and all sources of public information should be freed from monopolistic control and operation. The President of the A. F. of L. is hereby instructed to investigate the subject and cause to be prepared and introduced in the Congress during its next session, legislation which will make effective the purpose declared in this report.

viding the United States into zones for licensing broadcasting stations, was repealed by Congress. The Radio Communications Commission is authorized to make such distribution of licenses, frequencies, hours of operation, and of power among the several states and communities as will be fair and equal. Owing to the fact that in some zones there were less than the number provided by the law, it was considered that it should be repealed. The change will be of great benefit to the listeners of WCFL broadcasts as it will give WCFL a 50,000 watt station to permit its service to reach the entire United States. The A. F. of L. supported the change.

(P. 489)) The A. F. of L. hereby petitions the Congress of the U.S. to pass the necessary legislation to assign or to have assigned the channel of 970 kilocycles as a cleared national channel with unlimited time and with power equal to the maximum power assigned to any channel in the U. S. to the owner or owners of the broadcasting station or stations approved by the recognized labor organizations which, in the opinion of the Commission are most representative of Labor interests of the U. S. and not to issue any license or licenses for the use of such frequency except with the written consent of such so recognized labor organization to any other person, association, corporation, organization or co-partnership. The E.C. is authorized and directed to take any and all steps necessary or advisable to effectuate the intent of this resolution and the action by this convention recommended in furtherance thereof.

(1938, p. 501) The A. F. of L. will do all in its power through its various national and international unions and other organizations to attract advertisers to Radio Station WCFL in Chicago. (1939, p. 495) Reaffirmed.

Labor Day—(1944, p. 535) Res. 58:

Whereas, Labor Day programs are held in hundreds of cities throughout the country, and

Whereas, Labor Day committees often encounter difficulty in securing suitable guest speakers for the occasion, and

Whereas, A nationally known labor leader speaking on a radio network could be tuned in by many assembled Labor Day groups all over the country; therefore be it

Resolved, That the Sixty-fourth annual convention of the American Federation of Labor assembled in the City of New Orleans, Louisiana, November 20, 1944, go on record in favor of establishing a procedure of Labor Day radio broadcasts on a sectional or nation-wide basis at convenient hours of the day so that Labor Day assemblages throughout the country could tune in to listen to prominent speakers of the American Federation of Labor.

Your committee is in accord with the purpose to secure the widest possible use of the radio in connection with its activities. Your committee calls attention to the widespread use which has already been made of the radio by the American Federation of Labor and by the officers of the affiliated International Unions and the Departments of the A. F. of L. It believes that still further use should be made of the radio, not only on Labor Day, but throughout the year. With this comment your committee believes no further action on the resolution is necessary.

Radio Advertising—(1933, pp. 111, 452) The 1932 convention referred resolution No. 53 for investigation. It provided for an investigation of radio advertising and if possible to a secure legislation prohibiting the long advertising lectures and speeches over the radio of the country.

A thorough investigation of this subject has been made. In the first place, the most persistent advertisers over the radio are the largest advertisers in the newspapers and magazines. These include automobiles, cigars and cigarettes, tooth paste, ginger ale and many other articles.

The advertising broadcasts are necessarily accompanied by music. Actors and actresses furnish a program. Should advertising be eliminated or restricted to an extent that it would not be practical thousands of musicians, actors, and other employees would be thrown out of employment. If radio advertising was prohibited it would be necessary for the broadcasting stations to secure funds from some other source to carry on their broadcasts. In some countries where the broadcasting stations are controlled by the government a tax is placed upon receiving sets. Naturally, that would be the main source of revenue that would have to be raised in the U. S. if advertising was prohibited or restricted.

There are 12,000 full-time employees of the broadcasting stations of the U.S. This does not include the thousands of artists and musicians employed by program sponsors and by the networks. The annual payroll is approximately $23,000,000. It is doubtful if radio advertisers have materially decreased newspaper or magazine advertising. It is true that many newspaper publishers in asking for reductions in wages use this as an argument.

New inventions cause many changes in old established industries. This, of course, raises objections from those displaced. But were it not for the telephones, graphophones, electricity, automobiles and radios there would be many more idle in the U.S.

Progress cannot be stopped. Inventions will continue in greater number than before. Labor's solution of this problem is reducing the hours in the workday and workweek at adequate wages. There is no other remedy and Labor uses every effort to organize the wage earners in order that they can secure a comfortable living and more leisure. If the five-day week and six-hour day were in effect there would not be as many idle workers in the United States.

Raiding (also see: Unity in the Labor Movement—Internal Disputes Plan, Labor Unity Efforts (1942)

C.I.O. (1941, pp. 254, 627) The E.C. reported on the increase in raiding on the part of C.I.O. and included the following statement:

When the first step was taken to form the C.I.O., its leaders and sponsors proclaimed that the C.I.O. was launched for the purpose of organizing the workers in the mass-production and unorganized industries of the nation. Many of its leaders protested vehemently when they were charged with launching a dual movement for the purpose of raiding already established American Federation of Labor unions. Neither the facts nor the record made bear out the original declaration of the C.I.O. or the protests herein referred to as being made by its leaders. Instead, the C.I.O. has raided local unions established by national and international unions chartered by the American Federation of Labor in the building and construction trades, metal trades, and other fields. It has raided organizations directly chartered by the American Federation of Labor in miscellaneous industries. In its efforts to raid bona fide American Federation of Labor unions it has, through its representatives, pleaded with employers to recognize and employ members of the C.I.O. instead of the American Federation of Labor, and at a much lower rate of pay than was provided for in agreements negotiated between employers and American Federation of Labor unions. Such action is reprehensible, infamous, and violative of all the principles of the organized labor movement. It is bad enough when C.I.O. representatives raid bona fide American Federation of Labor unions, but it is infinitely worse when said representatives offer to supply

C.I.O. workers to employers at a lower rate of pay than American Federation of Labor members are receiving, in order to wipe out and destroy American Federation of Labor unions which have been firmly established as functioning, collective bargaining units for many years.

The American Federation of Labor is certain that the workers of the nation will refuse to approve, countenance or support the raiding policy of the dual movement and its offer to employers to supply men at a lower rate of pay than American Federation of Labor members are receiving if the employer will only discharge American Federation of Labor workers and employ C.I.O. members. . . .

The convention approved a resolution authorizing the A. F. of L. to institute a campaign of resistance to the union-raiding tactics of the C.I.O. by giving immediate assistance to any locality or organization that is subject of such an attack and that all state and city central bodies of the A. F. of L. should have standing committees for this purpose, and put forth a concerted drive to combat this situation wherever and whenever it appears.

The following statement was also unanimously adopted:

. . . it is unnecessary to do more than express profound regret that there should exist a dual organization to the A. F. of L. in this period of national emergency. There never has been a period when it was more essential that organized labor should be a united body, and the unjustified division which exists has unquestionably lowered the contribution which organized labor would otherwise have been giving to the nation

It is inescapable that when the present crisis has been past, that this division in the ranks of labor will even more acutely disturb and dislocate the relationships between management and labor. Because we must take the post-war period into consideration, it is encouraging to find that the officers of the American Federation of Labor are continuing their policy of an open door, and their effort to reestablish a unification of the American trade union movement.

It is only necessary to remind the convention of the public statements made by the master spirit of the C.I.O. to indicate the outstanding reason why unity has not been previously established.

Because of the constant efforts made by the C.I.O. to raid our unions and their membership, and to set up dual International Unions to those within the fold of the American Federation of Labor, it is essential that our trade union movement protect itself against the efforts to destroy it; efforts which, unfortunately, in many instances have received the encouragement and assistance of individuals holding public office. As to the question of maintaining what we have and of increasing our membership, the helpful influence of our International Unions affects the membership locally as well as nationally.

The policy which has been carried out by the C. I. O. from the beginning, in many instances, is similar to that which has been applied by Adolph Hitler, promises and pledges to be broken when it seems advantageous. First, we were assured that the sole purpose of the C.I.O. was to carry on an educational campaign. We were then assured in an official statement issued by the head of the C.I.O. that in such organizing work as it would carry on, it would be confined solely to the field of the unorganized.

Hardly had this statement been made than the first organizing efforts made by the C.I.O. were raids upon the membership of existing International Unions, in many instances an effort to secure control of trade unions at that time under trade union agreements with their employers. The similarity to Hitler's tactics does not end here, but the carefully planned program of the leaders of the C.I.O. led to campaigns first against one International Union, and then against another.

Had the original raiding policy been carried out generally against all of our affiliated International Unions, they would have united in developing a program of self-defense. But by making an effort first in one industry and then in another, they had hoped to create a feeling of security in the minds of other International Unions. First they directed their campaign against the metal trades. Then in turn they entered the field of the building trades, and recently directed their efforts against the transportation trades.

There is but one way to meet these tactics, and that is for the American Federation of Labor itself and its affiliated International Unions to give their collective support to every local union in the small communities as well as those in the industrial centers, so that the present effort to supplant the American trade union movement and establish this alleged "new order" can be overtime.

While your committee calls upon the affiliated International Unions to merge their forces for self-defense because of the attacks made upon us, your committee nevertheless urges the officers of the American Federation of Labor to continue their efforts to re-establish unity in the family of labor.

Railroad Consolidation—(1936, pp. 135, 465) While Congress was considering a bill to protect railroad employees in the plan to consolidate railroads, an agreement was reached between employees' organizations and railroad officials that would solve the problem. During the past sixteen years the number of railroad employees has decreased about 50 per cent. Merging of certain railroads would add to the number of railroad workers unemployed. The consolidations would cause the removal of division points or their abandonment. These division points have been in existence for many years. Railroad workers have bought homes and established themselves permanently in them. The terrible suffering that would come from abolishing these division points had aroused the railroad workers and they had a measure introduced in Congress known as the Wheeler-Crosser bill. The bill provided that if the number of employees previously required be reduced as a result of the consolidation, provisions should be made to provide for those displaced in comparable employment, under no less favorable conditions of employment, or to provide a fair and just dismissal compensation which shall equal at least two-thirds of the earnings to be anticipated for one year of continued service until they were reemployed. For those eligible for retirement an adequate pension was to be provided.

Railroad Employees (Legis. control over negotiations) (1941, p. 403)

The convention considered the annual report of the Railroad Employees Department and adopted the following as part of the convention committee report:

The wages of railroad workers must now be raised to enable the men, in the face of the terrific rise in cost of living, to maintain the former purchasing power of their wages. The study shows that the rapidly rising profits of the roads fully justifies the demands of the workers.

The Executive Council therefore recommended that the American Federation of Labor give full support to the demand of the railroad workers for an immediate increase in pay.

Your Committee concurs in this recommendation and urges active support thereof.

Your committee would further submit to your consideration the fact that the machinery for the settlement of disputes in the railroad industry serves well in that industry because (1) the workers are well organized, (2) the organized workers are in a position to determine the qualifications of the workers themselves for the various jobs, and (3) the workers of this industry have a long record of successful experience in working through a medium of legislative control—a medium which the workers themselves conceived and developed as being peculiarly fitted to their definite problems in their particular industry.

Your Committee would point out that this machinery serving well for this highly organized industry would not serve in other industries less organized and engaged in other forms of production.

Railroad Labor and the War (1942, p. 262)

At the conclusion of its annual report to the A. F. of L. convention, the Railway Employees Department made the following statement with regard to the important role which railroad workers made in the nation's war effort:

As has been already indicated, the railroad industry is doing a magnificent job in furnishing transportation service to the nation. In addition to caring for the domestic needs of the civilian population, this industry has been the life-blood of our war production, which has assumed such vast importance in modern warfare that victory depends on it. Moreover, the railroad industry has worked hand in hand with the armed forces, moving tremendous quantities of supplies and large numbers of men under the most trying circumstances. This is all the more remarkable when it is realized that the railroads have been required to carry the added burden brought about by the shortage of ships carrying intercoastal traffic and the shortage of rubber, which is diverting traffic from the highways.

Much has been said of the part railroad management has played in this achievement, but while their contribution is important and should be recognized, it should not be forgotten that without the skill, experience and cooperation of the railroad workers, it would not have been possible to "Keep 'em Rolling" to the extent necessary to meet all traffic requirements.

Railroad labor has contributed generously to this result. The mere fact that the railroad industry has only service to sell indicates clearly that such service is dependent primarily on the labor of railroad workers. Without in any way detracting from the excellent job railroad management is doing, the manner in which the railroad industry is meeting its responsibility of furnishing adequate transportation to the nation certainly speaks well for the good job railroad workers are doing. In other words, railroad workers are fully meeting their responsibility to the war effort.

In this connection it should be pointed out that, in addition to its responsibility to the public, railroad management also has a definite responsibility to its employees. During the last war, failure of the railroads to meet that responsibility to their employees resulted in lowered morale, and this was given as one of the reasons why our transportation system broke down, making it necessary for the Federal Government to take over the railroads. It is hoped, therefore, that railroad management will do everything possible to maintain high morale in the railroad industry to the end that adequate and efficient transportation service may continue to be provided.

Railroad Labor Legislation (1924, p. 51) Successive conventions of the A. F. of L. have unsparingly condemned the U.S. Railroad Labor Board created by the Esch-Cummins Act. Each year the conduct of the Board and the operation of this law has amply justified each condemnation. During the past year the Labor Board has continued to increase irritation and discord in the human relations on the railroads and has continued its policy of violating all the traditions of the industry, of bona fide trade unionism and of American citizenship.

The labor organizations on the railroads, confronted with this intolerable situation, after mature consideration and study of the problem, through their recognized leaders and in cooperation with the A. F. of L., drafted a bill to abolish the Labor Board and the section of the statute under which it operates and to set up in its place a simple law, based upon the principles of voluntary collective bargaining and government aid in bringing about voluntary arbitration.

This Railway Labor Bill imposes a general duty upon the carriers and their employees "to exert every reasonable effort to make and maintain agreements concerning wages and working conditions." The parties to any dispute are required to confer, and the Bill specifically safeguards such conferences by prohibiting either party from attempting to influence the other in the selection of its conference representatives.

Disputes over the application of existing agreements—called grievance disputes—which cannot be settled in such conferences, must be referred to the appropriate Board of Adjustment. Four such Boards of Adjustment are set up by the Bill, each to be composed equally of employees and carrier representatives, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, from nominees submitted by the respective groups of workers, organizations and managers.

The bill prohibits changes in working conditions or wages until the machinery of the bill has been exhausted. Disputes over changes in existing agreements or the establishment of new rates of pay or working conditions, which cannot be adjusted in conference, are not referred to the Boards of Adjustment. Such undecided disputes, together with any grievance disputes which cannot be decided by the proper Board of Adjustment, are to be settled through a Board of Mediation and Conciliation, composed of five impartial experts, appointed by the President and approved by the Senate. The aid of this Board may be invoked "by either party, or it may proffer its services on its own motion." If mediation proves unsuccessful, then the Board of Mediation and Conciliation must urge the parties to submit their differences to arbitration. The bill provides specifically that arbitration is to be purely voluntary. The Board of Arbitration is to be composed of individuals selected by the parties, the neutral arbitrator to be selected by agreement of the parties or by the Board of Mediation. If voluntary arbitration is agreed to, the parties likewise agree to accept the award of such a Board of Arbitration and this contract and the resulting award may be enforced in the courts.

Before the introduction of this bill, numerous conferences were held between the railroad labor organization executives and their counsel, and with the president of the A. F. of L. and other representatives of the A. F. of L. The officers of the railway organizations, including the Railroad Brotherhoods and the Railway Employees Department of the A. F. of L., before finally deciding upon the draft of the bill to be introduced in Congress, were solicitous of securing the judgment of the E.C. of the A. F. of L. with such suggestions as the E.C. might make in reference to it, and to secure our endorsement of the measure.

The bill was considered at length and in every detail by us, and after a lengthy discussion the bill was not only endorsed but cooperation pledged in every honorable effort to secure its enactment by Congress. Conferences were also held with the Secretary of Commerce, and an effort was made but without success to obtain the co-operation of the railroad executives, in the preparation of just and adequate legislation.

On February 28, 1924, the Railway Labor Bill was introduced into the Senate (as S. 2646).

In the Senate the bill was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, and a special subcommittee was promptly appointed to hold hearings on the bill. The House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, dominated by reactionaries, granted no hearing, and it was made plain that it was their purpose to smother the bill by failing to report it out of committee.

On March 18, 1924, hearings on the bill were begun before the Senate subcommittee. The case for the bill was thoroughly presented by the president of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen and chairman of the Chief Executives Special Committee, and the counsel for the railway labor organizations and representatives of the A. F. of L. The carriers opposed the bill, and a large number of railroad executives and general counsel swarmed to Washington in an effort to prevent its passage. No report was made until May 19, when the bill was favorably reported with amendments to the full Committee on Interstate Commerce. The committee favorably reported the bill, with amendments, all of which with but one exception improved the bill. This report was presented to the Senate on June 6, too late for passage at the first session of Congress which adjourned June 7.

In order to get the bill out of the House committee and on the floor of the House for consideration, its friends took advantage of the new "Committee Discharge Rule." The petition filed under this rule was quickly signed by over 150 members of the House, and on May 5, the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce was discharged from further consideration of the bill. The opposition, led by the floor leader, then began a desperate parliamentary struggle to prevent a direct vote on the measures. These dilatory tactics were repeated each time the bill came up for consideration—on May 5, May 19, and June 2.

During this battle in the House, representatives of the A. F. of L. and of 20 organizations of railway and marine workers carried on a splendid campaign of education of members of both Houses winning increasing support of the bill. Other legislation favorable to the public interest was awaiting the consideration of the House, and rather than prevent its enactment by fighting out the filibuster with the opponents of the bill, the friends of the bill in the last week of Congress turned their attention to farm relief and other similar measures, and agreed to postpone a finished fight on the Howell-Barkley Bill until the session of Congress which convenes December 1, 1924. Under the House rules the bill has special privilege over all other bills on the calendar on the first and third Mondays of each month until passed. The bill also is in a favorable position for consideration by the Senate. The fact that the Progressives have demonstrated a majority power in the Senate and that in the House on 24 roll calls the proponents of the bill never fell below a majority, seems to assure the enactment of the Howell-Barkley Bill into law during the December session, upon a renewal of the vigorous fight made at the last session.

In order to prevent a real understanding of the bill and thus prevent its passage, the railroads have resorted to an extraordinary campaign of misrepresentation, and for furthering this an organization called the "American Economic Institute," has been established by the railroads since the adjournment of Congress in June.

It is the intent and purpose of all of the forces of organized labor and of all friends desirous of maintaining the freedom of the workers and of promoting industrial peace, to carry on this fight insistently and vigorously for the abolition of the Railway Labor Board, and the enactment of the Howell-Barkley Bill.

(1925, p. 67) The report of last year described the efforts made by the railroad labor organizations supported by the A. F. of L. to abolish the Railroad Labor Board and to enact the Howell-Barkley Bill, to provide for settling railroad labor relations through conference agreements, board of adjustment decisions of grievances, government mediation, and voluntary arbitration when necessary. The Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce reported the bill by a vote of 9 to 3 to the first session of the Sixty-eighth Congress. Its supporters had brought it on the floor of the House through the committee discharge rule and supported the bill during the ensuing filibuster of its opponents by a majority of over 20 roll calls. Such was the situation when Congress adjourned June 7, 1924.

Although there were pronouncements in three political party platforms upon which the three principal candidates sought public support in the presidential election of 1924 favoring the principle of voluntary adjustment of personnel relations of railroads, the Howell-Barkley Bill was not enacted by the Second Session of the Sixty-eighth Congress. There was no action on the Howell-Barkley Bill nor amendment of existing law. This inaction occurred despite the recommendation of the President for the amendment of the labor section of the Transportation Act.

Since the close of the Sixty-eighth Congress without action upon the Howell-Barkley Bill, various efforts have been made to bring about cooperation between those supporting the bill and public officials representing the administration, to agree upon a redraft of the Howell-Barkley Bill embodying such suggestions or amendments as have been offered and appear acceptable to the proponents of the bill. Certain efforts have also been made to bring about some cooperation between the organizations and the railroad executives looking toward the same end, but there have been no substantial developments. In view of the various efforts which have been made and given some publicity, we want to make it plain that the organizations supporting the Howell-Barkley Bill have given no consideration to any suggestions for a substantial change in the principles underlying the bill or the machinery proposed to translate those principles into legislative and administrative action. It is the purpose of the railroad unions that the Howell-Barkley Bill substantially in its present form (as modified by some acceptable amendments made in the Senate) will be offered for consideration in the Sixty-ninth Congress when it assembles.

(P. 68) Experience in the last year with the Railroad Labor Board has served to emphasize the futile and mischievous character of that body and further to justify the condemnation of the Transportation Act and of its creation—the Railroad Labor Board—which has been repeatedly voiced by the A. F. of L. The following cases are of interest:

In the spring of 1924 a committee of locomotive engineers and firemen representing their respective organizations on practically all the western railways met with a conference committee of managers in an attempt to negotiate a settlement of the employes' request for application of the New York Central wage increases to the western roads, these increases then being in effect on practically all the eastern roads. This group negotiation was terminated by the conference committee of managers in May, 1924, whereupon the committee of employees endeavored to open negotiations with the separate carriers. The railways attempted to prevent individual carrier negotiation by bringing the matter to the Railroad Labor Board which thereupon attempted to assume jurisdiction of its own motion, although there was no controversy which would justify their action. To maintain their liberty of contract and to prevent the Railroad Labor Board from acting unlawfully in aid of the program of the railway managers to delay and hamper negotiations, the representatives of the employees refused to appear and testify before the board. The board then began two test cases to compel the union officials to appear and testify. Upon petition of the board, Judge Wilkerson, sitting in Chicago, summoned the president of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, a resident of Cleveland, to appear before the court and when he denied the jurisdiction of the court in Chicago to entertain suit against him, a resident of Cleveland, Judge Wilkerson entered an order overruling his objections and commanding him to appear before the labor board and testify.

He appealed to the Supreme Court of the U.S., where the case was argued on March 17, 1925, by the General Counsel for the Railway Department of the A. F. of L. and of the unions involved, and on June 8, 1924, the court handed down the unanimous opinion reversing Judge Wilkerson and holding that the board could not compel a witness to testify before it by action in the District Court sitting in Chicago.

The board also filed a petition with Judge Wilkerson for an order on the local chairman for the engineers to appear before him. Being a resident of Chicago, the sole question in his case was as to the power of the labor board to compel testimony. It was the contention of his counsel that testimony could not be compelled before a board whose functions are wholly advisory without depriving the witness of liberty and property without due process of law. Judge Wilkerson overruled these objections and ordered him to appear. His case has also been appealed and is pending in the Supreme Court of the U.S.

While this litigation was in progress, the board heard evidence from the railways alone and in the fall handed down a decision ordering the New York Central increases to be put in effect on the western roads but with such modifications of the rules as would deprive the men of all benefit from the ruling. Meanwhile the engineers' and firemen's organizations took a strike vote on the Southern Pacific lines. After the organizations were supported by an overwhelming vote in favor of a strike a conference was arranged and a settlement agreed upon with the Southern Pacific lines which was satisfactory to the organizations. This settlement included the granting of the New York Central increases without the detrimental changes in rules sought by the railroads. Following this settlement, road after road made similar terms with the organizations until the western wage movement finally culminated in the application of the New York Central increase to the entire West. In this wage movement, it will be noted that the Railroad Labor Board occupied an obstructive position entirely favorable to the desires of the railroads and hampered and delayed the employees in their efforts, but in the end the decision of the board was disregarded by both railroads and employees. The board was defeated in its efforts to bring the courts to its aid and once more demonstrated that it is worse than useless as an agency to promote peace and provide justice to railroad employees. It is of special significance to note that in the brief filed in behalf of the board by the U.S. attorney and special assistants to the Attorney General, the position is taken that the public members of the board were not supposed to be neutral and that the chairman of the board, whose bias was made clearly evident, was not disqualified because of his lack of impartiality. Government counsel made the assertion, "He is not supposed to be any more neutral than are members of the labor and management groups." Thus, the fiction of "impartial arbitration" was exploded in the very house of its friends.

The Pennsylvania Railroad has successfully challenged the authority of the Railroad Labor Board. When the telegraphers of the Pennsylvania Railroad voted by 4256 to 318 for members of their national union to act as committeemen under the Pennsylvania Railroad's own company union plan, the railroad then discharged every committeeman who would not renounce his obligation to his organization. Although the Railroad Labor Board has fulminated against this indefensible action, the railroad has not changed its policy.

The shopmen's union also brought suit against the Pennsylvania Railroad to compel conferences in accordance with the apparent mandate of the Transportation Act. This case reached the Supreme Court, together with a similar case that was brought by the clerks, early in the present year and in March the court handed down an opinion to the effect that there was nothing compulsory in the Transportation Act, that railroads did not have to obey the Act if they did not want to, that they were not required to hold conferences with their employees either by the Act or by orders of the Railroad Labor Board. Thus again, the Transportation Act has been shown to be a useless piece of legislation for the promotion of industrial peace on the railroads.

Another instance of disregarded orders of the Railroad Labor Board is the case of the Chicago and Alton. The shopmen of this road practically unanimously designated their national unions to represent them. The receivers acting under the authority of Judge Carpenter of the Federal District Court in Chicago refused to receive these representatives in conference. In the latter part of 1924 the employees presented a petition to the court asking that he order the receivers to comply with the express directions of Congress. This matter is still pending before Judge Carpenter.

(P. 354) Criticisms made by the A. F. of L. with regard to the Railroad Labor Board have been thoroughly justified by the experiences of the last year. The western engineers and firemen found it more convenient to exercise their economic power instead of following the tortuous and never-satisfactory course of appealing to the Railway Labor Board. By doing so, they were enabled to secure increases in wages without delay, while the labor board was defeated in its appeal to the courts to give it jurisdiction over railway organizations that were unwilling to submit their interests to its decision.

(1926, p. 64) Since the report of last year, the efforts of the railroad labor organizations, supported by the A. F. of L. to abolish the Railroad Labor Board and to secure legislation providing for the settlement of railroad labor disputes through conference, adjustment, mediation and voluntary arbitration have been successful. The present Railway Labor Act accomplishes these purposes.

This measure received the support before the congressional committees of a large majority of the railroads, but a minority of the carriers opposed it with increasing vigor as the prospect of its passage increased. The principal opposition to the bill came from the National Association of Manufacturers and allied or sympathetic business interests. Regardless of the form which their opposition took, which was in the nature of destructive amendments, it was clear that the real basis for opposition lay in the antagonism of these groups to the encouragement of collective bargaining and the self-organization of the workers. All the standard railway labor organizations supported the bill, being assisted effectively and actively by the A. F. of L.

The "Railway Labor Act" is the official title of the law, which was known as the Watson-Parker Bill. The following summary of the bill was issued as a joint statement of counsel representing the railway executives and the railway labor organizations and therefore may be regarded as an impartial brief explanation of its provisions.

First: That it shall be the duty of the parties to exert every reasonable effort to make and maintain agreements.

Second: Any and all disputes shall be first considered in conference between the parties directly interested.

Third: Adjustment boards shall be established by agreement, which shall be either between an individual carrier and its employees, or regional, or national. These adjustment boards will have jurisdiction over any disputes relating to grievances or to the interpretation or application of existing agreements, but will have no jurisdiction over changes in rates of pay, rules or working conditions. It is, however, provided that nothing in the Act shall be construed to prohibit an individual carrier and its employees from agreeing upon settlement of disputes through such machinery of contract and adjustment as they may mutually establish.

Fourth: A Board of Mediation is created, to consist of five members appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, with the duty to intervene, at the request of either party, or on its own motion, in any unsettled labor dispute—whether it be a grievance or a difference as to the interpretation or application of agreements not decided in conference or by the appropriate adjustment board, or a dispute over changes in rates of pay, rules or working conditions not adjusted in conference between the parties. If it is unable to bring about an amicable adjustment between the parties it is required to make an effort to induce them to consent to arbitration.

Fifth: Boards of Arbitration are provided for, when both parties consent to arbitrate, also the method of selecting members of the boards and the arbitration procedure. Any award made by the arbitrators shall be filed in the appropriate district court of the United States and shall become a judgment of the court, binding upon the parties.

Sixth: In the possible event that a dispute between a carrier and its employees is not settled by any of the foregoing methods, provision is made that the Board of Mediation, if in its judgment the dispute threatens to substantially interrupt interstate commerce, shall notify the President, who is thereupon authorized, in his discretion, to create a board to investigate and report to the President within thirty days from the date of the creation of the board. It is also provided that after the creation of such a board and for thirty days after it has made its report to the President, no change, except by agreement, shall be made by the parties to the controversy in the conditions out of which the dispute arose.

The Railway Labor Act may not fulfill all the hopes of its sponsors, but undoubtedly its passage marks a great step forward in legislation regarding industrial relations. The Act is based on the theory of contract—on the belief that human relations are best regulated by free contract and that the force of government should be exerted primarily not to compel men to do what they do not wish to do, but to compel them to fulfill the obligations which they have accepted voluntarily. The second section of the Act makes it the duty of employers and employes "to exert every reasonable effort to make and maintain agreements." It makes it their duty to confer in cases of disagreement. It provides that representatives of the parties shall be chosen "without interference, influence or coercion, exercised by either party over the self-organization or designation of representative by the other." If, in accordance with the terms and the spirit of this Act, a fair and full opportunity is provided for the making and maintaining of agreements, a great improvement in industrial relations in the transportation industry should result with inevitable benefit to all parties concerned, employers, employes and the public.

(1930, pp. 116, 338) The decision of the Interstate Commerce Commission on the proposed merger of the Northern Pacific and the Great Northern, in which members of the commission conspicuous in their efforts to protect public interest dissented, puts squarely up to Congress the issue of defining public policy.

The policies proposed through this merger meant contraction of service, serious loss to many communities and shippers, loss of jobs and transfers of employees without compensation for loss of homes and other investments.

Discussion made plain the ruthless purposes which the merger would serve in order to take care of financial interests through reduction of expenses and inflation of values. As railroads represent an investment by the public and by employers who give their services and organize their living around their work, Labor believes that social considerations are equally as important as financial and that there should be balanced consideration given to all elements involved.

The movement for consolidation and unification was a natural response to the development of competing types of carriers and need for economies. Development of business activity had not always followed lines anticipated by railroad construction. A number of railroad short lines after having served very necessary purposes had become a serious liability to their owners. However, it seems probable to some railroad experts that much of the agitation for consolidation has been artificially stimulated by financiers who saw a way of retrieving losses and possibly making good profits.

Proposals for consolidation and unification must by law be submitted to the Interstate Commerce Commission for approval. However, the railroads found in the new holding company organization a way to effect practical consolidation without going through the legal forms over which the Interstate Commerce Commission had control. Congress thus defied by the financiers and the railroads began an investigation into the holding companies. While the House Committee was holding hearings Senator Couzens introduced a joint resolution to stop all rail mergers.

After extended hearings and in view of facts presented by witnesses for the public, Labor, and railway executives, the resolution was amended to suspend the power of the Interstate Commerce Commission to approve or authorize consolidations or acquisitions of control except in conformity with prescribed conditions to protect the interests of Labor and the public.

Many proposed efficiencies and economies resulting from consolidations and unifications are at Labor's expense. As the president of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad told the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce: "It ought to be borne in mind that the savings which will come from consolidation are chiefly from two causes: one, probably from the reduced necessity for new capital." . . . "The other economies which can be lumped in one item, are labor and material, less of both being needed, probably—particularly labor. In fact, the only way economies can be made to any extent in railroad service is by the use of fewer employees, and with that would always go the use of some less labor. Our figures show that the wages paid for labor constitute about 60 per cent of our total operating expenses, and material about 40 per cent. It is safe to say that of that material probably 50 per cent represents wages paid to labor, so that when a railroad reduces its operating expenses by a dollar, it is a safe thought that 80 per cent of that represents less wages being paid to somebody." . . . "We must recognize that in accomplishing these economies that seem to have been thought desirable in the public interest, they will be brought about largely by the employment of fewer men, and that certainly does present a problem in which the men have a right to be concerned. As has been stated, I have expressed my views on that on different occasions and I have said that I thought it would only be fair and right if Congress, in legislating on this whole matter, pursued action somewhat similar to that taken by the English Parliament in connection with their Amalgamation Act. In that Act, in round terms, it was provided that men who had been in the employ of the company for five years should not be displaced, and should not be reduced in rank or in compensation, and they should be worked around in such a way as might be until they should be taken care of."

Railroad unions recognizing the need for consolidation and unification, believe that Congress should enact additional substantive legislation defining policies for the guidance of the Interstate Commerce Commission so that the interests of the public and Labor should be conserved and giving the Interstate Commerce Commission control over all consolidations including the formation of holding companies to achieve that purpose.

The Railroad Labor Executives Association maintains that consolidations should be approved only when the findings of the Commission indicate that "it will (a) promote better service to the public, or (b) economy in operation without deteriorating essential service and (c) that it will not substantially restrain or lessen competition and (d) that it will not be inconsistent with the public interest in any material respect."

(1934, pp. 77, 546) The Railway Labor Act was re-written by the last Congress. Under the new National Board of Mediation this measure is more far-reaching. A national Railroad Adjustment Board was also created to consist of 36 members, 18 of whom shall be selected by the carriers and 18 by such labor organizations of the employees, national in scope, which have been or may be organized in accordance with the provisions of the Act. One important clause in the Act is as follows:

Employees shall have the right to organize and bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing. The majority of any craft or class of employees shall have the right to determine who shall be the representatives of the craft or class for the purposes of this Act. No carrier, its officers or agents, shall deny or in any way question the right of its employees to join, organize, or assist in organizing the labor organization of their choice, and it shall be unlawful for any carrier to interfere in any way with the organization of its employees, or to use the funds of the carrier in maintaining or assisting or contributing to any labor organization, labor representative, or other agency of collective bargaining, or in performing any work therefor, or to influence or coerce employees in an effort to induce them to join or remain or not to join or remain members of any labor organization, or to deduct from the wages of employees any dues, fees, assessments, or other contributions payable to labor organizations, or to collect or to assist in the collection of any such dues, fees, assessments, or other contributions.

The law also outlaws "yellow-dog" contracts. It provides that no carrier, its officers, or agents shall require any person seeking employment to sign any contract or agreement promising to join or not to join a labor organization. If any such contract was in existence prior to the date the law became effective, then the carrier is required to notify the employees that the contract is no longer binding on them in any way.

All labor disputes are to be referred to a National Board of Mediation which will endeavor to bring about adjustment. The purposes of the Act are to avoid any interruption to commerce; to provide for the complete independence of carriers and of employees in the matter of self-organization to carry out the purpose of the Act; to provide for the prompt and orderly settlement of all disputes concerning rates of pay, rules, or working conditions. The law became effective June 21, 1934.

Immediately after approval of the Act the President appointed members of the Board. The first act of the Board was to issue what the railroad employees designate as their "Magna Charta." It is known as Order No. 1 and every railroad must post a copy on every bulletin board and keep them posted so long as the law is on the statute books. Order No. 1 is as follows:

Pursuant to the provisions of Section 2, Eighth, Railway Labor Act, as amended (approved June 21, 1934), you are hereby advised that all disputes between (insert name of posting carrier here) and its employees will be handled in accordance with the requirements of the Railway Labor Act.

The following provisions of paragraphs Third, Fourth, and Fifth, Section 2, Railway Labor Act, are by law made a part of each contract of employment between this carrier and each of its employees, and shall be held binding regardless of any express or implied agreements to the contrary.

Section 2, Third. Representatives, for the purposes of this act, shall be designated by the respective parties without interference, influence, or coercion by either party over the designation of representatives by the other; and neither party shall in any way interfere with, influence, or coerce the other in its choice of representatives. Representatives of employees for the purposes of this Act need not be persons in the employ of the carrier, and no carrier shall, by interference, influence, or coercion seek in any manner to prevent the designation by its employees as their representatives of those who or which are not employees of the carrier.

Section 2, Fourth. Employees shall have the right to organize and bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing. The majority of any craft or class of employees shall have the right to determine who shall be the representatives of the craft or class for the purposes of this Act.

No carrier, its officers or agents, shall deny or in any way question the right of its employees to join, organize, or assist in organizing the labor organization of their choice, and it shall be unlawful for any carrier to interfere in any way with the organization of its employees, or to use the funds of the carrier in maintaining or assisting or contributing to any labor organization, labor representative, or other agency of collective bargaining, or in performing any work therefor, or to influence or coerce employees in an effort to induce them to join or remain or not to join or remain members of any labor organization, or to deduct from the wages of employes any dues, fees, assessments, or other contributions payable to labor organizations, or to collect or to assist in the collection of any such dues, fees, assessments, or other contributions:

Provided, That nothing in this Act shall be construed to prohibit a carrier from permitting an employe, individually, or local representatives of employes from conferring with management during working hours without loss of time, or to prohibit a carrier from furnishing free transportation to its employes while engaged in the business of a labor organization.

Section 2, Fifth. No carrier, its officers or agents shall require any person seeking employment to sign any contract or agreement promising to join or not to join a labor organization; and if any such contract has been enforced prior to the effective date of this Act, then such carrier shall notify the employes by an appropriate order that such contract has been discarded and is no longer binding on them in any way.

All officers of this carrier whose duties are affected by the foregoing are advised to take notice of and to comply with the provisions thereof.

(P. 162) During the past year the Railway Labor Executives Association, of which the organizations affiliated with the Railway Employees' Department of the A. F. of L. are members, was unusually active in the matter of legislation affecting railroad workers. The following matters, which constituted the legislative program of the Association, were introduced as bills early in the 2d Session of the 73d Congress: 1. Amendments to the Railway Labor Act, providing for right to organize, prohibition of company unions, establishment of National Boards of Adjustment for the consideration of grievances. 2. Six-hour day without reduction in compensation. 3. Hours of Service Act, from 16 to 12 hours. 4. Amending Federal Employers' Liability Act. 5. Retirement insurance. 6. Limit on length of trains to $\frac{1}{2}$ mile or not more than 70 cars. 7. Full crew.

In addition a flagging bill sponsored by the Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way Employees and a signal inspection bill sponsored by the Brotherhood of Railroad Signalmen of America were endorsed by the Railway Labor Executives' Association and introduced in this session of Congress.

Of the nine bills introduced, four received no consideration; these were the amendments to the Federal Employers' Liability Act, the full crew bill, the Hours of Service Act and the Signal Inspection Bill. Hearings were held on the flagging bill by the Senate Committee on Foreign and Interstate Commerce, while the six-hour day bill and the train limit bill were considered by both the Senate and House Committees on Foreign and Interstate Commerce. The amendments to the Railway Labor Act and the Retirement Insurance Bill were enacted into law.

It is interesting to observe that in addition to being the only labor legislation enacted in the last session of Congress, the Railway Labor Act as amended and the Retirement Insurance Act are unique in that the former embodies the most progressive thought with respect to the right of workers to organize and the method of settling disputes, while the latter is the first national industrial retirement insurance bill ever enacted. Both are a distinct contribution to our industrial legislation, and point the way for the employees in all of industry.

(1938, pp. 167, 551) While the unemployment insurance law was approved by the President June 25, 1938, it does not become effective until July 1, 1939.

The law provides that a qualified employee should be paid benefits for each day of unemployment in excess of seven during any half month. The benefits payable to any such employee for each such day ranges from $1.75 to $3.00 per day, according to the wages he received.

The employer contributes 3 per cent of the amount of wages paid to the employees not in excess of $300 for any calendar month and the employee contributes 3 per cent of his wages not in excess of $300 per month. The contributions are paid to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall maintain an account to be known as the "Railroad Unemployment Insurance Account." The law is administered by the Railroad Retirement Administration.

(1936, p. 112) The Federated Mechanical Trades have become involved in several suits involving the constitutionality of the Railway Labor Act as amended, growing out of efforts to establish representation under the law. Most of these suits have been instituted by company unions in a desperate but futile effort to postpone their demise, while in other instances it has been necessary for the Railway Employees' Department to secure compliance with the Railway Labor Act through court action in cases where carriers have refused to recognize and deal with the organizations certified by the National Mediation Board, and with respect to the latter particularly, some important victories have been won.

On the Rock Island Railroad, the company union brought two suits in the U.S. District Court for the District of Kansas, one attacking the constitutionality of the Railway Labor Act with respect to the provision prohibiting the check-off, and the other to prevent enforcement of the certification of the National Mediation Board designating the International Brotherhood of Firemen and Oilers as the duly elected representative of the power plant employees and shop laborers. Temporary injunctions were granted in both instances. While no action has as yet been forthcoming with respect to the representation case of the Firemen and Oilers, Judge D. J. Hopkins, on March 27, 1936, rendered a decision in the check-off case in which he upheld the constitutionality of the Railway Labor Act and dismissed the company union's bill of complaint, but granted them ninety days in which to perfect an appeal to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals.

Unfortunately, these cases have been subjected to numerous and apparently unnecessary delays. It is hoped, however, that an early disposition of them will be made.

The Atlantic Coast Line Railroad, because of its open preference for the company union, has caused considerable controversy and has greatly prolonged the effort of the Railway Employees' Department and its affiliated organizations to secure recognition and an agreement by apparently cooperating with its company union in instituting long and tedious litigation.

An election was conducted by the National Mediation Board among employees in the mechanical department following invocation of its services by the Railway Employees' Department; but, because of alleged intimidation and coercion on the part of the carrier, the observer for the Railway Employees' Department declined to sign the mediator's report of the election, and so advised the Board, asking that it withhold its certification pending an investigation.

As the result of extensive hearings, the Board on February 19, 1935, ordered that a new election be held. Before the mediators could proceed, however, the company union filed a petition in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia on March 12, 1935, praying for an injunction to restrain the Board from holding another election and to certify the representatives shown to have been elected by the mediator's report. The carrier and the Railway Employees' Department were made party defendants, and it was prayed further that the company be compelled to deal with the company union, and that the department be restrained from interfering with his relationship. In filing its answer to the bill, the company admitted the allegations contained therein, and prayed that the injunction asked for by the company union be granted.

The case was heard by Justice O. R. Luhring, who, on April 25, 1935, rendered decision which in effect maintained the status quo, pending further hearings. The order for another election could not be carried out, but the organizations were permitted to carry on their organizing activities, while the company was required to deal with the company union pending the final decision of the court.

Further hearings were finally held before Chief Justice Alfred A. Wheat to whom the case was assigned. On December 24, 1935, he handed down his opinion in which he held that an injunction should be granted restraining the National Mediation Board from "holding a new election in lieu of the election held in September, 1934," and requiring them "to issue the appropriate certificate called for as a result of the election then held."

In accordance with the order of the court, the Board of February 8, 1936, issued its certification effective September 24, 1934, designating the Atlantic Coast Line Shopmen's Association as the representative of the six mechanical crafts and the power plant employees who were voted as one group. The Railway Employees' Department was certified as the representative of the coach cleaners and shop laborers.

Having waged an aggressive organizing campaign in the meantime, the Railway Employees' Department invoked the services of the National Mediation Board of March 16, 1936, in a new representation dispute involving the six mechanical trades employees and the power plant employees, inasmuch as Justice Wheat's restraining order prohibited an election only "in lieu of the election held in September, 1934"; but, as the mediator was about to conduct an election to determine representation, the company union filed another suit and was granted a temporary injunction restraining the Board from conducting the election pending hearings.

The Railway Employees' Department also sought to negotiate a memorandum agreement taking over the existing agreements for the coach cleaners and shop laborers, but the company refused to enter into such an agreement and, instead, filed a motion to show cause why the certification of the Board for these classes of employees should not be set aside because it was alleged that neither of the contesting organizations received a majority of eligible votes. Judge Peyton Gordon of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia granted a temporary injunction on April 3, 1936.

As the result of a suit filed by the Railway Employees' Department in the District Court of the United States for the Eastern Division of Virginia, following the refusal of the Virginian Railroad Company to recognize and treat with System Federation No. 40 of the Railway Employees Department, certified by the National Mediation Board as the duly elected representative of the Mechanical Trades employees on that railroad, a decision was handed down by Judge Luther B. Way on July 24, 1935, holding that the carrier was violating the Railway Labor Act in refusing to recognize System Federation No. 40 and the right of their employees to choose representatives free of influence, coercion or intimidation. He stated that management had to confer with System Federation No. 40 and enjoined the carrier from threatening or coercing its employees, declaring that "the right of self-organization and representation in the matters of rates of pay, hours of labor and working conditions is a property right, the loss of which would result in irreparable damage to the complainants." With respect to the election conducted by the National Mediation Board, he also ruled that if a majority of the eligible voters participated in the election, a majority of those voting should decide the election, and on this basis upheld the certification of the Board for all crafts except the carmen, a majority of the eligible voters in this craft having failed to participate in the election.

The Virginian Railroad Company appealed this decision to the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, Fourth Circuit, which on June 18, 1936, rendered a unanimous opinion delivered by Judge Parker affirming the decision of the lower court.

A petition has been filed by the carrier for an appeal to the United States Supreme Court. Pending application for a writ of certiorari, the mandate of the court has been stayed for a period of sixty days.

A case very similar to the Virginian Case arose on the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis Railroad. As a result of an election, the National Mediation Board on November 22, 1935, certified the international organizations operating through the Railway Employees' Department as the representatives of the machinists, boilermakers, blacksmiths, sheet metal workers, electrical workers, the helpers and apprentices of the foregoing, power house employees and shop laborers employed by the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis Railway; but the carrier refused to recognize the certification of the Board for all crafts except the electrical workers, taking the position that the Board did not have the right to permit furloughed employees to vote and that a majority of all of the eligible voters was necessary for election. Prompted by the carriers' blunt refusal to grant recognition or to negotiate an agreement, the Railway Employees' Department filed a bill of complaint with the United States District Court for the Middle District of Tennessee, Nashville Division, on April 20, 1936, asking for an injunction to restrain the company from intimidating the employees in the matter of election of representatives and to require the carrier to deal with the representatives designated by the National Mediation Board.

On June 12, 1936, Judge John J. Gore rendered an opinion upholding the certification of the Board and granted an injunction requiring the carrier to deal with the representatives designated in the certification. He declined to issue an injunction, to prevent the carrier from intimidating or coercing the employees, however, on the grounds that there was no evidence of undue influence, etc., and, therefore, an injunction was not warranted; but he declared that if circumstances should subsequently require such an order, plaintiff could make application and it would be considered.

It is understood that the carrier will make an appeal to the Circuit Court of Appeals.

Some important principles in the Railway Labor Act are involved in these cases, and, therefore, a determined effort is being made to bring them to a successful conclusion.

Railroad Retirement Act

(1934, pp. 75, 548) S. 3231, to provide a retirement system for railroad employees, to provide unemployment relief and for other purposes, became a law. The Act establishes a retirement system and it is made the duty of all carriers and employees subject to this Act to perform and fulfill the obligations imposed thereby. The carriers affected are any express company, sleeping-car company, carrier by railroad, subject to the Interstate Commerce Act, and any company which is directly or indirectly owned or controlled by or under common control with any carrier by railroad and which operates any equipment or facilities or performs any service (other than trucking service) in connection with the transportation of passengers or property or the receipt, delivery, elevation, transfer in transit, refrigeration or icing storage, and handling of property transported by railroad, and any receiver, trustee, or other individual or body, judicial or otherwise, when in the possession of the business of any such "carrier."

Each employee having attained the age of sixty-five years, or having completed a service period of thirty years, shall be paid an annuity, to begin on a date specified in a written application, which date shall not be more than sixty days before the making of the application. No annuity shall begin less than six months after the effective date. Such annuity shall be based upon the service period of the employee and shall be the sum of the amounts determined by multiplying the number of years of service, not exceeding thirty years, by the following percentages of the monthly compensation; 2 per centum of the first \$50; $1\frac{1}{2}$ per centum of the next \$100; and 1 per centum of the compensation in excess of \$150. The "monthly compensation" shall be the average of the monthly compensation paid to the employee by the carrier, except that where applicable for service before the effective date the monthly compensation shall be the average of the monthly compensation for all pay-roll periods for which the employee has received compensation from any carrier out of eight consecutive calendar years of such services ending December 31, 1931.

While retirement is compulsory, if the carrier and the employee agree, the time for retirement can be extended yearly but not beyond the age of seventy years. The Retirement Board which was created by the law will determine the contributions to be made by the carriers and the employees. Until the Board determines on a different percentage the employees will contribute 2 per centum, to be deducted from the wages of employees and paid into the Treasury of the United States.

The Railroad Retirement Board is composed of three members appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. The law provides that one member shall be appointed from recommendations made by representatives of the employees and one member from recommendations by representatives of the carriers and the third member without recommendations of either carriers or employees.

Lee M. Eddy from St. Louis, recommended by railroad Labor, was appointed to represent the railroad organizations.

The law became effective August 1, 1934. The first pensions will be paid in January, 1935. This will permit the raising of sufficient revenue to pay the pensions necessary.

The railroad companies are protesting the constitutionality of this law and have started court proceedings to have the Act declared unconstitutional.

(1935, pp. 138, 495) Near the closing day of Congress both Houses passed the Railroad Employees Pension Bill. Employees on railroads, express companies and sleeping car companies subject to the Interstate Commerce Act are to be the beneficiaries of this law. A tax of three and one-half per cent of the pay-rolls will be paid by the railroad corporations and three and one-half per cent of wages by railroad employees. Employees are retired as follows:

When they reach the age of 65 on or after the date the bill was signed by the President regardless of their years of service; when they are 51 or more years old and have 30 years of service; when at any age they have completed 30 years of service and are retired by the carriers for mental or physical disability.

It is estimated that approximately 75,000 employees over 65 years of age were eligible for retirement when the President signed the bill. Other thousands, though not 65 years old, were eligible to retire because they had 30 or more years service. The retirement bill enacted by the 73rd Congress was declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court. The new law was redrafted in order to meet the constitutional objections raised.

We regard this measure as of tremendous importance to Labor and of great benefit to all railroad employees. We urge that the constitutionality of this Act be defended in every proper and legal way.

(1936, p. 112) As provided in the Railroad Retirement Act, approved on August 29, 1935, a special commission composed of three members of the Senate, designated by the President of the Senate, three members of the House of Representatives, designated by the Speaker of the House, and three members designated by the President of the U.S., was authorized and directed to report through the President to Congress not later than January 1, 1936 "the results of a thorough investigation of all pertinent facts relating to a retirement annuity system applicable by law to carriers by railroad," and make "recommendations for legislation, if any, as it may deem necessary to give effect to its conclusions."

On December 31, 1935, the Railroad Retirement Investigation Commission reported that owing to the lack of sufficient time it did not find it possible to make an investigation of the subjects referred to it as would enable it by January 1, 1936, to submit recommendations which would be of value to Congress, and hence the report was without recommendation.

While the Railroad Retirement Board proceeded with its task of compiling service records and otherwise preparing to grant pensions to those who were eligible and had applied, the carriers filed a bill of complaint in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, praying for an injunction against the Railroad Retirement Board, and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to prevent the enforcement of the Railroad Retirement and Tax Acts on the grounds that they were unconstitutional.

The case was heard by Justice Jennings Bailey, who on June 26, 1936, handed down his opinion which declared the Tax Act invalid but did not affect the validity of the Retirement Act, except that carriers could not be compelled to furnish the Retirement Board with service records of the employees. The decree was issued on June 30 enjoining the Treasury Department from collecting the excise tax from the carriers, and the Railroad Retirement Board from compelling the carriers to compile and furnish the service records of the employees, although it was clearly stated that the Board could compile this information from the carriers records at its own expense.

A careful study of the decision of the court revealed no legal obstacles to the payment of pensions under the Retirement Act, and after conferring with Treasury officials, the Board sent out the first pension checks on July 13, 1936, out of a fund of over forty-six million dollars appropriated by Congress and ear-marked in the Treasury for the payment of railroad pensions for a period of one year. Over a million dollars was also appropriated to care for the running expenses of the Board until July 1, 1937, thus assuring that the law will be administered until the validity of the Tax Act, which is being appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States by the government, can be determined. In the event that Justice Bailey's decision is affirmed, the government's legal advisers are of the opinion that a Tax Act can be drafted to provide the needed funds without presenting the legal objections to the present Tax Act.

(1937, pp. 170, 319) After the Supreme Court had declared unconstitutional the Railroad Retirement Act of 1935, an agreement was reached between the labor organizations and the railroads. New legislation was introduced in Congress which was designed to meet the objections of the Supreme Court and the railroads agreed not to challenge the legislation in the courts. The law applies to any express company, sleeping car company or carrier by railroad subject to Part I of the Interstate Commerce Act.

The following individuals are eligible for annuities after they have ceased to render compensated service to any employer: Individuals 65 years of age or over; individuals 60 years of age or over who have completed 30 years of service or become totally and permanently disabled; individuals without regard to age who are totally and permanently disabled for regular employment and have completed 30 years of service.

The annuities shall be computed by multiplying the individual's years of service by the percentages of his monthly compensation. The maximum annuity shall be $120 per month.

Each employee during the calendar years 1937-8-9 shall pay a tax of 2% per cent; 1940-1-2, 3 per cent; 1943-4-5, 3¼ per cent; 1946-7-8, 3½ per cent, and thereafter 3¾ per cent. The same rate of taxation applies to the employers.

The A. F. of L. congratulates the officers and members of the railroad organizations upon the success which has attended their untiring efforts during a number of years for the enactment of retirement legislation for railroad workers. It has been a long struggle. It required the exercise of patience, discretion and good judgment. Labor has never witnessed a greater exhibition of skillful planning and handling of a piece of social justive legislation than was shown in this particular matter. All who participated in the drafting of the measure, in presenting it to Congress, and in pressing it for passage, are worthy of the highest praise and commendation. The officers and members of the A. F. of L. share the feeling of gratification and pleasure which all railway workers experienced over the passage of this most outstanding piece of social justice legislation.

(1939, p. 141) Two bills passed Congress and were signed by the President.

H.R. 2178 provides that the annuity of an employee retired under the provisions of the Act shall be composed of a sum equal to $37.50 multiplied by the number of years of service, not to exceed thirty years, rendered on the Alaska Railroad or in the naval or military service of the U.S. in the tropics or Alaska.

It also applies to employees engaged in the construction of the Alaska Railroad between March 12, 1914, and July 1, 1923, plus the number of years' service, if any, rendered on the Isthmus of Panama. It also contains other important provisions.

H.R. 2642 provides for the order of precedence of beneficiaries.

Amendments—(1942, p. 260) Res. 117, which called for the establishment of a minimum of $90 per month to retired railroad workers, was referred to the Executive Council "with instructions to confer with the standard organizations of railroad employees and take such action as is deemed desirable”.

(1946, p. 604) The Committee notes with satisfaction and appreciation the splendid progress made by the Railroad Labor Organizations in improving their Social Security Acts. Many important improvements were made. Among these are the payment for time lost on account of sickness up to maximum of 130 days in any base year at a maximum of $25.00 per week.

The unemployment insurance benefits were extended to 130 days per year and the maximum rate of benefit increased to $25.00 per week.

Provisions were secured for the payment of disability annuities after ten years of service in the railroad industry in cases of total and permanent disability. Disability annuities are also payable to employees disabled for their regular employment after twenty years of service in the industry.

Survivor benefits for widows, parents and minor children at rates approximately 25 per cent higher than rates prevailing under the Social Security Act were obtained.

These improvements secured by the railroad organizations emphasizes the need for early and speedy improvements in the general Social Security Act.

Railroad Retirement Board—(1954, pp. 421, 491) Res. 134 protested against attempts being made to remove key persons in the Railroad Retirement Board employ from Civil Service status and concluded with the following resolves:

Now, therefore, be it resolved—That this Convention strongly condemn the proposal to remove such key administrative positions from the protection of the merit system of Civil Service and vigorously urges that the interests of railroad laboring men and women and their families not be subordinated to partisan political interests in the administration and functioning of this agency which has been created for the purpose of protecting and safeguarding their security and welfare, and that the Civil Service Commission reject such unwarranted proposal of the Chairman and Industry Member of the Board; and

It is further resolved—That a copy of this resolution be transmitted forthwith to the President of the United States, the Chairman of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committees of the United States Senate and of the House of Representatives, the Chairman of the Post Office and Civil Service Committees of the United States Senate and of the House of Representatives, and the Chairman and associate members of the United States Civil Service Commission.

Railroad Safety Appliances—(1937, pp. 171, 319) S. 29 to promote the safety of employees and travelers on railroads by requiring common carriers engaged in interstate commerce to install, inspect, test, repair and maintain block-signal systems, interlocking, automatic, train-stop, train-control, cab-signal devices and other appliances, methods and systems intended to promote the safety of railroad operation, passed both Houses.

The administration of the law will be under the Interstate Commerce Commission. It is a measure that has been urged by the railroad employees for many years.

Railroad Shopmen's Strike—(1925, p. 38) A magnificent stand in defense of a fundamental principle is the continuing strike of the railway shopmen against the Pennsylvania and Long Island Railroads. The strike began with the nation-wide movement in 1922, against intolerable conditions resulting from the activity of certain railroad executives to undermine the shopmen's union standards and so reduce wages and destroy working conditions. Although the strikes on all of the other railroads have been settled, no adjustment could possibly be made with the Pennsylvania Company.

The Pennsylvania early declared against the principle of genuine collective bargaining and prepared a plan of company dominated employee representation, which it forced its employees to accept. The striking shopmen have consistently refused to accept this substitute and are continuing their demand for their right to representation of their own choosing. The Long Island Railroad which is operated as a property of the Pennsylvania, follows the Pennsylvania labor policy.

A remarkable focus upon the contrast between company unions and trade unions has resulted from the fact that the Baltimore and Ohio, which is in many respects a competing road, took the initiative to end the 1922 strike by entering into an agreement with the representatives of the shopmen's unions. Previous to the strike there had been conferences between the B. & O. executives and representatives of the shopmen's unions on stabilization of employment and cooperation to work out better shop practices and eliminate waste. A preamble providing for such cooperation was written into the 1923 agreement and has resulted in the most important development of union-management cooperation which has challenged world-wide attention. As a result, the B. & O. has been rendering constantly improved service at lower maintenance costs. On the other hand repair costs on the Pennsylvania have increased, its labor difficulties have grown apace, and a once superbly equipped and operated system is losing popular favor.

The Pennsylvania management has been so implacable in its opposition to trade unions, that discussion of underlying fundamentals and relative effectiveness of company unions as contrasted with trade unions has been stimulated in many circles.

To those trade unionists who are making the sacrifices necessary for the protest in the name of the whole trade union movement, the American labor movement owes a debt of gratitude. We appreciate the character and integrity of those who have not yielded in the struggle and we pledge them Labor's support in every possible way. We shall try to bring to the attention of all wage earners and our friends the issues involved in the struggle, so that they may know how best to support the striking shopmen in the most practical way.

Railroad Workers' Problems—(1931 p. 131) The transportation industry has become increasingly competitive in the past decade. As improved highway mileage increases and the number of motor vehicles rises, motor vehicle competition becomes significant. Pipe line development has been rapid, the revival of waterways and long distance transportation of power have affected freight movements.

However, railways are our great arterial transportation dependence and the problems of this industry are of consequence to all others. Between 1920 and 1929 the number of employees on the class I railways declined from 2,022,832 to 1,660,850. This number has been further reduced until now there are only 1,317,399 employed. The payroll declined from $3,681,801,000 to $2,896,566,000. The ton-mile revenue freight increased from 413,699,006,000 to 450,189,000,000; 361,000 fewer workers handled 36,480,000,000 more ton-mile revenue freight; the number of pounds of coal per 1,000 gross ton miles decreased from 162 in 1921 to 125 in 1929 and 121 in 1930. The net ton miles per freight car day increased from 389 in 1921 to 547 in 1929. Freight locomotive miles increased from 49.5 per freight locomotive day in 1921 to 65.1 in 1929. Passenger locomotive miles per locomotive day increased from 103.4 in 1921 to 120.3 in 1929. These figures are a record of increased operating efficiency—fewer workers and higher productivity.

In 1930, freight traffic declined 14 per cent under 1929—net ton miles by 14 per cent and revenues 13.1 per cent. Passenger traffic declined 13.7 per cent. Total operating revenues declined 16 per cent—lower than in any preceding year back to 1919. Total operating expenses were 12.8 per cent lower than 1929 and below any preceding year back to 1917. The net operating income was $885,000,000—a decline of $390,000,000 or 30.6 per cent under 1929. The rate of return on railway property investment was 3.36—the lowest rate since 1921. Operating efficiency dropped slightly under 1929.

But the rate of progress on railroads has declined over the last decade. Between 1910 and 1920 the increase in freight ton miles was 62 per cent and the increase in passenger miles was 46 per cent. Between 1920 and 1929 the increase in freight ton miles was 8 per cent while the decrease in passenger miles was 34 per cent. As this change occurred in a period in which the volume of business increased, it is obvious that transportation has been going to other carriers. Three types of transportation have been cutting into the field of railroads; water transportation, motor carriers, and pipe lines.

Two long haul transportation agencies have increased their loads markedly during the recent past. In 1915 five millions of long tons passed through the Panama Canal; by 1929 the freight carried amounted to 30,000,000 long tons.

There are under way efforts to revive water transportation. With large appropriations for rivers and canals, and direct subsidies to government owned barge lines on the Mississippi and Warrior Rivers, water freight may be expected to increase. Water borne domestic commerce in the United States increased as follows between 1920-29:

Gulf and coast ports from 114,557,241 tons to 251,174,333.

Great Lakes ports from 98,750,979 tons to 141,185,669.

Rivers, canals and connecting channels from 125,400,000 to 245,894,000 tons.

There has been recent rapid extension of pipe line carriers, the total reaching 86,000 miles by 1929—an increase of 62 per cent over 1920. Excluding natural gas, where the element of competition does not enter, these pipe lines carried approximately 250,000,000,000 barrels of oil, thereby reducing possible railway freight by 160,000,000,000 tons. Increasing use of oil has reduced the use of coal which in turn has cut into the coal tonnage carried by railroads.

The railway industry which represents an investment of approximately $26,000,000,000 has been experiencing a decline in both its gross and net earnings due to the economic depression. This in addition to the serious problem of growing competition threatens serious financial difficulties. Over a decade passenger revenues have declined and while freight revenues have continued to increase growing competition threatens their source of income.

Two major proposals are under consideration: consolidation on railroads and an increase in freight rates.

Recognizing the economies to be secured through consolidation, the railway unions interposed the condition that plans for mergers should include provisions to care for the equities of those employees who would be affected by the changes. Railway employees organize their whole lives around their jobs and pour into it all their work capacities. Changes in the industry must take into consideration the consequences to these worker investments as well as to communities. We believe that mergers whether brought about through holding companies or openly should be supervised by the Interstate Commerce Commission and that this consideration of the personal investment should apply equally.

Every industry that renders an essential service to society has a right to earn a fair return. We believe the development of competitive conditions in the transportation industry should be carefully watched and studied so that the best interests of the carriers and those served should be steadily maintained.

(P. 407) Every industry and division thereof which renders an essential and useful service to society should earn a fair return upon the real and actual investments made. It is self-evident that a bankrupt or insolvent industry cannot serve labor to its advantage nor benefit those having invested their surplus wealth. Indeed, labor under our present practices is made to suffer first instead of being called upon to sacrifice last.

We commend the railway workers for the wisdom and sound judgment displayed in studying the problems as affecting the workers of all divisions in the railway service, through concerted action and by co-operative methods. We likewise commend the E.C. for the service contributed to the support of the associated railway unions. We call upon the E.C., not alone to aid and assist the railway workers and their unions, but also those organized and employed in all other branches of the transportation industry. Should perchance future conflict or misunderstandings arise as to policies, methods or procedures to be followed by any of them, then the Council will undoubtedly endeavor to bring such unions into conference for consultation and agreement, thus protecting and advancing the best interests of all and thereby avoiding harmful and destructive consequences which would otherwise arise because of lack of understanding and cooperation. The co-ordination of the forces of organized labor in a field that is so highly charged with competitive elements and factors is essential.

(1932, p. 103) The problems with which the Railway Employees Department has been faced in the last year are those of all industry; wage cuts, declining employment, and, on the other hand, increasing unemployment both technological and industrial. No stone has been left unturned in an attempt to alleviate these conditions by constantly advocating and demanding the maintenance of high wages, the shorter work-week and work-day, the protection of employes and their property in consolidations, and constructive legislation with respect to retirement insurance and injunctions.

It will be the purpose of this report to outline briefly the progress that has been made on the above matters during the past year.

Despite the wholesale cutting of wages in the manufacturing industries, the Railway Employees' Department with the cooperation of affiliated organizations was successful in maintaining the wage scales of their membership with but few exceptions until January 1932, when the railways requested a reduction in the wages of all railway employes on the plea that reduced traffic and insufficient earnings did not enable them to meet even their fixed charges.

This gave rise to a conference held in Chicago during January, 1932, at which wages and the stabilization of employment were discussed. A committee of nine railroad presidents represented the majority of Class 1 Railroads, while the Railway Labor Executives' Association represented the railway employees, both of which were given authority to negotiate matters before the conference to a conclusion.

The railway presidents made the following curt request: "Ten per cent to be deducted from each pay check for a period of one year. Basic wages to remain as at present. This arrangement to terminate automatically twelve months after the plan becomes effective."

The Railway Labor Executives' Association, of which organizations affiliated with Railway Employee's Department are members, submitted a program to relieve unemployment and stabilize employment in which the following "Immediate Measures" were proposed:

1. Stabilize employment by assuring one year of employment to the necessary employees in every class. (This will increase the purchasing power of a payroll exceeding $2,000,000,000 by releasing over 1,250,000 workers from fear of unemployment.)

- (a) This stabilization should include provisions for putting to work as many men as possible consistent with maintaining satisfactory conditions in the respective classes of employment.

- (b) The necessary stand-by forces should also be assured of a minimum amount of part-time employment.

2. Since the six-hour day is necessary and must be instituted to absorb the existing number of experienced employees without reduction of compensation, a commission should be created to determine the ways and means of applying this principle to the different classes of employees. Such a commission should be created by the nomination of an equal number of representatives of management and employees (including in the latter appropriate representatives of the principal classes of employment) with the designation of a chairman from its membership by the Interstate Commerce Commission. Any legislation necessary to establish the commission and to endow it with adequate authority to make a comprehensive study as a basis for a report to be made within a definite period, should be sought by joint action, so far as possible, by the carriers and the employees.

3. Joint action should be undertaken between managements and employees to promote—

- (a) One billion dollar United States bond issue for grade crossing elimination on main traveled highways. One-half cost to be borne by government as improvement of interstate highways. One-half cost to be borne by railroads to be repaid by payment of interest and sinking fund payment to retire bonds in 50 years.

- (b) Regulation of motor transportation and freight forwarding companies, including provision for employment of furloughed railroad employees.

- (c) Protection of all interests in railroad consolidation.

- (d) Federal legislation to provide retirement insurance and elective workmen's compensation.

- (e) Establishment of an emergency employment bureau to prepare the way for the eventual establishment of a national placement bureau and to provide means for placing unemployed rail workers as additional opportunities of employment may develop.

- (f) Coordination of train crews and train lengths on the basis of economical, safe operation, including any desirable state or federal legislation.

4. In order to carry forward the foregoing program, a continuing cooperation between railroad managements and railroad employees is essential. This will require complete willingness and good faith of railroad managements in dealing with self-chosen representatives of railroad labor, and whole-hearted compliance with the spirit and the letter of the Railway Labor Act.

The conference was terminated on January 31, 1932, after a month of negotiation, with the signing of an agreement effective as of February 1, 1932, to run for a year, providing for a 10% deduction in the wages of railroad employees and "an earnest and sympathetic effort" on the part of railroad managements "to maintain and increase railroad employment."

Notwithstanding the above agreement of the railway managements and their assurance that a large percentage of the employes' two hundred and fifteen million dollars contribution would be applied to the purchase of materials and to increase employment, employment has continued to decline steadily. There are now 700,000 railway workers unemployed and more than 500,000 working part time and not earning enough to support their families, according to a statement issued recently by the Railway Labor Executives Association. Quoting further from this statement:

When the railway employees agreed to a 10% deduction from their earnings they protested that "wage reductions are not the appropriate means to restore prosperity." They said: "We cannot believe that the public welfare is advanced by reducing the purchasing power of Labor." The tragic march of events has demonstrated that we were right. A national policy of reducing wages and leaving millions of unemployed to depend on charity, utilizing our vast financial resources largely to sustain fictitious security values, has failed utterly to check the downward course of the depression, to revive business, or even to maintain the stability of our great financial and industrial enterprises.

The railroads furnish a good example of the inevitable failure of this policy. We pointed out last January that the labor cost of transportation had been steadily declining, that the rail employees today handled 50% more traffic and produced twice as much surplus revenue over labor cost as of twenty years ago. We showed from the official reports of the railroads that after payment of taxes the railroad net income of $934,000,000 in the depression year of 1931, would pay 5% interest on the net railway capital of $18,680,000,000. We pointed out that the financial embarrassment of the railways arose from their obligations to pay $845,000,000 annually in fixed charges. No property which is mortgaged to such an extent can expect to meet its obligations during a grave depression in business.

In the light of experience we again insist that it is economically unsound and socially unjust to reduce the earnings of the railroad workers or of any industrial or agricultural workers in order that Labor may pay a dole to idle capital. Billions of dollars today are invested in idle property in railroad and industrial enterprises. Yet this idle capital is drawing interest which is squeezed out of the reduced wages of those workers who are still at least partially employed. The inevitable result of this unequal protection of property values and human values is to degrade the national standard of living and to increase the inequity in the division of the national income.

According to the latest information available, the railways are now seeking a 20% cut in the wages of railroad workers to become effective at the expiration of the present agreement on February 1, 1933.

To date a committee representing the railroads has attempted to facilitate conference with the Railway Labor Executives' Association representing the standard railroad labor unions for the purpose of negotiating a wage scale to become effective after the expiration of the present agreement on February 1, 1933, but the railway labor executives declined the proposal and stated that having no authority to enter upon such a conference they would neither seek such authority nor encourage any efforts to inaugurate wage negotiations. Following this a committee of the Railway Labor Executives' Association saw the President of the United States and asked that the government step in to prevent the cut in the basic wage scale which the carriers are proposing. In a statement to the President they said:

We have supported and will continue to support and advocate the use of all of the resources of government to relieve unemployment distress and to aid and promote industrial activities which will increase employment. But when the government is making such efforts we submit that as a part of its policy there should be unyielding opposition to reduction of wages with all the evil consequences to which we have referred.

Failure in their efforts to secure conferences with railroad labor officials has prompted railroad officials to postpone all action including the serving of notices as provided under the provisions of the Railway Labor Act informing Labor of their intentions to cut wages 20% until October 6 when a national meeting of railroad presidents will be held to discuss policies with respect to wage reductions. Everything possible is being done to resist this cut and to restore wage rates to what they were prior to the signing of the agreement last January.

(P. 107) Every effort has been made by the Department in cooperation with other railroad organizations to maintain and stabilize employment. To this end constructive measures have been proposed to management, the outstanding instance being the program that was presented to the committee of nine railroad presidents at the Chicago Conference, part of which is quoted elsewhere in this report. Although assurances have been given that employment would be "maintained and increased," as in the Chicago Agreement, employment has continued to decline. Part-time work has also been on the increase, due to efforts of the employees to distribute available work among the membership in order to give as many as possible an opportunity to earn an existence.

According to reports of the Interstate Commerce Commission, there were 1,686,769 men (including executives and officials) employed by Class 1 railroads in the United States during the year 1929. In 1930, this number was reduced to 1,510,688 while in 1931 only 1,278,175 men were employed, showing reductions since 1929 of 10.4% and 24.2% respectively. Of the 1,108,691 men reported to be working in January of this year, when the Chicago Agreement was signed, only 1,047,483 men were employed in June, the last report available, a reduction of 5.5%, which clearly indicates that the employee representatives were absolutely right in predicting that "wage reductions are not the appropriate means to restore prosperity." At the present time, it may be fairly and conservatively estimated that there are over 700,000 railroad workers totally unemployed and 500,000 working part time. Even with the return of prosperous conditions, only 50% of those now unemployed may reasonably expect to find full time employment, due to displacement caused by technological changes in the industry.

The maintenance of equipment employes (including officials) suffered even more from unemployment. The Interstate Commerce Commission reported 455,858 employes working in 1929, as compared to 344,033 in 1931, a decrease of 111,825 or 24.5%. Since January of this year, the number of employes was reduced from 304,211 to 273,015 reported in June, the last report available. This is a decrease of 31,196 or 10.3%. If the same rate of decrease has continued since June, and indications are that it more than has, there are approximately 257,000 men employed in the maintenance of equipment department of Class 1 railroads, which means that about 200,000 or 44% of those employed in 1929 have been thrown out of work. According to reports coming in from general chairmen, those men who are fortunate enough to be employed are working on the average of only four days per week.

Unemployment in the maintenance of equipment department is reflected in the increase in bad-order rolling-stock, and the decrease in maintenance of equipment expenses and compensation paid to maintenance of equipment forces.

According to figures compiled by the American Railway Association Car Service Division, the number of bad-order freight cars increased from 134,267, or 6.0% of those on line on January 1, 1929, to 187,666 cars, or 8.7% on January 1, 1932. By August 1, 1932, this number increased to 245,749, or 11.5%, as compared to 181,702 cars, or 8.3% on August 1, 1931, and 137,495 cars, or 6.2% on August 1, 1929. The number of bad-order locomotives (awaiting classified repairs) showed an even greater increase. On January 1, 1929, there were 4,380 locomotives in bad-order, or 7.5% of those on line, while on January 1, 1932, this number was increased to 6,990, or 13.0%. By August 1, 1932, there were 8,291 bad-order locomotives or 16.0% of those on line as compared to 5,913, or 10.9% on August 1, 1931, and 4,205, or 7.3% on the same date in 1929. Thus the number of bad-order freight cars increased 78.7% and bad-order locomotives increased 97.2% since August 1, 1929, while the per cent unserviceable increased 85.5% and 199.2% respectively.

On the other hand, maintenance of equipment expenses and compensation paid to maintenance of equipment forces showed a tremendous decline, according to reports of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Maintenance of equipment expenses were reduced from $1,211,342,962 in 1929 to $829,433,029 in 1931, a decrease of $381,887,933, or 31.5%. During the first six months of 1932, $328,310,133 was expended for this purpose as compared with $441,497,751 spent during the same period in 1931, and $602,813,030 in 1929. This represents a decrease of $113,187,618, or 25.6% since 1931, and $274,502,877, or 45.6% since 1929. Likewise, compensation paid to maintenance of equipment employes declined from $760,472,016 in 1929 to $506,255,938 in 1931, which is a decrease of $254,216,078, or 33.4%. During the first six months of 1932 only $188,810,971 was paid on compensation as compared to $272,888,780 paid during the first six months of 1931, and $377,397,435 paid during the same period in 1929, which is a decrease of $84,077,809, or 30.8% since 1931, and $188,586,464 or 50.0% since 1929. The decrease in compensation is greater than the decrease in expenses, indicating that the greater portion of the reduction in expenses came out of the pay envelopes of the employes. Furthermore, the railways would do well to avail themselves of the opportunity to borrow funds from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in order to rehabilitate their unserviceable equipment and provide men with employment.

Like many other organizations affiliated with the A. F. of L., the Railway Employees' Department has constantly advocated the adoption of the shorter work-day and work-week as the only means of taking up the slack in employment caused by the ever-improving technological changes in the railroad industry.

The efforts of the Railway Employees' Department to obtain a shorter work-period in order to alleviate unemployment date back several years. In 1930, in convention, a carefully worked out "Stabilization of Employment Program" was adopted in which, among other things, a reduction in hours of work was proposed (five-day week of 40 hours). In November, 1931, the Railway Labor Executives' Association, of which the presidents of organizations affiliated with the Department are members, held a conference with a committee of nine railroad presidents for the purpose of discussing a program of employment stabilization which was adopted by the association. The railway presidents had no authority to negotiate to a conclusion, so, another conference was held in January, 1932, at which time such authority was secured (Chicago conference). Among other things, the principle of the six-hour day was proposed as a means of relieving unemployment and stabilizing employment.

The committee of nine railroad presidents refused to accept the proposal, with the result that a resolution (Public Resolution No. 113, 72d Congress), authorizing the Interstate Commerce Commission to investigate the application of the principle of the six-hour day, was introduced in Congress before the conference had ended. Shortly thereafter it was adopted and signed by the President. The commission was directed in the resolution "to investigate what would be the effect upon operation service, and expenses of applying the principle of the six-hour day in the employment of all classes and each particular class of railway employees because of such application," and to report their findings to Congress on or before December 15, 1932.

By way of summarizing the evidence: the carriers and employees were quite generally agreed that the application of the principle of the six-hour day would not affect operation or services adversely. In fact, the employees were of the belief that the six-hour day would improve these factors, as well as increase employment. The only question seemed to be one of cost. The carriers' estimate of increased cost that would result from the application of the six-hour day was about 25%. Although information was not as readily available to the employees in this respect, estimates were made which were considerably lower than this—10% to 13%—which took into account many efficiencies and economies that could be introduced with the principle of the six-hour day that the carriers ignored in making their estimates.

The evidence is still being considered by the commission. Recently, the commission proposed to the railways that the six-hour day be tried in actual operation but they refused, which may or may not indicate somewhat the stature of the six-hour day in the railroad industry. Failure in this prompted the commission to issue a notice that further hearings would be held the latter part of September.

Although a report was looked for much sooner than this, in view of the alarming amount of unemployment in the railroad industry, it appears in the light of the above circumstances that none will be filed before December 15, the due date, at which time Congress will have the facts and will be able to act intelligently on the six-hour bill for the railway industry, introduced on July 14th in both the Senate and the House, known as Senate Bill S. 4980 and House Bill H.R. 12991.

In spite of the unprecedented unemployment already caused by technological improvements in the railroad industry, the railway managements are making a bad situation much worse by advocating and effecting consolidations for the purpose of reducing expenses, which not only throw men out of work, but cause even more far-reaching disaster by removing railway service from communities, built around that industry, and as a result making the property of the workers and others residing in these communities worthless. The tragedy of losing a home after spending a life-time building it cannot be minimized.

One of the largest and most recent consolidations is now in process of completion in the East. The original Five-system Plan for the consolidation of Eastern roads submitted by the Interstate Commerce Commission on December 9, 1929, was amended at the suggestion of four large Eastern roads—Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, Chesapeake and Ohio Railway Company, New York Central Railroad Company and the Pennsylvania Railroad Company—to provide for a Four-system Plan embracing these four railroads. Although approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission was given only tentatively pending the fulfilment of certain requirements the chief of which was the divesting by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company of their control of the New Haven & Boston and Maine Railways, it appears that the Interstate Commerce Commission is ready to yield on most points and little remains in the way of completing the merger except the possible intervention of Congress which is being demanded by the railroad employes and other interests, principally the shippers. But in order to avoid this possibility, the carriers involved are rushing things along in order to effect the consolidation before Congress reconvenes.

While the Four-system Plan was under investigation by the commission, the railway labor organizations filed a brief with the commission opposing the Four-system Plan on the ground "that the proposed consolidations will not be in the public interest."

The present position of the railroad labor organizations with respect to consolidations remains unchanged. At a meeting of the Railway Labor Executives' Association held in Cleveland, August 23 and 24, it was decided "to oppose all further consolidations of railroads until additional legislation is passed by Congress protecting the public and the employees against increase of unemployment, property losses and the destruction of community interests through such consolidations. The heads of the railway labor organizations expressed their emphatic opinion that this was no time to advance programs for throwing more men out of work, depriving communities of railway service, and destroying property values, in the name of supposed economies of operation, which would furnish no tangible public benefits but serve only to increase speculators' profit in stock market operations. Counsel was directed to prepare a bill to increase the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission over railroad consolidations in order to give adequate protection to the interests of railway employees and the public."

The railway labor organizations were active in the fight for anti-injunction legislation during the last session of Congress. The meaning of this measure is most significant, particularly to the federated crafts by reason of their bitter experience during the shopmen's strike of 1922.

At the present time two bills are pending before Congress which propose to deal constructively with old age retirement and unemployment in the railroad industry. The first provides for a retirement insurance plan, while the second is the six-hour day bill (mentioned elsewhere in this report) which is designed to relieve the unemployment caused by technological improvements and consolidations.

which it is reasonable to assume will continue to be a permanent menace in any event unless relieved by a shorter work-day. The railway organizations plan to seek early action on these measures when Congress reconvenes in December.

(P. 373) The railroad labor organizations, of whom a substantial majority are affiliated with the A. F. of L., are to be complimented upon the able and intelligent manner in which they undertake to and do protect the interests of all workers in this great industry. The A. F. of L. and the 21 standard railroad labor organizations cooperate on all matters of mutual interest in the field of economics and political activities.

(1933, pp. 116, 453) As the result of a conference held in Chicago, Ill., in January, 1932, between a committee of nine railroad presidents representing the railroads, and the Railway Labor Executives' Association representing the employees, an agreement was signed, effective February 1, 1932, which provided for a 10 per cent deduction from the pay-check of each employe for a period of one year, basic wages to remain unchanged, the arrangement to terminate 12 months after the effective date of the agreement; and "an earnest and sympathetic effort" on the part of railroad managements "to maintain and increase railroad employment."

Notwithstanding the tremendous decline that took place in railroad employment during the summer of 1932, with its resultant loss in the earnings of employes, in addition to the 10 per cent deduction in wages that was being made from the pay-checks of those who were employed, reports appeared in the press announcing the intention of railroad managements to institute a movement having for its object a reduction of 20 per cent in basic rates of pay of railroad employes. No official notice, or any direct knowledge of the desire of the carriers to further reduce wages was given the Railway Labor Executives' Association until September 20, when W. F. Thiehoff, general manager of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad, invited the members of the association who were meeting at the time, to hold an informal conference with a committee of nine railroad officials, of which committee he was chairman.

At the meeting which was held in Washington, D. C., Mr. Thiehoff referred to reports which had been appearing in the press and stated that he and his associates had been selected as a committee to consider the wage question and had recommended that a movement be instituted to bring about a 20 per cent reduction in basic rates of pay and that such recommendation had been approved by the railroad presidents' conference. He stated further that the railroads were agreeable to handling the matter in a national conference, and indicated that his committee would like to have the Railway Labor Executives' Association secure authority to deal with the matter in that way. Mr. Thiehoff was advised that the Railway Labor Executives' Association was not in sympathy with his suggestion that a conference be arranged for the purpose of considering wage reductions, and could see no occasion for such a conference, but the suggestion would be taken under consideration and he would be advised later. In a letter to Mr. Thiehoff dated September 21, 1932, the same position was taken.

On September 22, the Railway Labor Executives' Association conferred with President Hoover and after pointing out the plight of the railroad workers as the result of unemployment and wage reductions, urged him to prevent any further reduction in the wages of railroad employes, because it would delay recovery. The following announcement by the Secretary of Labor appeared in the press on September 26:

In the matter of the railway wage discussion now going on, the President last week expressed the view, both to the representatives of railway labor and to the leading railway presidents who have conferred with him, that he felt that it is desirable that this question should be deferred at the present time.

The present agreement does not expire until February 1, next. The President's view was that it might be well agreed to defer further discussion until the end of the year as the general economic situation would be much clearer at that time, and negotiations could be based on a better realization of the actual circumstances existing.

Meanwhile, Daniel Willard, president of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, and chairman of the committee of nine railroad presidents with whom the organizations negotiated in January, 1932, had informally suggested consideration of the matter of negotiating the question of extension of the agreement of January 31, 1932, beyond January 31, 1933. The Railway Labor Executives' Association gave consideration to the suggestion of the President of the B&O, and on October 1, 1932, replied that if notice of a desire to change existing wage contracts were not served by the carriers and if management made its suggested proposal to extend the Chicago Agreement of January 31, 1932 (providing for a ten per cent deduction from pay-checks), then the members of the association would proceed within the intervening period to ascertain (in accordance with the laws of the respective organizations) whether the membership desired to authorize participation after January 1, 1933, in a national conference for the purpose of negotiating to a conclusion with a committee duly authorized by carrier managements such a proposal of management to extend the Chicago Agreement of January 31, 1932, beyond February 1, 1933, for such a period, if any, as might seem warranted by conditions at the time of such negotiations.

As a result of a series of informal conferences held in Chicago from October 13-15, at the request of Mr. Thiehoff, between his committee of nine and the Railway Labor Executives' Association, it was agreed that the railways would withhold the service of any reduction in rates of pay pending negotiations, and that the Railway Labor Executives' Association would seek authority in accordance with the laws of their respective organizations to enter into negotiations about December 10, 1932, on the proposal that the existing agreement be extended beyond the expiration date of January 31, 1933.

After securing the necessary authority to negotiate, the Railway Labor Executives' Association met Mr. Thiehoff and his committee of railroad executives, which was similarly vested on December 12, 1932, and entered into negotiations which extended for almost two weeks. Numerous proposals and counter-proposals were made, until finally on December 21, 1932, an agreement was reached and signed by the members of both committees, extending the original agreement entered into on January 31, 1932, in the following manner:

It is agreed between the parties hereto that the said original agreement is hereby extended, so that up to and including October 31, 1933, ten per cent (10%) shall be deducted from each pay check of each of the said employees covered by this agreement; that basic rates of pay shall remain as under the original agreement; that this agreement shall terminate automatically October 31, 1933, and that neither party prior to June 15, 1933, will serve notice of a desire to change or extend this agreement, or of an intended change in basic rates of pay, such change or extension to become effective on or after November 1, 1933; it being further agreed that in the event that such a notice should be served by any party hereto between June 15, 1933, and November 1, 1933, the proceedings thereunder shall be conducted pursuant to the provisions of the Railway Labor Act and such proceedings shall be conducted nationally in order that the matter may be handled to a conclusion as expeditiously as reasonably possible.

On June 17, 1933, the Conference Committee of Managers, through its chairman, W. F. Thiehoff, advised the Railway Labor Executives' Association that on June 15, notice was served on the general committees of all organizations, parties to the national agreement, dated December 21, 1932, advising them of the desire of the railroads to bring about a 22½ per cent reduction in basic rates of pay effective November 1, 1933. It was suggested that a conference be held on July 12, in Chicago, Ill., to discuss the matter.

Before any action was taken, the Honorable Joseph B. Eastman, Federal Coordinator of Railroads, summoned both parties to Washington and on June 20, 1933, requested that the existing deduction agreement be extended for a reasonable period as the Federal Government was advancing its recovery program designed to increase employment, wages and purchasing power, and if the railroads persisted in their intentions to seek further wage reductions, this program of the government would be seriously injured.

Both parties complied with the coordinator's request and signed an agreement on June 21, 1933, providing for an extension of the agreement signed on December 21, 1932, as follows:

That the agreement signed at Chicago, Illinois, the 21st day of December, 1932, in behalf of the participating railroads and their employes, represented as therein set forth and who are further represented in the making of this agreement by the respective parties hereto, is hereby extended for a period of eight months from the expiration date thereof, so that up to and including June 30, 1934, ten (10) per cent shall be deducted from each pay check of each of the said employes covered by said agreement of December 21, 1932, and by this agreement; that basic rates of pay shall remain as under the agreement of January 31, 1932; that the extended agreement shall terminate automatically June 30, 1934, and that no party prior to February 15, 1934, will serve notice of a desire to change or extend this extended agreement, or of an intended change in basic rates of pay; such change or extension to become effective on or after July 1, 1934; it being further agreed that in event that such a notice should be served by any party hereto between February 15, 1934, and July 1, 1934, the proceedings thereunder shall be conducted pursuant to the provisions of the Railway Labor Act, and such proceedings shall be conducted nationally in order that the matter may be handled to a conclusion as expeditiously as reasonably possible.

As provided in the agreement, each organization approved the action of its chief executive by a vote of the membership according to the rules of the respective organization.

(Canadian Situation)

Notwithstanding the disposition that has been made of the wage question on railroads in the U.S., the Canadian railways have seen fit to persist in their efforts to further reduce the wages of their employes.

During and after the War, the wages of Canadian railroad workers were adjusted in conformity with the adjustments made in the United States. Since 1923, however, the wages of Canadian railroad workers lagged with the result that by 1929, their rates were from five to seven per cent below rates established in the United States. In the fall of 1931, the Canadian railways made an attack on the wages of the running trades, followed by similar attacks on those of the mechanical crafts, clerks and others.

The Railway Labor Executives' Association adopted the following resolution on November 5, 1931, pledging their support to the Canadian employees: "In the Canadian wage question it is agreed that any one or more organizations whose members have been notified of proposed wage reductions shall on request of the chief executive or executives to the chairman of this association, have the full cooperation of this association on the same basis and program as agreed in dealing with the wage question in the U.S.

The engineers, firemen, conductors, trainmen and telegraphers on September 15, received a request from the management for a voluntary 10 per cent deduction in wages to be effective for one year. After the necessary negotiations, this request was refused making it by its own terms a formal notice required under agreements "for the revision of such agreements to bring about a reduction of 10 per cent in the rate of pay specified therein," whereupon the carriers submitted the dispute to a Board of Conciliation and Investigation under the Industrial Disputes Act. The Board rendered its report to the Minister of Labor on November 30, 1931. The majority report upheld the railways in their request for a reduction in wages to take effect after November 15, 1931.

Based on this report, the railways submitted a proposal for a 10 per cent reduction in wages effective for one year from December 1, 1931, which the employees declined to accept, notifying the management in the meantime that wages paid would be accepted only on account. As a result of the Chicago agreement, however, an agreement was reached between the employees and the carriers on February 4, 1932, providing for a 10 per cent deduction from pay checks, basic rates to remain unchanged, and the agreement to be effective from December 1, 1931, to January 31, 1933, but "if on or after December 1, 1932, business conditions have not so improved as to enable the railways to terminate the agreement on January 31, 1933, notice to that effect will be given to the representatives of the employees, upon which the parties to this agreement will confer further and agree to make every reasonable effort to bring the matter to a conclusion before January 31, 1933."

The next to be approached were the mechanical crafts who on March 5, 1932, were notified that the management desired to meet with them for the purpose of discussing the acceptance by the employees of a "reduction in compensation on the same basis as has already been made effective for other classes of employees on the Canadian Railways, as well as for all classes of railway employees in the U.S.

As in the U. S. the committee representing the employees requested that stabilization of employment as well as wages be discussed. The management refused to discuss employment until after the wage question was disposed of, so, under the circumstances, an agreement similar to that for the running trades was signed on March 24, 1932, effective for one year after April 1, 1932. The stabilization of employment was then taken up between committees representing the management and the employees on the various properties that were parties to the agreement. Similar agreements were signed by the other employees with whom the carriers had agreements in the past, each providing for a 10 per cent deduction to be effective for one year. It is important to note that the agreements for the various groups of employees did not run simultaneously.

During the early part of this year, the Canadian railways made a second attack on the wages of their employees, demanding a 20 per cent reduction in basic rates of pay.

The engineers, firemen, conductors, trainmen and telegraphers were informed on November 30, 1932, that the carriers would be unable after January 31, 1933, to discontinue the 10 per cent deduction and suggested further that at an early date they would be compelled to seek "a further reduction in compensation or a revision of rates of pay." The mechanical trades were similarly informed on February 20, 1933, as were all the other employees as the date of expiration of their deduction agreements approached.

On January 28, 1933, the carriers served formal notice on the running trades of their intent and desire to put into effect, on or after March 3, 1933, wages calculated at the rate of 20 per cent below the basic rates of pay specified in the schedule of wages and working conditions in effect prior to December 1, 1931. The employees expressed themselves as agreeable to an extension of the 10 per cent deduction agreement until December 31, 1933, or to a settlement similar to that reached in December, 1932, between the U.S. Railways and the Standard railroad labor organizations, but flatly refused to accept a 20 per cent reduction in wages. This prompted the carriers to apply for a Board of Conciliation under the Industrial Disputes Act.

Hearings were conducted by the board, which rendered its report to the Minister of Labor on April 25, 1933. The majority report recommended a 20 per cent deduction in wages, while the minority report stated that the 10 per cent deduction agreement effective December 1st, 1931, expired on January 31, 1933, that proper notice to change existing basic rates had not been given and, therefore, the proposal of the carrier should not be approved.

On May 1, 1933, the carriers put into effect an arrangement whereby 20 percent is deducted from the pay check of each employee. Efforts have been made by the organizations to get management to rescind the order, but such efforts have proved futile with the result that at the present time a strike ballot is being taken to determine the attitude of the membership.

Under date of June 13, the carriers notified the mechanical crafts that effective July 16, the management desired that an additional 10 per cent be deducted from the pay checks of these employees, making a total deduction of 20 per cent. Similar requests were made of the clerks, maintenance of way employees, firemen and oilers, shop laborers and others. Negotiations on these requests are now in progress according to the latest information available, and although the time specified upon which the reduction should take effect has expired no change in wages will be made while negotiations are under way.

In view of the fact that the basic wage rates of Canadian railroad workers are lower than those of American workers, and that the Chicago agreement has been recently extended, the request of the Canadian railways for a 20 per cent deduction in wages is not justified particularly now when recovery is in progress. Everything possible is being done to get justice for the Canadian membership. Employment has continued to decline during the past year as was the case in all of industry, but in recent months there have been signs of improvement due principally to the efforts of the President of the U.S. to increase employment and purchasing power under his program for national recovery. The railroads are dependent on the rest of industry for traffic and, therefore, the status of industry in general is reflected in railroad employment.

According to reports of the Interstate Commerce Commission 1,048,568 persons were employed on Class I Railroads and Switching and Terminal Companies in the United States during 1932, as compared to 1,278,175 in 1931 and 1,686,769 in 1929. This represents a reduction of 18.0 per cent under the employment of 1931 and 37.8 per cent below that for the year 1929. In March, 1933, according to the last report available, the number employed declined to 919,881 or 12.3 per cent below the average for 1932, and 16.1 per cent under the like month a year ago, when 1,096,506 workers were employed.

The maintenance forces suffered great losses from unemployment because of the retrenchment policy of the railroads during the past several years which has resulted in the accumulation of well over a year of deferred maintenance. The number of maintenance of equipment employes declined from 455,858 in 1929 to 344,033 in 1931. In 1932 the number employed was reduced to 282,971, or 17.7 per cent under that of 1931 and 37.9 per cent below the employment of 1929. Only 249,040 were employed in March, 1933, which is a reduction of 12.0 per cent under the average for 1932 and 18.9 per cent below the like month last year. The number of maintenance of way employes was even more greatly reduced. Of the 411,210 workers employed in 1929, only 275,486 were working on the average during 1931, and in 1932 this number was further reduced to 215,887 or 21.6 per cent below the employment in 1931 and 47.5 per cent under that of 1929. In March, 1933, the number employed declined to 175,453 or 18.7 per cent below the average employment during 1932, and 16.5 per cent under like month last year.

The decrease in the employment of the maintenance forces is clearly reflected in the bad order situation confronting the railroads as a result of their severe retrenchment policy during the past few years. According to figures compiled by the American Railway Association Car Service Division the number of bad order freight cars increased from 136,396 or 6.1 per cent of those on line in 1929, to 231,435 cars or 10.8 per cent of those on line in 1932. For the first half of 1933, the number of cars unserviceable increased to 277,859 or 13.3 per cent of those on line, while on June 1, according to the latest report available, there were 303,758 freight cars unserviceable or 14.7 per cent of those on line. Locomotives in bad order and in need of repairs in 1929 numbered 4,460 or 7.7 per cent of those on line. During the first half of 1933, the bad order locomotives increased to 10,376 or 20.3 per cent of those on line, and on June 1, there were 11,103 locomotives in bad order or 21.9 per cent of those on line. The number of freight cars in bad order increased 103.7 per cent from 1929 to 1933, while the number of locomotives in bad order increased 132.6 per cent during the same period.

The same is true with respect to road maintenance. Rails applied in replacements and betterments were decreased from 3,610,455 tons in 1929 to 2,673,674 tons in 1930 and 1,714,909 tons in 1931. In 1932 only 500,000 tons were used. Cross-ties laid in previously constructed track declined from 74,679,375 in 1929 to 63,353,826 in 1930 and 51,487,000 in 1931, while in 1932 only 40,000,000 ties were used. In 1932, 86.2 per cent less rail was applied and 46.4 per cent fewer ties were laid than in 1929.

It naturally follows that the maintenance expenses and the compensation paid to maintenance forces would be greatly reduced. Maintenance of equipment expenses was reduced from $1,202,912,000 in 1929 to $623,551,000 in 1932 or 48.2 per cent, while maintenance of way expenses declined from $855,355,000 to $354,921,000 or 58.5 per cent during the same period. Compensation paid to the maintenance of equipment forces declined from $760,472,016 in 1929 to $349,493,320 in 1932 or 54.0 per cent. The maintenance of way forces received $468,025,254 in 1929 and only $195,953,898 in 1932, which is a decrease of 58.1 per cent.

Thus a considerable amount of deferred maintenance has been accumulated as a result of the efforts of railroad management to reduce expenses, causing great losses in employment and wages. The significant thing to observe in these figures is the fact that the greater portion of the reduction in maintenance expenses came out of the pay envelope of these employees.

The increased industrial activity of the past few months has caused the railroad traffic to increase considerably, with the result that some men have been called back to work, according to the press and reports received by the Railway Employees' Department, in order to put the roads and equipment in good order so as to facilitate the handling of the present increase in traffic. It is hoped that this trend will continue.

(Shorter Workday and Workweek)

Through the efforts of the standard railway labor organizations, the Interstate Commerce Commission was ordered by a resolution of Congress (Public Resolution No. 113, Seventy-Second Congress, approved March 13, 1932) to investigate what would be the effect upon operation, service, and expenses of applying the principle of the 6-hour day in the employment of all classes and each particular class of railway employees because of such application. After extended hearings, the Commission rendered its report to Congress on December 6, 1932. It should be observed that this was purely a fact-finding body, and, therefore, no recommendations were made. The report of the Commission was as follows:

"Operation — There would be no material effect, adverse or otherwise, upon operation of the several carriers, assuming that revenues would be sufficient to cover any added operating expense and still maintain credit.

"Service—There would be no material effect, adverse or otherwise, upon the service of the several carriers, subject to the same qualifications as shown above with respect to operation.

"Expenses—(a) Assuming the same volume of traffic and operations as in 1930, and assuming no reduction in the then-existing compensation for an 8-hour or other basic day's work, the initial effect would be to increase operating expenses of the carriers collectively, including the express and sleeping car companies, at the rate of approximately $630,000,000 per year, or about 14.6 per cent of the operating expenses, and approximately 22.2 per cent of the payroll expenses in 1930. However, the compensation of steam railway, express, and sleeping car employees was on February 1, 1932, reduced 10 per cent by an agreement which expires on January 31, 1933. Various reductions in wages of electric railway employees have also been made. If the wage reductions are continued, the above estimate of $630,000,000 would be reduced to something less than $570,000,000 per year.

"(b) Assuming the same volume of traffic and operations as in 1930, and a reduction in the then-existing compensation pro rata to the reduction in the basic day's work, and excluding road, train and engine service from consideration, for reasons stated in the report, the initial effect would be to decrease operating expenses of the carriers collectively, including the express and sleeping-car companies, at the rate of approximately $26,000,000 per year; or about 0.6 per cent of the operating expenses, and approximately 0.9 per cent of the payroll expenses in 1930. Allowing for the wage reductions above mentioned, this estimate would be reduced to something less than $24,500,000 per year.

"(c) Using the same percentages of operating expense, and assuming the same volume of traffic and operations as in the 12 months ended with September, 1932, the initial effect would be an increase at the rate of approximately $414,000,000 per year under the first assumption with reference to wages and a decrease at the rate of approximately $20,000,000 per year under the second assumption. The estimates of $414,000,000 and $20,000,000 above given are probably both somewhat too high, if wage reductions are to be continued.

"(d) The increase in expenses at the outset under the first wage assumption would gradually be lessened and the decrease in expenses at the outset under the second wage assumption would gradually be increased as the result of experience with the proposed new arrangement and by technological developments.

"Upon either basis of compensation the application of the principle of a 6-hour day would render necessary between 300,000 and 350,000 additional carrier employes in a year such as 1930 and between 60,000 and 100,000 additional employes in a year of abnormal economic conditions such as now exist."

The object of the Commission's investigation was to provide Congress with the facts so as to provide a sound basis for action on the Pittman-Crosser bill, providing for the establishment of the principle of the six-hour day. The great amount of legislation before Congress prevented action on this bill before adjournment. At the special session of Congress the six-hour bill was re-introduced. . . . It developed that the Thirty-Hour-Week Bill took precedence before Congress, and, therefore, some consideration was given to the thought of amending this bill so as to include the six-hour bill of the railway labor organizations. After much consideration, however, an amendment was introduced to the Emergency Railroad Transportation Act, 1933 (S. 1580 and H. R. 5500), but because of the possibility that such an amendment would prevent the passage of this important measure and in an attempt to cooperate with President Roosevelt in promoting his recovery program, the amendment was withdrawn. It is expected that another six-hour bill will be introduced in the next session of Congress.

The standard railway labor organizations also indorsed and supported the Thirty-Hour-Week Bill.

(Legislation) — During the past three years the Railway Labor Executives Association has consistently endeavored to promote legislation for the relief of unemployment and has proposed other kindred programs in the interest of railway employees particularly, and in the interest of all workers generally. It has been the consistent belief of the Association that the remedy for relief of the unfortunate conditions confronting this country was to be found in the increased purchasing power of the masses, and that unless this was brought about all other efforts to restore the country to its former prosperous condition would prove unavailing.

On March 16th of this year, when it was known that Congress would sit in special session the association in session in Washington, D. C., adopted a consolidated program which authorized its attorney, under the direction of the executive committee, to devote his energies in the promotion of the necessary legislation that would afford the relief desired.

On May 1st, 1933, there was introduced in the Senate and the House of Representatives of the U.S. a bill entitled "Emergency Railroad Transportation Act, 1933," which had been prepared at the instance of the railroads with the aid and assistance of government advisors. This bill in its original form, permitted of consolidation of lines, terminals and facilities, which it carried to the ultimate possible limits would have abolished an estimated total of 400,000 positions of railroad employees. It offered no protection in these employees in their rights to an opportunity to earn a livelihood or in relief from the destruction of their individual property values which they have given years to the building.

It provided no means of dealing with the chaotic condition of seniority rights which would be brought about by such consolidations.

It did not give adequate recognition to the rights of employees through proper representation by their chosen organizations.

In short, it contemplated further railroad economy of operation at the expense and in total disregard of the rights of the railroad employees.

The association prepared a number of amendments to the bill intended to protect the interests of the railroad employees against the adverse effects of the operation of the bill.

These amendments were presented to the Senate and House Committees on Interstate Commerce beginning on May 8, 1933.

The Senate Committee accepted most of the amendments and reported the bill, as amended, to the Senate, and it was adopted by the Senate on Saturday, May 27th.

In the House Committee differences arose which culminated in a joint conference with President Roosevelt on May 31, 1933.

At this conference President Roosevelt approved all the amendments with such minor changes in language as he felt necessary to clarify their meaning. The House Committee reported the bill out on Thursday, June 1st, with these amendments intact. The bill passed the House on Monday, June 5th, and it then went to a conference between the House and Senate Committees. The bill was finally passed by both Houses and signed by the President on June 16, 1933.

(1934, pp. 156, 545) During the past year the Railway Employees Department and its affiliated organizations together with the other standard railroad labor organizations have been very active in promoting the best interests of their membership and have succeeded among other things in getting a restoration of the 10 per cent wage deduction over a period of nine months, a new "Bill of Rights" in the amendments to the Railway Labor Act, and old age security in the Retirement Insurance Act, all of which have given their organizing activities a great impetus. Thousands of railroad workers have joined the ranks of the standard railroad labor organizations in order that they may participate in the gains already achieved as well as make their contribution to future improvements.

Wages—(1938, p. 441) A reduction in the already low wages of railroad employees is positively unjustified. Wage cuts on railroads open up the danger of wage cuts in all industries. The A. F. of L. pledges support to the railroad organizations in their resistance to the wage cuts. A committee will be appointed to cooperate with the railroad organizations.

(1943, p. 547) The following statement was submitted to the convention by the spokesman for the 14 international organizations of labor affiliated with the A. F. of L. with particular reference to that part of their membership employed in the railroad industry of our nation, embracing one million men and women who operate the nations railroads.

"... I think we will all agree that the nation's railroad workers have been doing a splendid job in meeting the demands of the nation in a period of war for mass transportation. With one or two exceptions little or no time has been lost in carrying on transportation for the past quarter of a century, and particularly during the period of the war we have faithfully carried out, without the loss of a single hour's time, the pledge that the American Federation of Labor made to our President when we were plunged into the war.

"And so, railroad workers claim their just share of the splendid job that all working men have done to meet the needs of our nation in time of great peril. It is only because of that deep interest of this splendid group of men and women in the welfare of the nation that they now raise their voices about some policies pursued by some administrators of government that we feel are dangerous to the best interest of the nation itself.

"The handling of labor matters by representatives of the Federal Government is nothing new to railroad workers. Beginning with the enactment of the Erdman Act in 1888, some 55 years ago, railroad workers have been subject to federal law establishing procedure and determining labor relations in the railroad transportation industry. That is because of the tremendous importance of mass transportation to the nation itself. Transportation by railroad is the arterial supply system of our whole economic activity. The railroads are the assembly lines of all that we produce. We gather up the materials, take them to the factories, and then they are fabricated and we distribute them throughout the world to the points of consumption.

"And so the nation has interested itself in a continuous efficient, uninterrupted flow of rail transportation, as I say, for the last 55 years. At the present time and since 1926, railroad labor disputes have been adjusted under a federal law known as the Railway Labor Act. That law was the result of trial and error over a period of some 32 or 33 years preceding its enactment. We feel, and I think it is generally agreed, that the Railway Labor Act is perfection in the orderly processes of maintaining satisfactory labor relations in a large industry essentially necessary to the welfare of the nation. That law provides an obligation, enforceable in the courts, of making and maintaining collective bargaining contracts and the settlement of disputes arising under such contracts through conference, negotiation, federal mediation, voluntary arbitration, and finally by the intervention of the President of the United States through an inquiry to be carried out by a Presidential Commission, so that the nation may be informed of the merits and the facts of any controversy that might threaten to interrupt the essential life's blood of our industrial machine. That law has worked well. It has assured and provided to the nation a continuous flow of these essential services, until just recently when some people who perhaps do not understand the difficulties of dealing with labor relations have undertaken to interfere with the orderly processes of that machinery.

"To state the situation concretely, briefly and directly, the railroad workers of this country, numbering in excess of a million, in September of 1942 served legal notice for upward revisions in their wage scales of 20 cents an hour, with a basic minimum of 70 cents an hour. In due course, conferences were held upon a nationwide scale, mediation ensued. Voluntary arbitration was not available because unacceptable. In due course the President of the United States intervened according to his statutory duty under Section 10 of the Railway Labor Act, and he appointed a commission of three to investigate the merits of the controversy over requested upward revision in wages.

"Two outstanding, eminent economists were appointed to membership on that Board and the third member was an outstanding, reputable lawyer. The board began its public hearing in the federal court rooms in the city of Chicago on the first day of last March. Railroad workers and managers were summoned under Presidential powers to appear and give testimony under oath in regard to the merits of the controversy. Forty-four days of public hearing in the nature of a trial were consumed by that board in hearing the controversy, and 6,338 pages of testimony and argument were submitted at that hearing by the parties; 471 exhibits, many of them voluminous, were submitted in that case. Economists were employed by the unions, as well as the utilization of our own staff services. It might be said, conservatively, that we introduced two truckloads of statistical material exploring and examining the facts in all of the social and economic aspects of that case. An equally comprehensive presentation of material was made by the opposition.

"On the 7th day of May, the board went into executive session, and on the 24th day of May the Presidential Commission filed with the President of the United States a comprehensive report awarding to the railroad workers of the nation an increase in their basic wage rates of eight cents an hour, retroactive to February 1, 1943. It was provided in the recommendations of the commission to the President that the back pay or the retroactive pay would be paid in war bonds amounting to $85,000,000 in order that it could not be said that any inflationary results might flow from the distribution of such sums to the workers of the nation. The total increase in wages, exclusive of the retroactive compensation, was $205,000,000, which the railroad workers of the nation had won.

"In the report submitted to the President these learned and outstanding gentlemen, specialists in the field in which they were working, said that in their judgment the general increase of eight cents an hour was the minimum non-inflationary increase that the nations railroad workers were entitled to receive, because thousands of them were suffering under sub-standard living wages; 120,000 received wages of 46 cents an hour or less; 544,000 received wages of 70 cents an hour or less, and 553,000 received wages above 70 cents an hour. The board said that in addition they were awarding the increase because these workers had established that they were suffering from a gross inequity developed in the calendar years of 1941 and 1942, or the period of the war, because railroad workers, operating under federal machinery, had not been able to progress as rapidly in the determination of their wage demands as other workers had progressed during that period of time, and the railroad workers of the nation had only succeeded in raising their basic wage levels on the average 10 cents an hour, while all other industrial workers of the nation, 30,000,000, had raised their basic wages, the straight time average hourly rate, during that period, on an average of 18.4 cents per hour. And if non-manufacturing industrial workers were excluded and only the manufacturing industrial workers were taken, they had raised their wages in the two calendar years just mentioned 21 cents an hour above the weighted straight time average hourly rate of 73½ cents per hour received by the one million plus of the nations railroad workers. The board concluded that if we were to go on with the orderly disposition of industrial controversies over wages and conditions of employment, such delay must not operate to the disadvantage of the workers of the nation.

"On the 27th day of May the President of our great nation appealed to your speaker to accept the decision of that board, because we were of the opinion it was inadequate and had so indicated our disappointment. But, as good citizens in a time of war, anxious to do everything humanly possible to contribute our bit to the successful defense of the nation, we capitulated and accepted the request of the President and regarded the controversy as closed. We arranged a conference with the managers of the nations railroads for New York City on the 23rd of June, to execute formal contracts and make effective the changes in our wage schedules to implement the recommendation of the board and the expressed wishes of the President of the United States.

"And lo and behold, out of a clear sky on the morning of the 23rd day of June, at the time we were to assemble in the conference room to execute the contract, Judge Vinson issued an edict setting aside the eight-cent increase—no notice, no conference, no previous indication that any such action would be taken—very brief, terse, 350 words, declaring that the increase in wages granted the nations railroad workers was inflationary and should not become effective.

"Some four or five days following the 23rd of June Director Vinson issued an opinion in support of his decision, and in that opinion the director said that we could get no further increase in pay because we had received in December of 1941, 12 months prior to the enactment of the stabilization law and seven months before the promulgation of the Little Steel Formula, an increase of 15 per cent, and we were only hereafter entitled to enjoy an adjustment in sub-standard living wages, with an immediate tapering off of inter-related job classifications, and that by comparison with sound, tested bracket rates within our own industry—we could not compare our wage levels with other industries of the nation.

"Now we were engaged in a national dispute and every one of our industries are in the pot. Fifty years of collective bargaining has more or less standardized our wages and we are unable, even though we are 21 cents an hour below all other industrial workers of the nation, to correct such gross inequities under the basic stabilization law of the nation.

"Well, that was bad enough, but that is only half the story. The railroad corporations of this country now are making the greatest profits they have ever made in the history of our nation. Last year, after the payment of all operating expenses and taxes, they wound up with a clear profit of a billion and a half dollars. Yet we are told that three and a half millions, representing the nations railroad workers and their families, rendering the most important service, loyally and patriotically and devotedly cannot enjoy part of their own creation to relieve the terrific pressure being exerted against them to make both ends meet in a rising war time economy; but if the money remains in the coffers of the railroad corporations it is non-inflationary; if it is distributed to the families of a million plus railroad workers it is inflationary.

"Well, I agree that it would be inflationary in one sense: it would inflate the stomachs of these poor workers of the nations railroads, and that is about all it would inflate.

"I dont know where we are going when we have one man who, without examining one scintilla of the evidence in the case, without reading one page of the testimony, without any notice, hearing or previous warning, out of his wisdom, notwithstanding a signed declaration of two eminent economists who heard the case, that the increase would be non-inflationary, presumes, by the stroke of a pen and the writing of a terse message, to hold that it would upset the national economy if the workers were permitted to enjoy an adjustment of a gross inequity that everybody admits.

"Now, my good friends, that is a dangerous method of dealing with the workers of this nation, and that is a dangerous method of dealing with labor relations, and if it is persisted in it will destroy the last vestige of orderly determination of controversies between workers and management of industry.

"Can you imagine, after 55 years of historical developments, spending $100,000 of our money and 44 days in public hearings, winning an impartial Presidential Commission's decision, that it is fair and in the best interests of the future stability of the nation's labor relations to handle the situation in that way?

"Well, we have been since the 23rd day of June holding conferences with everybody in Washington. We have appealed to the President, but so far we have not been able to get an adjustment of this controversy.

"Our situation is desperate, or I would not be here this morning. Our people are revolting against the organizations because they say that as leaders we are no damned good, we don't get results for them. CIO and the Mine Workers District 50 are promising the world with a fence around it. In their desperation they seek relief from any source. Thousands have left our industry. We are on the verge of a most chaotic condition in railroad transportation. Today we are short 100,000 workers to properly man the services of our industry. Our turnover is at a rate exceeding 100 per cent annually of the total working force.

"In the twelve months ending with June of 1943, the present year, according to the official report of the Railroad Retirement Board, we actually employed 1,340,000 new railroad workers not heretofore associated with or attached to the railroad industry to maintain a total working force of 1,350,000—10,000 less than a total 100 per cent turnover in our working force in 12 months.

"What have the managers been doing in order to meet this desperate manpower situation occasioned by this upset in wage adjustment procedures and to bring a vital war industry into line with general wages paid in other industries of the nation? They have gone out and have hired schoolboys 14 and 15 years of age to run the nation's railroads. And right now the War Manpower Commission and railroad managers are putting on the pressure to let these children work in the industry after school hours. Heretofore, because of the hazardous nature of the industry, no person could get a job under 21 years of age without their guardians or their parents signing a release from all future liability in case of personal injury or death. Some states are permitting them to do it. I learned from our good friend, Commissioner Moriarty in the State of Massachusetts, that he has stood steadfast against the exploitation of school children below 18 years of age.

"But that is not half the story. Through the ingenuity of our managers and some sympathetic government representatives, they have gone south of the border, to a sub-standard living condition nation in relation to our own, and have imported thousands of Mexican Nationals under contract and put them to work on the nation's railroads at these starvation wages. That's bad, not because they are Mexicans, but because we go to a country having half the living standards that we enjoy, because we cannot get domestic labor to work for the starvation wages that one of America's outstanding industries is paying.

"Well, as I say, that's bad. But here is the prize package. Now Mr. Henry Stimson, our Honorable Secretary of War, has called upon the Manpower Commissioner, the Honorable Mr. McNutt, to issue the necessary regulations and instructions to permit the employment of prisoners of war on the nation's railroads. My God, my friends! Railroadng is a most delicate operation. We carry on in the day and in the night. By split seconds our mechanism and our human working force must operate with the accuracy of a fine watch. It requires high type, responsible, devoted workers. Otherwise, if one operation goes amiss the whole machine brings disaster.

"We only need to look to what happened in Philadelphia, when the lives of 80 of our people were snuffed out.

"We are doing a heroic job with the old equipment that we have. We can't get any more, and in this year of 1943 we will handle double the total volume of railroad freight traffic that we handled in 1939 and we will do it this year with only 32 per cent more workers—a 100 per cent increase in production with a 32 per cent increase in working force—the greatest achievement by an old, established industry in the history of the nation.

"We can't go on. We can't operate the nation's railroads with school children, with Mexican Nationals who know nothing of our operations, and with prisoners of war. I can't get the reasoning of one who would turn loose a Nazi soldier, skilled in demolition practices under the Fuehrer, to run amuck on the nation's railroads. For security reasons I should not mention the possibility of destroying the lives of thousands of our people, and millions of dollars in property by just a slight readjustment of our intricate mechanisms.

"We have said that we will resist this—not in our own interests but in the interests of maintaining a steady flow of transportation to the nation and to our boys at the front.

"We have reached an impasse. We have gone through all the machinery for 13 months; we have spent $100,000 of our money; we have won the decision of a Presidential Commission, and we are denied the opportunity to level off industrial wages generally—not completely but only partially.

"I agree with the report of the Resolutions Committee telling you here this morning and late yesterday that it is a most dangerous practice to permit the resolution of these controversies by the exercise of the power of one man who does not even hear the case, a man sheltered in the vacuum of an office, a man who does not understand, by previous training or by facts available the underlying, deep-seated fundamental principles dictating wage decisions.

"Our people are demanding that we put out a strike ballot. We are conscious of our national responsibilities. We shall do nothing that will in any way obstruct the nation's war effort. But, on the same consideration, we cry out loudly now against those methods that we resist on the battlefronts of the nation. We ask for the democratic process. We will abide while the nation's welfare is concerned, come what may, from the operation of those processes.

"I have taken more time than I intended, but we are suffering from one of the greatest injustices and one of the most arbitrary and capricious acts that has ever been perpetrated upon a large group of patriotic and loyal devoted citizens in a most vital industrial operation of the nation in a time of war. That explains why I take the time of the convention, because I can well appreciate that unless these conditions are rapidly adjusted, chaos impends in the machineries that have been developed for the determination of the wages of the working people of this nation that will seriously retard the best interests of the nation to carry on in the most efficient manner in this time of grave national concern."

Railroads, Dual Union (Utility Workers)—(1942, p. 597) The attention of the convention was directed to a dual union organizing railroad workers. Interested international unions were requested to combat this organization known as the Utility Workers and bring about its dissolution. Matter referred to the Railway Employees Department of the A. F. of L.

Railway Employees (Street and Electric) vs. Machinists—(see: Machinists)

Rationing (Price Control and) (see: Price Control)

Reaffiliation Rights—(1944, p. 534) Res. 45, unanimously adopted, follows:

Whereas—The International Typographical Union has reaffiliated with the American Federation of Labor with all "rights heretofore possessed" by the International Typographical Union reaffirmed and reestablished as though no breach had taken place in the affiliation," and

Whereas—The same factors that caused the breach, and the agreement on the basis of reaffiliation (ratified by the 1943 Convention of the American Federation of Labor and the membership of the International Typographical Union) may apply to other unions not now affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, therefore, be it

Resolved—That the above mentioned basis of reaffiliation stand as the basis of reaffiliation of any other international union which may desire to take advantage thereof.

Rearmament Problems—(1952, p. 102) In its report to the convention, the Executive Council included the following statements:

The very fact that the present crisis is not of a temporary character makes it all the more imperative that the rearmament effort of the democratic nations be pursued in such a way that the economy of the free world is not unduly disturbed and deranged. This danger must be especially avoided insofar as it affects the tasks of satisfying the essential needs of the population. Hungry, discontented or disaffected people cannot produce the fullest efficiency. Especially because this is a prolonged emergency, must the vital functions of a free society in the field of social progress and in the protection of human liberties be preserved and promoted.

It would be suicidal folly to assume that social progress as such could render superfluous or make unnecessary adequate rearmament by the democratic world. Social progress can certainly be of great aid in exposing and cutting the ground from under the demagogic Communist fifth column and strengthening the national morale in the free countries. But decent living standards, good working conditions and social progress are themselves no answer to the menace or protection against the power of the gigantic Soviet war machine.

There is no simple formula for, or easy solution of, the burdens of rearmament. These burdens are real. Nor is there any magic shortcut to the blessings of social progress. The issue we face is not one of guns versus butter or butter versus guns. Today, we do not have the freedom of choice. We must never forget that while it takes two to wage peace, it takes only one to wage war. That is the actual situation we face. We must face it without fear or illusions. Without any butter, it would be very hard for the democracies to assure adequate and efficient production of guns. On the other hand, without any guns to protect them, it would be impossible for the men, women, and children of the democracies to have and enjoy their symbolic butter in a world weighed down and harassed by the increasing threat of Russian aggression and Communist enslavement. Because of the very nature of this menace, the free world must find the necessary ways and means to assure itself both guns and butter.

The international free labor movement must face the complicated and difficult task of combining the unavoidable and absolutely urgent rearmament effort with the indispensable preservation of social progress. Toward this end, free labor must insist on an adequate voice and representation in the defense effort. Furthermore, there must be an equitable sharing of the burdens of the costly rearmament program. We must vigorously reject all reactionary moves to use the rearmament effort as a pretext for opposing further social progress or as an excuse for weakening or even wiping out the benefits of labor legislation and social security already attained.

European Democracies — (1952, p. 104) We cannot plead too strongly for greater rearmament efforts by the European democracies to the highest level that their economies will bear. In making this plea, we do not seek the slightest diminution of military effort or reduction of any other contribution by our own country toward the security of the free peoples, the prevention of war, and the preservation of world peace. We fully realize that the Western European nations themselves do not yet have sufficient strength or military forces and resources to beat back the Soviet armed forces, should they be hurled at democratic Europe. To deter and help assure the defeat of such Soviet madness, we propose that the strengthening of Western European military forces be accompanied by an increase in the number of United States fighting men stationed in free Europe.

Reciprocal Trade Agreements — (1943, pp. 85, 384) The convention adopted the following report:

As the reciprocal trade agreement laws permitting the President to reach trade agreements by negotiations with other nations were due to expire on June 12, 1943, H.J. Res. 111 (Public No. 66) was introduced on April 2, 1942. A statement was made by the American Federation of Labor supporting the renewal of the trade agreements and the resolution passed the House on May 13, extending the President's authority to two years instead of three years as requested. The Senate finally agreed to the House Act on June 2 and the President approved it on June 7, 1943.

(1948, p. 166) E.C. reported support of proposal to extend the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act for three years as proposed by the President. Bill as finally enacted extended the Act for one year.

(P. 450) Convention unanimously adopted committee report and recommendations as follows:

We recommend that the American Federation of Labor support the principle of this Act. The Reciprocal Trade Agreements program offers a method for future looking toward the further freeing of international trade from restrictive barriers. However, in some instances the duty reductions already made have reached the point where further reductions would endanger the employment in particular industries exposed to competition from abroad.

In supporting the trade agreements program, we recognize the need of safeguarding American labor in some industries especially where wages are a relatively heavy factor in the cost of production against competition that threatens to undermine our labor standards. Then, too, we would urge that in the process of reaching Reciprocal Trade Agreements affecting the labor standards of our workers that Labor be accorded an appropriate and adequate opportunity of presentation and effectual representation.

(1949, pp. 210, 464) Previous position of the A. F. of L. reaffirmed by the E.C. and approved by convention.

(1950, p. 27) Res. 21 called for support of the reciprocal trade agreements program of the government, and urged that it be pushed with vigor, unimpeded by partisan political obstacles and . . . special interests.

(P. 474) As was done on previous occasions, your committee recommends approval of the principle underlying reciprocal trade agreements.

The reciprocal trade agreements program offers a method toward freeing of international trade from restrictive barriers. However, in some instances the duty reductions already made have reached the point where further reductions would endanger the employment in particular industries exposed to competition from abroad.

In support of the trade agreements program, we recognize the need of safeguarding American labor in some industries especially where wages are a relatively heavy factor in the cost of production against competition that threatens to undermine our labor standards. Then, too, we would urge that in the process of reaching reciprocal trade agreements affecting the labor standards of our workers, Labor be accorded an appropriate and adequate opportunity of presentation and effectual representation.

(1951, p. 115) Imports in 1951 have been at the highest point in history and have averaged about a billion dollars per month. But for the shipment of arms and military equipment under the North Atlantic Treaty and of materials to help the European armament industry, our imports would continue to balance our exports. This balance of exports and imports is a desirable goal, but we must not overlook the dangers to our labor standards from competitive imports. In some instances the products that compete in our domestic market are manufactured abroad at costs far below our own because of the low wage payments prevailing in some countries. Such imports exert a heavy pressure upon the wage structure of the industries that experience the competition.

While we welcome increased imports of non-competitive products (which represent about two-thirds of our total imports) we must insist that the imports that do compete shall compete on a fair basis. We seek competitive parity with imports in our own market.

(P. 527) The experience of a number of our affiliates which have been faced with a rising volume of competitive imports has been one of dissatisfaction with the administration of the Trade Agreements Act.

In extending this law, which was first placed on the statute books in 1934, Congress this time attached far-reaching amendments designed primarily to afford a remedy against injury to our own producers which might result from reduced tariff rates.

One of the amendments was a liberalization of the escape clause and a more explicit definition of injury as well as enumeration of the factors that must be taken into account in determining whether an injury has been incurred or whether it threatens.

Under the new law, a decline in employment or production (which may result from reduced hours of the established work schedule) must be considered as evidence of injury. This is a new provision and is the first time that employment and wages have been recognized by trade agreements law as economic elements that may be adversely affected by international competition.

The new law also reenacted the so-called "peril point" amendment, which calls for a finding by the Tariff Commission, before a new trade agreement is negotiated, of the level below which a duty should not be cut. This is a further safeguard against unnecessary injury from trade agreements.

Then, too, the new law provides a remedy against wage competition as a way of underselling domestic producers by foreign products. The American Federation of Labor cannot condone wage competition from abroad when we have made elimination of wage competition in this country a cardinal principle of our legislation. It would be folly to expose the labor standards we have guarded so jealously at home to the undermining effects of unfair competition from abroad.

Finally, Congress amended the trade agreement bill by requiring the abrogation of trade agreements with all Communist dominated countries and withdrawal of all trade agreement concessions accruing indirectly to those countries from our trade agreements with other countries through the operation of the most-favored nation clause.

We note with satisfaction the recent action of the State Department in carrying out this provision of the law, including the announcement of its determination to withdraw entirely from our trade agreement with Czechoslovakia.

Your committee also directs attention to the levying of a tax on imports based on foreign values in foreign currency converted into dollars. In many instances this basis of evaluation gives the foreign goods an additional price advantage over the products of our own workers. Then, too, we oppose efforts now being made to abolish the American selling price as a basis of valuation in the instances where it is now employed; indeed we urge extension of this principle of evaluation.

(1953, pp. 192, 500) In this portion of its report the Executive Council summarizes legislative developments in the first session of the 83rd Congress relating to tariff and trade legislation.

In the closing days of the session, the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Program, whose broad purposes have been supported by the American Federation of Labor from the outset, was extended until June 12, 1954. In the meantime, a special commission is to conduct a review of U.S. trade and tariff policies.

Your committee notes that this pending new study and review of the tariff and trade policies of the U.S. comes in the wake of several recent studies of this subject. An especially comprehensive study was recently conducted by the Presidential Trade Policy Board. It resulted in a report published last February known as the Bell Report. A special report was also issued last summer by a Special Presidential Committee on the subject of trade and exchange problems in the dollar and sterling areas. Pursuant to Senate Resolution 25, a Public Advisory Committee was appointed by the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency to study foreign investments and foreign trade. All of these investigations are preliminary to the Congressional action on the trade agreement policy anticipated in the coming session.

Our trade policies should serve our national interests and help, rather than hinder, the continued expansion of production and employment, both at home and abroad. The foremost objectives of such policy should be the maintenance of full employment and the increase in real income. While we should continue our established policy aimed toward a steady expansion of economic activity and international trade, we must also insist on safeguards needed to prevent disruptive dislocation of employment at home.

(Pp. 404, 649) Res. 35:

Whereas—It never was the intention of the reciprocal trade treaty policy of the Federal Government to permit foreign made products to be imported in this country under circumstances that will result in complete ruination of competitive American industry, and

Whereas—Such a situation has been and still is developing in the motorcycle industry as shown by the following facts: The United Kingdom, West Germany and Italy are shipping into this country motorcycles which sell for an average of 30 to 35% less than comparable American made products; this price differential results in part from the fact that the average wage rate in the automotive industry in the United Kingdom and other foreign countries is 63 cents an hour or less, while the average wage rate in motorcycle manufacturing in this country for workers who are members of the International Union, United Automobile Workers of America, A. F. of L., is $2.13 per hour, plus generally superior working conditions and social benefits, and

Whereas—This price differential is also due in part to the devaluation of the value of the English pound by approximately 30%. Such price differential has resulted in the loss of 40% of sales of one company, Harley-Davidson Motor Company of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, during the current manufacturing season, which loss of sales is directly accounted for by the sales made in this country of the English and other foreign made motorcycles. Such loss of sales has also resulted in loss of jobs by 1500 American working men and women at the Harley-Davidson Company, and

Whereas—In addition to the unfair competitive advantage enjoyed by the imported English and other foreign made motorcycles, the British Empire except Canada, has made it impossible for American manufacturers to sell their products in the British Empire with the result that while such British made product is freely sold here to the ruination of the American working man, American made products of the same type are excluded from the British market, and

Whereas — The Wisconsin State Federation of Labor in convention assembled in the City of Green Bay, Wisconsin, during the week of August 17, 1953, went on record as being vigorously opposed to the granting of any tariff or import duty preferences which will permit continuation of the intolerable condition described above, and as supporting any reasonable changes in such import duty or import quota regulations which will permit American-made motorcycles to compete on a fair and equal basis with English and other foreign made motorcycles for American sales, therefore, be it

Resolved—That the delegates to the 72nd Convention of the American Federation of Labor meeting in St. Louis, Missouri, go on record concurring in the sentiments expressed in this resolution, and be it further

Resolved—That this resolution be referred to the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor with a view that it investigate the possibility of working out a cooperative program between management and Labor in order to solve this problem.

Your committee considered jointly Resolutions No. 35 and No. 42 and No. 53 and No. 129, and expresses sympathy with the situation complained of and recommends reference of them to the officers of the A. F. of L. for study and consideration and to render every possible aid to the organizations concerned.

(1954, p. 142) The E.C. reported failure of passage of proposed legislation on reciprocal trade agreements, and concluded with the statement:

The American Federation of Labor has long favored a maximum of foreign trade that can be carried on without undermining our own wage structure and working conditions and without causing unemployment in our own ranks. We continue to adhere to this position and call for proper vigilance in upholding these standards against foreign competition that derives its cost advantage from lower wages and inferior working conditions that may prevail abroad. We are therefore concerned with practical and workable administrative remedies that will assure correction of injurious competition without unnecessarily restricting imports. Protection should be extended only to the point needed to overcome unfairness of import competition. However, to that extent we must go if we are to preserve the standards to which we are dedicated.

(P. 584) The Executive Council has summarized developments which led to the adoption in the past session of Congress of a one-year extension of reciprocal trade legislation. Although the President's Commission on Foreign Economic Policy made broad recommendations for modification of tariff legislation, Congressional consideration was confined to the Commission's proposal for a three-year extension of the reciprocal trade program. After rejecting bills which would have all but killed the reciprocal trade program, the Congress compromised on a one-year extension of the Trade Agreements Act. The issue will therefore again be considered in the next session of Congress.

In furtherance of our basic policy of seeking to obtain expansion of international commerce and removal of barriers to world trade, our Federation should continue to support the reciprocal trade program. At the same time, every effort must be made to be certain that the nation's trade and tariff policies safeguard the employment opportunities of American workers and protect labor standards, both in our own country and abroad.

Records and Transcriptions, Tariff on—(1952, pp. 378, 520) Res. 138:

Whereas—The import of transcriptions recorded and manufactured outside of the United States at lower labor costs and at sub-standard conditions and also in many cases by non-union performers is constantly on the increase, and

Whereas—American labor standards are measured by unfair competition from foreign imports, and

Whereas—These foreign made transcriptions compete with transcriptions made and used in this country and which use actors, singers and announcers who are members of the A. F. of L., and

Whereas—The use of these foreign made recordings in this country poses a serious problem of reduction in employment opportunities for A. F. of L. members, and

Whereas—Protective measures and a protective tariff are essential to protect the continued employment of A. F. of L. members, therefore, be it

Resolved—That this 1952 A. F. of L. Convention go on record as urging the Congress and Executive of the United States to take immediate steps toward protective and remedial legislation to combat the inflow of foreign transcriptions recorded and manufactured outside of the United States (taking into consideration specific regulatory provisions to allow a certain limited importation of transcribed programs of international cultural exchange value).

Recreation—(1924, p. 80)—The A. F. of L. again desires to call attention to its report of last year and the resolutions adopted by the convention on the subject of constructive recreation in relation to the needs of working people but especially in relation to the children of America.

The report and resolutions both endorsed the Community Service of the Playground and Recreation Association of America which is striving to aid cities and towns everywhere to do their full duty in respect to the establishment and proper administration of playgrounds, athletic fields and community centers for young and old.

Since the 1923 convention, 11 international and state labor bodies opened their convention doors to a speaker from that association who pointed out the national need of improvements and extension of community recreation provisions and the ways in which organized labor could help.

The convention again endorses this valuable movement and commends it as worthy of commanding the hearty cooperation of all our affiliated bodies.

In taking part in such work organized labor is recognizing the fundamental value of play in the right development of child life, physically, socially, aesthetically and in its training for sound citizenship. Through supervised recreation we can help to reduce the volume of disease, nervous breakdown and moral delinquency in the U.S., thereby in return cutting down the enormous costs of public care of the victims of these troubles.

In respect to the needs of the workers for wholesome recreation we call attention to the fact that so much of industry as carried on today within doors, requires the utilization of only the small muscles for the most part and consists of minute processes, all of which means that on the job the worker gets little sunshine and fresh air, little exercise of the major muscles of the body, the lungs and heart and that he derives meager, if any, creative satisfaction from his hours of daily toil.

The results of all this are revealed in the mortality statistics for the so-called degenerative diseases of heart, liver, stomach, nerves and kidneys. They are altogether too high and unnecessarily so.

Workers must take more recreation during the greater leisure which they have gained through the shorter work day. Here is their great opportunity to conserve and increase their health, vitality and efficiency and at the same time get more joy out of life. They should make use of every community facility that exists in their cities and actively aid in their extension and perfection until all the people of all ages are served thereby.

(1925, p. 78) The last two conventions have endorsed the work of the Playground and Recreation Association of America and the E.C. in its May meeting endorsed in principle the program of fundamentals advocated by this association. This program and the whole problem and opportunity which leisure presents to wage earners were referred to the committee on education for study and future report.

Even first efforts to survey the scope of the problem and find sources of information and agencies concerned, reveal the ramifications involved and the fundamental importance of the undertaking. Recreation, or more properly, re-creation, is essential to completeness of life. Play is something more than a pastime—for the child it is a creative method by which one learns about things and people; for older persons it combines imagination, pleasure and the satisfaction of individual desires and aspiration. But for all ages play is necessary to balance and for re-creation, and play should make it possible for every individual to meet the threefold needs of his nature—physical, mental, and spiritual. Constructive use of leisure is preparation for creative work.

Our modern municipal life through both its work and its home environment makes necessary collective planning and endeavor to make available opportunities for recreation. The obviously primary steps are to provide school and municipal playgrounds and recreation centers. These should be provided both for present needs and with regard to probable future population, growth and city development. In addition to planning for the material side, there must be centers through which recreation activities are organized and directed. This phase of the problem brings us to consideration of the primary elements of city life. Modern cities are demonstrations of our mechanical triumphs, material progress and quantity production. But they have lost unity of living and coherence of group life. Size forbids a community center in the real sense. Unless there is some way for people to do together the same things, think of the same things, or together to consider mutual problems, there can be no real spirit of community.

The problem divides into two main parts: One providing recreation opportunities that will counteract the effects of the modern city, and the other looking to future developments of community life.

With the rapidly increasing production of electric power and the perfecting of long-distance transmission technique so that distance is practically a negligible factor, a revolutionary development is initiated. Power and machine tools will be as available on the farm as in the town. The farm will apply the practices of a machine shop and the factory may be located in green meadows. We are in the beginning of a technical revolution that will work as far-reaching reorganization of society as did the industrial revolution of the eighteenth century.

In order to meet this transition in a constructive way we must have all of the facts of industrial and social life upon which to base recreation plans. For recreation in the largest sense concerns not only leisure hours, but the spirit and surroundings under which we live and work. There are groups and undertakings concerned with city planning, regional planning, garden cities, that are now developing policies and plans that will determine future developments.

Recreation is only one of the uses for which leisure may be utilized.

There are innumerable cultural opportunities which people of all groups desire and need. To realize our democratic ideals, we must provide equality for such opportunities for all. This involves planning the material side of municipal growth as well as for cultural institutions. Much of the municipal planning has been left to commercial interests. More recently we have seen the necessity of planning on a basis that comprehends the whole life of a region that possesses a unity of fundamental elements.

With material and industrial development should go the enrichment of the lives of the human agents. In addition to planning for efficient development, Labor is anxious that there should be thought for beauty of surroundings in living and industrial environment. We want our community life to have balance, fitness, purpose, and culture that can grow only out of intelligent control over the environment and forces of life. We realize that we need to conserve natural resources and beauty as the essential environment for civilized life which comprehends both work and leisure.

The E.C. has directed the committee on education to study this whole problem.

(P. 254) Playgrounds are essential, so that the children may have ample space in all communities, to spend their leisure time in a way that will help them build up their bodies, so that we may become a strong and healthy nation.

The Recreation and Playground Association of America was established for the purpose of aiding the different municipalities to create proper recreation facilities for the children and adults, and as this association is doing much good in promoting such work in this country, we recommend that the 45th Annual Convention of the A. F. of L. go on record in endorsing the work that the Recreation and Playground Association is doing, and instruct the E.C. to cooperate with said association, and have circular letters mailed to all affiliated central and federated bodies, advising them to cooperate with the recreation and playground movement to establish proper recreational facilities in their communities.

Whereas—The American Federation of Labor has recognized the need for a public relations program, and

Whereas—It is generally recognized that recreational programs are an important factor in any public relations program because they provide one of the best avenues of personal contact with the general public, as well as an opportunity to tell labor's story, therefore, be it

Resolved—That the American Federation of Labor, assembled in convention in Cincinnati, Ohio, in November, 1948, instruct its officers to explore the feasibility of developing a recreational program for its members and report to the next convention their findings as a part of its public relations program.

(P. 461) Convention approved the resolution and recommended that city central bodies and state federations be invited to submit their views and experiences to the officers of the A. F. of L.

(1949, pp. 43, 484) Res. 21:

Whereas—The present mechanized age and its increased leisure time demands comprehensive planning for recreation, and

Whereas—Organized recreation opportunities are essential to the individual and to society in the modern community, as are services in the health, education, welfare and related fields, and

Whereas—Recreational facilities, public and private, should be planned and distributed on a neighborhood, district, regional, state and nation-wide basis to provide maximum recreational opportunities and services for all age groups without discrimination, and

Whereas—Adequate staffs of qualified personnel should be employed by each agency, organization or group responsible for recreational services so as to get maximum use of existing facilities, and

Whereas—The federal, state, county and city governments should enact appropriate legislation to make it possible for every community to plan, finance and administer an adequate public recreation program, therefore, be it

Resolved—That the 68th convention of the American Federation of Labor go on record as urging the federal, state, county and city governments to expand their recreation programs by enacting legislation which will provide for the financing and carrying out of extensive planning; establishment of necessary commissions and departments; the training of personnel, and the coordination of all public and voluntary agencies and groups having recreation interests, resources or responsibilities.

(1952, pp. 255, 492) The A. F. of L. reported support for legislation designed to make available a portion of the revenue received from national forests for the maintenance and operation of recreational facilities. The convention authorized continued support for such proposals.

Red Cross and Labor—(1929, p. 107) As the agency upon which our government and our people rely for sympathetic, highly trained, effective aid and help in every national disaster where the health and lives of our citizenship are threatened the American Red Cross maintains a position in our body politic to which none other is comparable. Not only is its unique service nationally extended but in times of great world disaster it functions as an international source of succor and relief.

As a matter of official record we give herewith a resolution adopted by the delegates of Chapters of the American Red Cross at the final plenary session of the eighth convention on April 25, 1929:

"Whereas—The men and women who perform the nation's work in the factories, in the mines and in the manifold trades and industries support the services of the American National Red Cross locally, nationally and internationally through annual membership, and from time to time utilize the Red Cross as their agency for extending sympathy and substantial aid to their fellow men and women in all ranks of life stricken by disaster; and

"Whereas—The A. F. of L., the representative of organized labor of the nation, extends the invitation of the Red Cross at each Roll Call period to the great mass of working men and women and their families through the channels of organized labor; and

"Whereas—The A. F. of L. has assured the American Red Cross of its continued support; therefore, be it

"Resolved—That the delegates of Chapters of the American National Red Cross assembled in convention from all parts of the United States and its territories express to the A. F. of L. and to all its affiliated organizations and to the individual workers, its most heartfelt thanks for the moral and practical support which has been given to it and which it feels assured it may depend upon at all times."

Refugees, Displacement of American Workers by (also see: Immigration)

(1940, p. 492) The problems of American workers who were being displaced or denied employment as a result of the Refugee Migration Act was presented to the convention in a resolution which called on the Executive Council of the A. F. of L. "to take this matter up with the Secretary of State for the purpose of seeking a cancellation of the . . . Act, or failing therein, to seek certain regulations that will prevent the employment of such refugees to the exclusion of American citizens." The resolution was referred to the E.C. for action.

Relief (also see: Prevailing Wage; Woodrum Amendment, W.P.A.)

Activities and Accomplishments—(1944, p. 276) American Federation of Labor organizations are cooperating with their respective Community Chests or National War Fund Committees and American Red Cross Chapters in more than a thousand communities throughout the land. Four hundred fifty-two central labor bodies have organized Labor League Committees with a total membership of 2,523 men and women officially designated by their central body.

Of this total, 1,902 committee members carry the responsibility of helping to organize and conduct fund-raising campaigns for their respective Community War Chests and American Red Cross Chapters. Hundreds of committee members, including some of those engaged in campaign activities, are organizing and helping to carry on Community Service programs, a new field for organized labor in which we attempt to develop the benefit of available community services in each community for the membership of our unions and all working people, and particularly to help solve the problems and meet the needs of demobilized veterans.

Greater respect and consideration for Labor's opinion, attitude and abilities are evidenced everywhere. From the public relations point of view the increased prestige and respect which have come to the American Federation of Labor as a result of its relief activities are not the least part of its achievements in this field. The American Federation of Labor's participation in community work has in many instances brought Labor for the first time into direct and friendly contact with elements to whom organized labor had previously been an almost unknown quantity. This first-hand knowledge and understanding of the aims and ideals of the A. F. of L., plus the widespread publicity that has been given to the League's work on behalf of the National War Fund and Community Chests, have been of immense value in helping to counteract the anti-Labor trend that has lately been evidenced in the reactionary press of the country.

Front-page articles in influential newspapers, advertisements of appreciation in Chest publications and daily papers, messages of appreciation on the radio, all reflect this general recognition of and respect for Labor's contribution to the welfare of the community. Further proof of Labor's new standing in the community can be found in the fact that there are already a number of significant instances where American Federation of Labor representatives have been elected chairmen of the community-wide campaigns, of budget committees, executive Committees, and boards of directors.

Support of Labor's war relief program by the Community War Chests of the country, and, since its formation, by the National War Fund, is part of the agreement of cooperation between these organizations and Labor's League for Human Rights that has recently been renewed for the third successive year. . . .

(P. 574) The report on Labor's relief activities reveals the very significant way in which unions have accepted responsibility for providing aid for fellow workers of invaded and bombed countries, assistance for refugees as well as help in rebuilding the free labor movement in the wake of armed forces. While we have repeatedly stated that Labor has a special stake in this war, our relief activities have given reality to that expression. Because workers have had full employment during this war, we have had incomes that enabled us to have the privilege of contributing generously to the victims of war as well as sharing in national responsibility to buy War Bonds. We have given out of our narrow reserves and given because we felt that human freedom is the most important thing in life.

Your committee recommends that the convention express its hearty approval of the wisdom and the constructive vision of our officials who have provided this channel for Labor to participate in the humanitarian activities which must follow war as well as contribute to the reconstruction of democratic institutions.

We recommend endorsement of the activities and urge our unions to continue generous contributions so that funds will be available to enable free trade unionists to revive their organization and renew their activities. As we have so often said free trade unions are essential to democracy and the revival of free unions in all countries can be our contribution to a free world.

(Disaster Victims)—(1953, pp. 443, 655). Res. 123:

Resolved—That the 72nd Convention of the American Federation of Labor request Congress to study and prepare a comprehensive legislative program to alleviate the misery of disaster victims and to grant aid to ravished areas devastated by tornados and other natural phenomena.

(Foreign Workers)—(1947, p. 187) Continuing our policy of aiding needy trade unionists, the American Federation of Labor has expended scores of thousands of dollars in providing food packages. Hungry and ailing workers on both sides of the "iron curtain" have thus been rescued from famine.

Through special voluntary contributions approximating $60,000 made by nearly a score of American Federation of Labor affiliates, hundreds of food packages have been sent every month to German trade unionists who are in direst need and who have suffered for years in Hitler's concentration camps for their loyalty and devotion to free trade unionism and democracy. During the summer we also provided $5,000 worth of food to the youth camps of the German free trade unions.

(Refugee)

(1954, p. 109) H.R. 8193, amending the Refugee Relief Act of 1953, passed Congress on August 16, 1954. Public Law 751, 83rd Congress.

The purpose of this Act is to make the existing allotments of special non-quota visas for Italian, Greek, and Dutch Nationals under the refugee or relative preference group according to current demand. It provides for exemption from the requirements of certificates of readmission in cases of eligible orphans; and permits refugees within the United States who would fear persecution on return to the country of birth, nationality and last residence as well as small groups of aliens brought from other American republics for internment to apply for adjustment of status prior to July 1, 1955.

Operations under the Refugee Relief Act were inaugurated on December 4, 1953, with the issuance of the first "relative preference" visas in Italy and Greece. The keen interest evidenced in the opportunity provided through this medium of the uniting of families is best described by its over-subscription. As of February 27, 1954, 2,815 approved "relative preference" petitions are already recorded for Greek beneficiaries, while such petitions approved for Italian nationals number 38,264.

This registered demand far exceeds the allotment of 2,000 for Greece and 15,000 for Italy under the "relative preference" provision of the Refugee Relief Act of 1953. On the other hand, the allocations of 45,000 visas for Italian refugees and 15,000 for Greek refugees remain undersubscribed at this time.

Conversely, the demand for "relative preferences" under the Netherlands allotment of 2,000 is very small, only 385 approved petitions being recorded for such nationals. A bilateral arrangement to permit a greater apportionment of these numbers to Dutch refugees from Indonesia and from the 1953 flood disaster is contained in the bill.

It appears highly desirable to bring this situation into better balance and an arrangement to achieve bilateral availability of numbers for persons in the three ethnic groups would appear to accomplish this purpose.

(P. 542) The Refugee Relief Act of 1953 was enacted in order to meet the immediate problem of permitting refugees from the Iron Curtain countries, as well as immigrants from nations with surplus populations, to enter the United States. Although recognizing some of its deficiencies, the American Federation of Labor supported the enactment of this legislation in the hope that its enactment would provide a haven to thousands of refugees who have fled from the Communist terror.

Unfortunately, restrictive provisions in the Act and incredibly bad administration have made the law almost totally ineffective. While the Act authorized admission of 214,000 persons, only a trickle of refugees have so far found asylum in the United States.

If the worthwhile purposes of the Refugee Relief Act are to be achieved, it is essential that the law be amended as quickly as possible to assure that the full number of refugees authorized by the Act are actually admitted to this country.

(1955, p. 126) The E.C. reported on proposed amendments to the Refugee Relief Act of 1953. This section of the report closed with the following:

The American Federation of Labor has been deeply concerned by the tragic failure of this legislation to achieve the very important purposes it was intended to accomplish. In part, the fault lies with excessively timid and over-legalistic administration of the law. In part, it may be due to certain deficiencies in the law itself which have become apparent after two years' experience with it. But whatever the reasons for the lack of success of the program, it is extremely important that it be put back on the right track at the earliest possible moment. Correction of any defects in the law itself and in its administration as soon as possible is necessary in order to save tens of thousands of refugees who have fled from the Communist terror from extreme hardship and disillusionment and to convince the peoples of the Free World of the unwavering sincerity of purpose of our nation.

Principles (also see: Soc. Sec.)

(1932, pp. 37, 320) It is unreasonable to expect that any program for stabilization will prevent all unemployment in the immediate future. Whatever degree of benefits we may derive from stabilization we shall need to be prepared to relieve the unemployed for years to come. Since we know that the unemployed will be in want through no fault of theirs, it is negligent and unstatesmanlike not to have advance federal as well as local programs which can promptly be made effective.

(1) Advance planning of public works. Although the proposal to provide advance planning of public works against cyclical unemployment has been under discussion for years and met with general approval, we were just as unprepared in the present emergency as in all previous crises. The federal agency to collect information on public works has not long been operative, but such information as was available was not promptly made the basis for action. The government has not yet developed the way to reduce the time-gap between authorization and actual construction which provides jobs. This was true even of the emergency program authorized in the last session of Congress. Although big problems are involved in getting construction projects under way, the administrative branch of the government should have the capacity and efficiency to make such public works programs serve the purpose of relief promptly. Men, women, and children have suffered from hunger and been forced to ask charity while projects providing work were delayed.

The lessons of this experience should be put to service by fixing the responsibility and development of the machinery for a program of public works to future periods of depression.

(2) Use of national credit for self-liquidating projects, for building homes for workers and other small income groups, for slum reclamation and similar undertakings. The federal government responsible for promoting national welfare should develop a program for borrowing on the national credit to finance such undertakings to provide jobs for those without sources of income, while at the same time increasing national wealth by providing the means for higher standards of living in the less advanced groups.

Planning the expansion and contraction of national credit should be a part of the whole undertaking of economic planning, based upon a reliable standard of economic and social soundness. The type of undertakings to be financed and details of construction work should be worked out in advance so as to further in balanced proportions the promotion of national welfare.

The only cure for unemployment is employment. Every relief plan gains in soundness as it approximates normal conditions of incomes from the creation of wealth needed by society. When industry breaks down, emergency construction undertakings will stimulate recovery.

To meet the tragedy of unemployment in any way but giving work is failure. But in this, the greatest human crisis of our time organized society has failed miserably to meet human needs. No payments of relief can fill man's need for creative work or maintain the self-respect that comes from meeting one's own responsibilities. But if work cannot be provided, relief payments can at least ward off starvation.

In the crisis of the last two years, however, relief, whether public or private, has been totally inadequate to meet the unprecedented need—even to ward off starvation. Millions have been plunged into poverty and despair, and our cities and counties have not provided enough to keep them in health and prevent physical deterioration.

Reports of the Children's Bureau, showing relief given in 125 cities, indicate that in August, 1931, the average relief grant per family was $17.49 per month and in August, 1932, $19.19. Even the higher 1932 amount provides less than $4.80 a week. This falls far short of the minimum allowance necessary for food alone. The U.S. Departments of Labor and Agriculture, after careful study, give $7.50 to $10 a week for a family of 5 (the average family) as the minimum emergency allowance for food which will preserve health; they note that even this emergency budget can only be continued for short periods without grave danger.

Our relief payments in the last year have provided on the average scarcely half this minimum allowance for food, leaving nothing whatever for clothing, rent, heat, carfare, or any other essentials. Thousands of families have lived on this pittance for long periods, often more than a year.

Slow starvation is gradually undermining physical and mental soundness among millions of families upon whom we have counted as the backbone of our citizenry. Medical authorities assert that we have not yet begun to see the human wreckage from this depression; we will feel it for years to come.

We do not minimize the effort made by thousands of our citizens to secure money for relief, both public and private. Many have given generously of time, money, energy. The first 8 months of this year, public and private relief amounted to $187,983,000 and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation added $35,000,000 in loans to states up to September 30. This year's relief bill will probably be at least $400,000,000 to $500,000,000. The amount given this year was 76% above last year. In both years public agencies have furnished over two-thirds of the relief, the proportion for both years being 69% public, 31% private (first 8 months).

Workers' wage and salary loss this year has been $25,000,000,000. Compared to this sum $500,000,000 of relief (one fiftieth) seems small indeed.

The lesson of the present depression shows us that we must establish adequate relief machinery. This includes a program to keep work-hours adjusted to work-time needed, measures to prevent wage-losses, measures to create additional work, unemployment insurance, adequate public relief, including a force of trained persons to distribute it. We have made much progress in our relief machinery since 1929, but this year we have a more difficult and serious situation.

It is obvious that an increasing proportion of relief funds must come from governmental appropriations. In view of the demands for reduction in governmental expenditures, it will take strong presentation of the social consequences involved and persistent and concerted pressure upon state legislatures and Congress to secure adequate appropriations. We urge union groups everywhere to take the initiative in pressing demands for the necessary relief appropriations. Appropriations should be generous in recognition of the rights of the persons concerned, and administration of the funds should be economical and intelligent, under local unified control in the hands of a trained personnel.

However generous public appropriations may be, they do not relieve private individuals from contributions in proportion to their resources. Over $100,000,000 came from private contributions this year—an equal or larger amount is needed this coming winter and next year to relieve need. Those who have large fortunes which could not have been accumulated except under the conditions which this nation provides, should give generously as a debt due to the nation and as an investment for the maintenance of our present institutions.

Remington Rand—(1940, p. 534) As a result of labor conflict between trade unions and Remington-Rand, Inc., a resolution was introduced into the convention recommending that the corporation be placed on the "We Don't Patronize List" and that all A. F. of L. be so advised. The resolution was referred to the Executive Council "with the request that it take up the question involved in the resolution with the Remington Rand, Inc., and failing of adjustment, report of the attitude of this concern be made to the trade union movement in general."

Rent Control (also see: Housing, O.P.A.)

(1942, p. 213) Rent is the largest single item next to food in the cost of living of American workers. When the workers' family budget is balanced, around 20 per cent of the family income should go for shelter so that enough food, clothing and other necessities could be purchased. Yet today in many cities and towns where war production is concentrated, workers' families are forced to pay as much as 50 to 60 per cent of their income for living accommodations which are often substandard and inadequate for decent living.

The passage of the Emergency Price Control Act in January, 1942, gave the Office of Price Administration statutory authority to control rents in war production areas. In many of these areas rent increases surged steadily upward through 1940 and 1941. Early in 1942 in a large number of these centers vacancies in rental dwellings were reduced to zero and rents were getting completely out of hand. It was no longer a question of rent control in a few defense areas; it was a question of national rent control. As the entire nation was being converted into a workshop for war production and war services, comprehensive nationwide action to stem rent profiteering became imperative. Yet the OPA's approach to rent control was hesitant and dilatory. By August 1, 1942, 395 defense rental areas were designated as subject to rent regulations. However, on that date only 96 areas had been surveyed and rent directors appointed to enforce rent ceilings.

The OPA was equally timid in establishing a uniform policy which would enforce fair rents and would cut down the rent growth sufficiently to do away with speculative increases. In most cases the rent ceilings were prescribed to equal the amount paid on March 1, 1942. In only a few areas rents were cut back to some date in 1941. The result was that in many instances drastic rent increases which had occurred in 1940 and 1941 were frozen under the OPA rent control orders.

Enforcement of rent ceilings carries the same penalties as are applied for the violation of price ceilings. Landlords violating the OPA rent regulations may be fined $5,000, or imprisoned for one year. In addition tenants may directly sue landlords who do not comply with rent ceilings for at least $50 damages and costs. OPA rent directors may also resort to court injunctions restraining landlords from charging excessive rents.

The Housing Committee of the American Federation of Labor has performed a notable service in keeping our local housing committees and central labor unions advised of the progress and developments in rent control. Detailed reports summarizing current rent surveys and vacancy surveys have been furnished our unions in all areas subject to rent control. Where organized pressure on the part of landlords and real estate interests was brought to bear to place rent administration on terms advantageous to the landlords and burdensome to the workers, the Housing Committee has been vigilant in preventing such pressures from taking effect.

In the areas in which lack of housing has resulted in desperately critical conditions, as was the case in Mobile, Ala.; Wichita, Kans.; Seattle, Wash.; San Diego, Calif.; Norfolk, Va.; and many other cities and towns, widespread attempt has been made to evade rent control by withdrawing homes and apartments from the rental market. In some of these areas a concerted effort was made by the landlords to evict tenants occupying their property on the ground that the property would no longer be available for rent as it was being offered for sale. By the first of September 500 threatened evictions were pending court decision in Mobile alone. To prevent this evasion of the law the OPA Rent Control Division, after consultation with the OPA Labor Policy Committee, agreed to put into effect a regulation forbidding sale of all rental property in critical defense areas. This action, however, was not sufficient to solve the entire problem. In city after city landlords and realtors sought land reoccupancy of rental dwellings on the claim that the property was needed to accommodate members of their families and relatives. Steps are being taken to make impossible this and similar subterfuges and to provide for full enforcement of the rent control regulations. Because the enforcement of these regulations depend in such large measure on cooperation of the tenants themselves, Labor representation in all rent control offices in the field is sought by the A. F. of L. Housing Committee.

At the writing of this report no Labor representation is provided in the rent control administration of the OPA and the enforcement of the rent ceilings has been greatly impaired by the lack of inspectors necessary to insure compliance with rent ceilings.

(1943, p. 139) On June 1, 1943, federal rent control had been in force for one year. As rents normally constitute at least one-fifth of the living costs of a wage earner's family, stabilization of rents has been a vital part of cost of living control for the workers. While at first the OPA approached the problem of rent control timidly, the operation of the program during the past year has probably been more effective than any other OPA operation. By August 1, 1943, 458 defense rental areas had been designated. Of these, 372, with an estimated civilian population of nearly 80 million, have been made subject to federal rent control.

In the controlled areas rents have been generally stabilized at slightly below May, 1942, levels. In view of the drastic increase in rents which took place between 1941 and 1942, in communities most affected by war production, the May, 1942, level was substantially higher than the rents prevailing before the war. It is recognized that in most cases the OPA rent ceilings have been set at levels which have been administratively feasible. It is clear, however, that the rents paid by most wage earners' families today are far in excess of rents charged at the time when operating costs to the landlord were substantially higher. In many communities before the war, landlords had to contend with a high rate of vacancies, greater occupancy losses, greater turnover and more active maintenance. Under war conditions the landlords are enjoying a far more favorable position. Occupancy is often at an all-time high, reaching 100 per cent in many communities. Rent delinquencies have diminished and in some areas have completely disappeared. While some operating expenses, including payrolls and fuel, have increased appreciably, these have been generally more than offset by economies made possible by the elimination of vacancies and reduction in services. Janitorial and custodial services have been curtailed and, most important of all, repairs, interior painting and decorating, have been sharply reduced.

In the administration of rent control the OPA has made an important contribution to the morale of many thousands of war workers and families of service men in the rent control areas by insuring new tenants security of their home occupancy. In the initial stages of rent control in Mobile, Alabama, and many other overcrowded areas, landlords forced tenants to vacate by selling their properties to outright owners. Where overcrowding made it impossible for workers to find other accommodations, purchase of rental properties was often forced upon the war workers. To prevent this circumvention of rent control, the OPA, after consultation with the OPA Labor Policy Committee, amended its regulations requiring a 90-day notice in the case of any eviction. The amendment also prohibited the sale of the rental property in emergency areas except in the case of bona fide sales in which one-third of the purchase price must be paid in cash as a down payment. This provision has effectively prevented forced sales and sales made to circumvent rent control.

By limiting the application of this policy solely to areas where overcrowding has reached emergency proportions, the regulation did not in any way interfere with real estate transactions in communities in which conditions are more nearly normal. The regulation provides that where a landlord can show that equivalent accommodations are available for similar rent in the same community he may sell the property with no down-payment and with no restrictions.

There has been strong organized pressure on the part of real estate interests to do away with rent control. It was apparent that the OPA was willing to yield sufficiently to the pressure to reduce the 30 per cent down-payment requirement in the case of sales to 20 per cent. The Housing Committee of the American Federation of Labor has countered this drive for relaxation of the rent control program and has pressed for the extension of rent control and of its enforcement. In smaller communities in which much war production is concentrated, the absence of rent control has imposed a real hardship upon thousands of war workers. In such areas as Greater New York where substantial rent increases have occurred, the OPA has failed to establish a basis for rent control. In a number of communities the Housing Committee has assisted central labor unions in conducting rent surveys among members of affiliated unions, thus helping to establish rent control protection for the workers.

(P. 554) The convention took the following action on the report of the E.C. on this subject:

As the Executive Council reports, rent control has been limited to defense areas and rents have been generally stabilized slightly below May 1942 levels. This means that the level set as feasible for administration has been more favorable to landlords than to tenants. However, the tenants are protected against unlimited advances.

Meanwhile, as the war continues, areas not classified as defense have no protection against rent increases, evictions, forced ownership and fictitious sales, etc. Local or state rent control may be needed to supplement the OPA rent control.

We urge action upon the suggestion of the Executive Council that central labor unions conduct rent surveys or get community cooperation for such surveys as a basis for a protective program.

(1944, p. 556) Res. 156:

Whereas—The Congress has passed a bill extending price and rent control until July 1, 1945, and the new Stabilization Act provides for the continuation of the rent control program; also the regulation of rents, and

Whereas—In the City of New York, the OPA is doing its best to carry out the instructions of Congress, and has established rent control which has prevented the increase of rents, and

Whereas—In the City of New York, commercial rent situation has become a serious problem to employers who employ thousands of workers in their plants in Greater New York, as the increase in rents has amounted to approximately 275 per cent in many instances, and

Whereas—A large number of our employers in Greater New York claim that if this is allowed to continue they will be forced to move their plants to other cities or close down entirely, therefore, be it

Resolved—That the Sixty-fourth Annual Convention of the American Federation of Labor, assembled in New Orleans, La., call upon Congress to include in the OPA rent regulations, commercial rent control.

(1948, p. 321) Res. 105 called upon Congress to extend and strengthen existing rent control legislation.

(P. 467) Committee report adopted as follows:

Your committee is in sympathy with the objectives of the resolution and recommends that it be referred to the Executive Council, A. F. of L., so that interested union representatives can present their views to the council with respect to the enactment of proper legislation on the subject.

(1949, p. 228) The American Federation of Labor has vigorously maintained that until enough new houses are built to meet the most acute needs, stabilization of rents is extremely important. Therefore, organized labor has taken a determined stand to maintain and improve the federal rent control program. At its January 1949 meeting, the Executive Council emphasized the importance of rent control to all workers and called for the extension and improvement of existing rent control legislation.

Rent control was one of the first problems to receive the attention of the 81st Congress. It soon became evident that the real estate lobby would make an all-out drive to abolish all federal rent controls. However, despite tremendous pressures brought by the real estate interests, Congress finally passed a new rent control law, the Housing and Rent Act of 1949, which became effective on April 1, 1949. While this law contained some improvements over the previous legislation, the opponents of rent control were able to secure certain provisions which have resulted in a serious weakening of the entire rent control program.

Since the enactment of the rent control law, the housing expediter, on his own initiative, has used its provisions to decontrol rents in scores of communities and to raise rents for thousands of tenants. To make matters worse, real estate interests in many communities have organized successful campaigns to abolish rent controls altogether by making use of the so-called "local option" provision. They have even been successful in removing federal rent controls in three states, Nebraska, Texas and Wisconsin.

Maintenance of rents at existing levels is important for hundreds of thousands of workers, particularly during this period of rising unemployment. The rent control program must be maintained and strengthened until new homes are built in sufficient volume to make federal rent controls no longer necessary.

(P. 475) Although the law which passed Congress this year was, in several respects, stronger than previous rent control statutes, it did contain the pernicious "local option" provision under which rent control has been completely removed from hundreds of communities across the nation.

In a number of cases, this has meant extreme hardship to families of trade union members. In the City of Dallas, for example, after decontrol, rents rose up to 380% above former levels.

This committee does not wish the system of rent controls to remain in effect any longer than is absolutely necessary. However, until the supply of low-price housing units can be equalized with the demand, effective rent control must be maintained so that families will not be faced with exorbitant increases in rent.

(1950, pp. 211, 388) The weakening of the rent control law intensified the housing problem for many workers and their families. If the law is not immediately strengthened, there may be much more disastrous effects during the coming period when the housing shortage may become much more acute.

In recent months, rent controls have become less effective. In part, this has been due to a very liberal policy on the part of the housing expediter in granting rent increases to landlords. Thus, during the period from April 1949 through March 1950, the housing expediter permitted 915,074 increases averaging $6.77 or 18 per cent. However, this was not the most serious evidence of deterioration of the rent control program. The major problem was that through a provision in the 1949 rent control law allowing for local option by governing bodies of states and communities, federal rent controls were entirely removed from six states and about 300 communities. In only two states, New York and Wisconsin, were federal rent controls replaced by state controls. While the New York law provided for more effective rent controls than the federal law, the Wisconsin law was very weak.

Rent increases in decontrolled communities were widespread and steep. This was indicated by a survey made by the Department of Labor of 14 typical communities where federal rent controls were removed. The Labor Department found that rents in these communities increased from 12 to nearly 40 per cent affecting from 17 to 64 per cent of the tenants. In fact, confirmation of the serious effects of decontrol came from the National Association of Real Estate Boards, an organization which has been bitterly opposed to rent control. The NAREB received reports from 100 decontrolled cities in 30 states indicating that rents increased for more than half of all the tenants in these communities and that the average increase for those tenants whose rents were raised was 22 per cent.

In the face of this unmistakable evidence of the terrific hardships caused by weakened rent controls and outright decontrol, a strong movement developed under the leadership of the real estate lobby to end all rent controls when the 1949 Act expired on June 30, 1950. The Housing Committee of the A. F. of L. fought this movement with every resource it could command. It sought to obtain legislation which would at least extend the existing inadequate rent control law for another year and if possible strengthen it.

Despite the efforts of the real estate group to obtain the outright abolition of rent controls, a compromise rent control bill passed both Houses of Congress. This bill extended the existing rent control law until December 31, 1950, and contained a provision that federal rent controls would be in force after that date only in those communities which either by a resolution of their governing bodies or by popular referendum declared "that a shortage of rental housing accommodations exists which requires the continuance of rent control." This provision in the rent control law makes it imperative for every union affiliated with A. F. of L. to be on the alert in its community to make sure that the necessary steps are taken to permit the continuation of rent control after the end of 1950 if it is still needed.

(Pp. 49, 387) Res. 78 called attention to housing problems posed by defense mobilization as follows:

Whereas—The President has already announced restrictions on residential construction as the first economic measure in the defense mobilization program, and

Whereas—The major effects of these restrictions will be (1) to cut back by at least 25 per cent during the next six months the vitally needed

low-rent public housing program for low-income families, and (2) to increase required down payments on privately built housing under the FHA and VA programs, thus making it more difficult for ordinary families without large accumulated savings to secure any new housing, and

Whereas—There is still a large unmet housing need, particularly for low and middle-income families, and this shortage can be expected to become worse as housing volume decreases as a result of the new restrictions, and

Whereas—There have been no restrictions announced yet on the production of luxury goods and other commodities for which the need is not as great as it is for housing, therefore, be it

Resolved—That the American Federation of Labor in convention assembled go on record as urging that in view of the continued shortage of housing and the fact that there is no substitute for it, restrictions be placed on residential construction only where they are absolutely necessary and that wherever possible restrictions be placed first on competing non-essential production and construction before any further cutbacks are made on residential construction, and be it further

Resolved—That we hereby urge that if further restrictions on housing are necessary, whatever residential construction is permitted should contribute to the maximum possible extent to meet the housing needs of low and middle income families and we specifically urge further that there be no further cutbacks in the low-rent public housing program and that there should be renewed pressure in the 82nd Congress for enactment of the cooperative housing program for middle-income families, and be it further

Resolved—That if workers are required to move to certain defense areas, we hereby urge that there be adequate community facilities as well as decent housing accommodations for them in such expanded communities, and be it further

Resolved—That in view of the fact that curtailed housing construction will result in an intensification of the present housing shortage, we hereby urge that the Congress review its previous action on rent control and that the present rent control law be continued beyond December 31, 1950, and that it be amended to permit the re-control of rents in any decontrolled community where housing shortages become more acute.

(1951, p. 96) As early as August, 1950, the Executive Council urged immediate amendment of the rent control law to permit recontrol of decontrolled communities and to strengthen controls where they still existed. The American Federation of Labor regards an effective rent control program as a very necessary part of the over-all anti-inflation program. In line with this policy, the A. F. of L. proposed that the following rent control program be included in the amendments to the Defense Production Act which Congress was considering in June, 1951.

1. Place the rent control program on a "for the duration" basis.

2. Establish rent controls immediately in all areas around military installations.

3. Authorize rent controls where needed over all types of dwelling units, including new houses and conversions. This will involve recontrol of many areas which have been decontrolled and the establishment of controls in some defense areas where they have never previously been imposed.

4. Provide strong eviction controls and effective enforcement procedures, including triple damages for overcharges and illegal evictions.

5. Enforce mandatory reduction of rents where there are reductions in services.

6. To prevent price rises due to inflated commercial rents, extend rent control to cover business establishments.

7. Adopt appropriate safeguards to protect living standards of building service workers.

The rent control sections of the Defense Production Act, as enacted on July 31, 1951, were considerably weaker than the A. F. of L. recommendations.

(P. 439) Under this section of the Executive Council's Report it is pointed out that the housing problems of workers were made more difficult during the past year by the continued weakening of the federal rent control program. The real estate interests throughout the country were pushing through decontrol of local communities and taking advantage of the so-called "local option" clause of the rent control law. By July, 1951, rent control had been removed in 1,200 communities throughout the country through the "local option" method.

As early as August, 1950, the Executive Council urged immediate amendment of the rent control law to permit recontrol of decontrolled communities and to strengthen controls where they still existed. The A. F. of L. regards an effective rent control program as a very necessary part of the overall anti-inflation program.

The rent control sections of the Defense Production Act as enacted on June 30th were considerably weaker than those recommended by the A. F. of L. The council's report highlights the following four points:

1. The rent control program would be extended until June 30, 1952, instead of for the duration of the defense emergency as the A. F. of L. recommended.

2. The so-called "local option" system would be continued but it would be considerably modified. Rent controls could be established whether or not controls had ever previously existed in the area in localities certified as "critical defense areas" by the Secretary of Defense and the Director of Defense Mobilization, acting jointly. An area would still have the right to remove rent controls by the "local option" method but it could be re-controlled after thirty days if it was designated a "critical defense area." Moreover, once an area was designated a "critical defense area" the government would have the right to control all housing accommodations in the area, including those which heretofore have been exempt from rent control. The amendments further provide that in any area designated as a "critical defense area" credit controls on housing must be relaxed.

3. While states and localities would be permitted to maintain local rent control programs, the Federal Government would have the right to establish controls in any state or locality which had its own rent control program if rents in that area increased by more than the U.S. average as indicated by the BLS cost of living index for a period of six months.

4. Most serious of all, the amendments provide for an across the board 20 per cent increase over the June 30, 1947 level in rents in controlled areas less increases obtained by the landlords since that date. The American Federation of Labor had recommended that rent increases be allowed only where landlords had actual increases in costs.

(P. 287) Res. 33 called upon the A. F. of L. to seek passage of an adequate national rent control law.

(P. 561) Convention adopted the resolution with the reservation that no rent control should act as a bar to reasonable wage increases for all employees in building and other service.

Reorganization of Government Departments (also see: Labor Department, Government Employees)

(1924, p. 74) In the early days of his administration the late President of the U.S. appointed a committee to investigate and report on the possibilities of reorganizing government departments so as to make for greater efficiency and economy. The committee held but few meetings and the chairman wrote a report without much consultation with other members of the committee, which consisted of three Senators and three members of the House of Representatives. No action was taken by either House.

(P. 265) We are not concerned so much with the reorganization of governmental departments. We are concerned deeply and keenly in the maintenance and the full development of the Department of Labor. Indeed we urge that greater encouragement and support be given this department of our national government because its problems and its functions concern the human welfare and the personal well being of those who do the nation's toil, the greatest factors in our nation's life—the wage earners—the common people of our land.

(1932, pp. 63, 362) The A. F. of L. is especially interested in the repeated legislative proposals which have been put forth to reorganize government departments. Our interest in this matter is based very largely upon our deep concern over the effect which such proposed actions would have on the Department of Labor. We have constantly endeavored to bring about the establishment of all the divisions and bureaus touching Labor, labor matters and labor activities, into the Department of Labor. This was the specific purpose the A. F. of L. had in mind when it originally proposed the creation of the Department of Labor with a Secretary in the President's Cabinet.

It is the purpose of the A. F. of L. to give special attention and consideration to any and all plans which may be proposed for the reorganization of government departments. We will strenuously oppose any and all attempts to transfer to other departments of what we regard as divisions of the Department of Labor having to do with labor matters, labor activities and labor social activities in which organized labor is especially interested. In taking this position we are not influenced by any fixed opinion of opposition to any practical economic measure which may be devised for the consolidation of government bureaus and in the reorganization of government departments.

(1937, pp. 163, 318) Several bills to reorganize the various governmental activities were introduced in the first session of the 75th Congress.

S. 2970 authorizes the President to bring about a reorganization of the 133 departments and agencies of the Executive branch. The President is given the duty and power, subject to certain limitations, to transfer, regroup, coordinate, consolidate, reorganize or abolish administrative agencies. This authority is limited to a period of three years.

All Executive Orders regarding reorganization must be submitted to Congress when in session and do not become effective until sixty days thereafter. The President is authorized to extend the classified Civil Service to any office or position in the government with a single administrator substituted for the present Civil Service Board of three members.

The audits of the financial transactions of the government are invested in an independent Auditor General who will be responsible only to Congress. A Joint Committee on Public Accounts is to be set up by Congress to hold the executive officers to a more effective accountability.

The bill provides for a new department to be known as the "Department of Welfare." The title of the Department of the Interior is changed to "Conservation." The existing National Resources Committee is renamed the "National Resources Planning Board," which is to be an arm of the President in budget and personnel management.

H.R. 8202 providing for the reorganization of agencies of the government and to establish the Department of Welfare passed the House August 13, but undoubtedly the Senate bill will be substituted for it in the next session of Congress.

(1938, pp. 170, 550) The first session of the 75th Congress passed a bill providing for the reorganization of 133 government activities. Among them were the Civil Service Commission and the United States Employees' Compensation Commission.

The Senate passed a bill, S. 3331, which provided that the law creating the non-partisan Civil Service Commission should be repealed and one administrator appointed to carry out the Civil Service laws. The government employees objected strenuously to the change in the Civil Service Commission because it would become a political instead of a non-partisan branch of the government.

It is also provided that the United States Employees' Compensation Commission should be placed in some other activity of the government. This would move the commission from its independent status and place it under political control. Both bills were finally recommitted to the Select Committee on Government Organization which had held extensive hearings on the question of reorganization.

(1939, pp. 141, 521) Shortly after Congress convened President Roosevelt requested Congress to pass a bill empowering him to reorganize some government activities. A similar request was made in the 75th Congress. A bill was introduced but failed to pass.

H.R. 4425 was introduced which provided that the President should investigate the organization of all agencies of the government and shall determine what changes therein are necessary to accomplish the reduction of expenditures, increase the efficiency of the operation of the government and reduce the number of agencies by consolidating those having similar functions under similar heads.

Besides, he was to abolish such agencies as may not be necessary to the efficient conduct of the government and eliminate overlapping and duplication of effort. The bill was approved by the President April 3, 1939, and the provisions were immediately carried out taking effect July 1.

A number of activities were placed in the executive offices of the President. The Federal Security Agency was created which is composed of the Social Security Board, the U.S. Employment Service, the Office of Education and all other functions of the Secretary of Interior relating to the administration of the Office of Education, Public Health Service, National Youth Administration and Civilian Conservation Corps.

To the Federal Works Agency was transferred the Public Roads Administration, Public Buildings Administration, United States Housing Authority, Public Works Administration, Works Progress Administration and all their records, property and funds.

To the Federal Loan Agency were transferred the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the Electric Home and Farm Authority, Reconstruction Finance Corporation Mortgage Company, Disaster Loan Corporation, Federal National Mortgage Association, Federal Home Loan Bank Board, Home Owners' Loan Corporation, Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation, Housing Administration and Export and Import Bank of Washington.

When the bill was being prepared in the House it was understood that the U.S. Employees Compensation Commission would be transferred to the Department of Labor. However, the E.C. made a vigorous protest believing that the commission should be kept independent. The committee writing the bill acceded to our request.

(1940, pp. 78-79, 405) The Reorganization Act of 1939 authorized the President to submit to Congress plans for reorganizing, with certain exceptions, various governmental departments, bureaus and agencies so as to: (1) reduce expenditures, (2) increase efficiency, (3) consolidate agencies according to major purposes, (4) reduce the number of agencies by consolidating those having similar functions and by abolishing such as may not be necessary, (5) eliminate overlapping and duplication of effort.

The reorganization plans submitted by the President take effect 60 days from the date of submission unless a majority in the House and Senate adopt a resolution expressing disapproval.

Reports upon this subject were made to the last convention. The fourth reorganization order provided, among other things, for a transfer of the Civil Aeronautics Authority and its functions, the office of the Administrator of Civil Aeronautics and its Air Safety Board to the Department of Commerce. This transfer was bitterly opposed by the Air Line Pilots Association, an affiliate of the American Federation of Labor. The air pilots, among other objections, pointed to the remarkable safety record established under the independent functioning of these agencies. The Executive Council backed the pilots in their contention but while the House adopted a resolution opposing Reorganization Plan No. IV, the Senate resolution of disapproval failed by a vote of 34 to 46.

The fifth plan provided for a transfer of the Immigration and Naturalization Service from the Department of Labor to the Department of Justice. Because of apprehension of fifth-column activities and the general belief that the Department of Justice was best qualified to check on disloyal alien residents of the United States there was little opposition to this transfer and it became effective on June 14, 1940.

(1946, p. 205) In 1945 the Congress passed and the President signed Public No. 263 of the 79th Congress, an Act permitting the President to reorganize the government departments and agencies with a proviso that reorganization plans submitted by the President would become effective unless both Houses of Congress disapproved within 60 days.

On May 16, 1946, the President submitted three plans to the Congress.

We disapproved Plans 2 and 3, but approved Plan 1 because the latter set up a Central Housing Agency.

Plan 2 was objected to because it abolished the United States Employees Compensation Commission which was set up by law as a bi-partisan agency whose members were confirmed by the Senate, and transferred its functions to the Director of the Federal Security Agency and permitted him to appoint a board of three to which his decisions might be appealed.

It also transferred certain agencies from the Department of Labor to the Director.

Plan 2 continued the Coast Guard's wartime control of the United States Steamboat Inspection Service.

All our maritime organizations, including the Longshoremen, joined the A. F. of L. in opposition to this plan as seamen were continually being placed in double jeopardy for minor offences.

All of the plans were defeated by the House of Representatives by approximately four to one.

Plan 1 was defeated by the Senate and the others approved, so all plans became effective.

Bills were immediately introduced in both Houses of Congress reinstating the United States Employees Compensation Commission and the Senate passed the bill (S. 2456) on July 29, 1946.

A delegation immediately waited upon the Speaker but he declined to permit the bill to be considered by the House of Representatives.

(P. 468) The convention unanimously adopted the recommendations of its committee on the above subject as follows:

Under this caption the Executive Council reports the submission of three reorganization plans to the Congress by the President. These plans were numbered, 1, 2 and 3. Plans 2 and 3 were opposed by the A. F. of L. and other affiliates, and Plan 1 was supported. Because both Houses did not disapprove the plans within sixty days after submission all three became effective. On July 29, 1946 the Senate passed a bill reestablishing the Employees Compensation Commission as an independent bi-partisan agency, but although a delegation called upon the Speaker he declined to permit the bill to be considered by the House of Representatives.

Reparations (Dismantling of Plants and Factories in Germany) (1948, p. 81)—The American Federation of Labor was the only labor voice raised against the indiscriminate dismantling of plants for reparations. There was general acceptance by the German unions that factories serving war efforts should be dismantled, but workers could not understand why dismantling should include all plant-connected buildings and barracks at a time of an extreme housing shortage. In a few cases, Military Government did order an easing of the dismantling to provide time for the gradual reemployment of thousands of workers whose jobs would have been affected.

Representation (Labor) on Government Boards

(1936, p. 561) More and more labor is becoming a subject for Federal and State legislation. It is evident that the wage earners will receive, or be subjected to still further legislative consideration. When legislation has been enacted, the most important consideration becomes its administration. The personnel or administrators, the substance of their understanding and practical experience, largely determines the effectiveness of the law.

An unsatisfactory law may be given much value if its administration is in the hands of intelligent, well-informed men with a practical experience in the every day and the practical affairs of men. A perfect law, if such were possible, could be rendered largely ineffective if its administration was guided by men, no matter how high their integrity, intelligence and scholastic attainments, if they were without practical experience through personal contact with the affairs and the relationship of men in commerce and industry.

There are in the states and in the Federal Government, many commissions, bureaus, boards, and other bodies officially created by law or executive order, for the purpose of administering specific legislation. Your committee views with grave misgivings, the absence of experienced trade unionists upon those commissions, boards and other legally created bodies appointed for the administration of laws relating to Labor's welfare. In the matter of commissions, bureaus or other bodies existing for the purpose of administering laws dealing with various forms of industrial and agricultural activity, administrative authority is certain to appoint members of such bodies who truly represent the interests of those affected by the law. In the United States it is notorious that labor finds it most difficult and frequently impossible to secure the appointment of responsible and experienced men of labor.

The convention declares that it will not support legislation creating any administrative body to supervise and apply any legislation affecting labor, unless such legislation provides that labor shall have direct representation upon such administrative bodies.

State Federations of Labor and City Central Bodies should insist upon the application of this policy, and refuse to cooperate with any state and city administration which fails to place responsible labor representatives upon every board or commission having to do with the administration of legislation affecting labor.

The Executive Council is instructed to take up with the President of the United States the subject of adequate labor representation upon every Federal board, commission, or other body created for the purpose of administering legislation affecting labor directly or indirectly.

This convention declares itself as insisting that the day has arrived when labor will no longer remain silent or inactive when administrative bodies having the responsibility of administering legislation affecting Labor are without Labor men in their personnel.

(P. 566) The A. F. of L. declares that it is of the opinion that organized labor is entitled to representation on the Federal Reserve Board and subordinate Federal Reserve agencies and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, equal to that accorded to Agriculture and Industry, and that such agencies shall require as a condition of eligibility for credit or other financial assistance, unless such monies are to be used in any enterprise or business that has to do with the employment of labor, that the borrower shall not conduct its business activities in a manner antagonistic to the national labor policy set forth in the Wagner Labor Relations Act.

(Public Members)—(1944, p. 531):

Whereas, it is most desirable that labor, which has modified many meritorious rules and working conditions in an effort to expedite victory, should not be called upon to make unnecessary sacrifices which would prove a menace to the future of its members who are now serving with the armed forces as well as those now producing those things essential to victory, and

Whereas, The present make-up of boards and commissions dealing with industrial matters is such that quite generally they are composed of representatives of workers, management, and a third group named the public, which third group while probably well intentioned has been quite generally without experience in industrial affairs, yet more closely associated with the employer group than with labor, thus making it extremely difficult and sometimes impossible to get justice from such boards, and

Whereas, These boards and commissions almost invariably exercise the functions of arbitration boards, in all set-ups of which it is conceded that the two parties of major interest should choose the third party which is assumed to be neutral, but which in the cases complained of are apparently not, although referred to as the public, therefore, be it

Resolved, By the American Federation of Labor, in session assembled in this 64th annual convention, that we record ourselves as unalterably convinced that the manner of naming third parties to such governmental boards, etc., accounts for much of the dissatisfaction among workers caused by unjust decisions, and be it further

Resolved, That we call upon all affiliated organizations and the officers of this Federation to use all the means at their command to rectify the conditions herein complained of, and to secure more just and equitable representation on these boards

("Basic Principles")—(1946, pp. 63, 609) Included in a comprehensive report on the U.N. was a subsection titled "Basic Principles of Representation":

From this sketchy and incomplete record of the work of United Nations agencies, it is obvious that its decisions and work in international fields will vitally affect developments and agencies in our own nation. It is also obvious that if we would retain democratic institutions in our own country we must extend principles of democratic representation to our interests and activities in the international field. For example, our Government has proposed an International Conference on Trade and Employment which looks forward to the establishment of a permanent agency in this field. If these non-government agencies which control free enterprise in this country do not have proportional representation in the international agency their authority at home may be minimized.

These principles of representation include:

1. The right of an organization to select its representative or to name a panel from which selection is made.
2. The right to such representation in connection with agencies dealing with matters affecting our welfare.
3. The right to advisory relationship in connection with agencies dealing with matters affecting our welfare but where regulations provide or make possible only government representation.
4. The right to free access of information needed for representative service.
5. Congress should require Administrative agencies of the Federal Government to observe such rights of representation in making official appointments.

The problem of union representation has become increasingly important and difficult with the wide fields given to government agencies for administration. Administrative procedure affords new opportunities for dictation unless those affected by the administration have representation in the determination of basic policies and procedures and the functions of such representatives are clearly defined.

(p. 609) Increasing need for the counsel of representatives of non-governmental functional interests makes timely the formulation of basic principles for guidance in consultative relationships. Consultative relationships have developed around the administration of law and in decisions on policies. Consultative and advisory relationships have become important internationally as well as nationally.

We urge insistence upon conformity with these principles by all A. F. of L. representatives.

Policy Making Boards—(1950, pp. 238, 428)

To carry out the democratic ideals which our nation holds, Labor must be adequately represented on all policy making and administrative advisory boards affecting Labor, at the local, state, and national levels.

It will be observed that in discussing each of the education and training programs in this report, emphasis has been placed on the urgent need of labor representation on all policy making and administrative advisory boards.

(P. 528) In this section of its report the Executive Council recommends that labor be represented on all policy making boards of local, state and national governments. Your committee approves this important recommendation and at the same time urges local, state, national and international labor bodies to have representatives, whenever possible, on policy making boards and on advisory committees. While it is true that representation is often denied to labor organizations, it is also true that labor groups are negligent about sending representatives when they are invited to do so. A fighting, aggressive labor movement should participate at every opportunity in the democratic process and demand proper recognition on all policy making boards of government at all levels.

Civic Affairs—(1951, p. 412:

We recommend also that in every instance the recognition of our members as general community-civic leaders be emphasized. When public appointments are made, it is far too often that persons who have served the general public interest through the trade union movement are almost automatically excluded, except on special occasions, purely as "Labor People." True we are proud to fight for recognition of Labor's rights and privileges, but having been active in these fights should better qualify us to represent the people in many general public services at home and abroad: in and out of the more restricted Labor activities.

Defense Agencies—(P. 308) Res. 86 requested A. F. of L. and officers to use influence to see that A. F. of L. representation and participation on defense boards be more adequate.

(p. 654) This resolution is concerned with the need for obtaining effective A. F. of L. representation throughout the defense program.

The importance of this resolution cannot be over-estimated. If the defense program is to be successful, Labor must be accorded full participation in the formation and execution of policies at all levels throughout the many government defense agencies.

This committee wishes to stress one particular aspect of this problem. Organized Labor has now won the right to at least basic representation in the defense program. Our task now is to suggest the names of capable and energetic individuals from the ranks of Labor to help administer the program.

Assignment with a defense agency represents the highest type of service to organized labor and the American Federation of Labor. Each international union has a special responsibility for making available for these defense assignments particularly well-qualified and capable individuals.

In recommending that this resolution be adopted, the committee wishes to suggest a slight change in wording so that the resolution would read as follows:

Whereas, A great number of government defense agencies have been established to handle the various defense problems, including production, economic stabilization, manpower, wage stabilization and price control, and

Whereas, The best interests of working people can be served only if organized labor and the American Federation of Labor is adequately represented on these agencies, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the American Federation of Labor use its full influence to make certain that it be adequately represented in the government agencies throughout the defense program.

Research (Union) (1944, p. 140)

The post-war period will be characterized by two dominating forces: the effort to achieve full employment and revolutionary technical changes as new progress in industrial chemistry and other applied sciences is put into production.

The first—full employment—will require active and informed cooperation of workers and management based on the facts of local employment, unemployment, existing production and potential production by locality, by industries and for the nation. There will be needed technically trained persons who understand how to measure efforts and interpret measurements. Technicians should report to union executives responsible to the union wage earners.

The union also needs the advice of persons who can keep them forewarned of production and technological changes that they must meet.

When such changes are certain and imminent the union needs to provide its members with such educational and training opportunities as will fit them to do the new work.

We commend to national and international unions provisions for meeting their fact-finding needs, either through their own staff or by joint arrangement with other unions or with the Federation.

In arranging for research services, it is important to have all arrangements on the principle that research is a service to the union and to its officers. Research provides information on facts and conditions which help the union and its officials to determine policies. The control and the policy-making must be retained by the union and delegated only to elected officials.

It is inevitable that unions will increasingly use research services and hence it is important that more persons have opportunity to train for this specialized field or opportunities for "training on the job." We could encourage interrelationships between research workers and American Federation of Labor unions.

(p. 585) The war which America is now waging, and the peace which shall follow, is in large measure Labor's war and Labor's peace. Labor's stake in the war and in the peace is the greatest, for the workers constitute the mass of mankind. This pivotal position between war and peace now imposed upon organized labor, as the Executive Council states, requires active and informal cooperation of workers and management. Such cooperation must necessarily be based upon factual knowledge. The post-war goal of full production and humane utilization of technological advances requires technically trained persons, who, with factual knowledge, can interpret the present in the light of the past, and the future in the light of the present. Research services alone can supply the Federation and its officers with the necessary factual knowledge and background upon which they can continue to base their union policies which must continue to be directed to the promotion of the common good.

We concur, then, with the Executive Council, on the necessity for the increasing use of research services, as well as the necessity for the augmentation of Labor's personnel in this specialized field. Such personnel should be instituted and encouraged on a local, national and international basis.

We further recommend that the Federation office in Washington be considered as the nominal headquarters of research. The research foundation of the various national and international unions should send duplicate copies of their findings to the Federation office. In this way duplication of studies can be avoided; different regions can be best served; and the continual unified advancement of the American Federation of Labor on a national scale can be made more secure.

Resettlement Administration (1936, p. 639)—The A. F. of L. will support legislation for the adoption and continuation of the program of the Resettlement Administration as it has been developed during the past eighteen months; and to oppose legislation which would reduce this program into a mere lending of funds to individual farmers for the purchase of individual farms, without planned coordination, without technical assistance and without the establishment of community and cooperation activities.

Resources (National), Protection Urged (see also: Public Domain)

(1953, pp. 172, 590)—This portion of the Executive Council report deals with the "giveaway" program of public resources and with the restrictions of appropriations needed for the development of conservation, flood control and power projects which would be of immense benefit to the citizens of the United States. Details of legislation on these matters, together with A. F. of L. action on them is fully explained in the report of the Executive Council. Among these items reported on are: Forest, Water, Soil Conservation; Natural Gas Act Amendment; Hydro-Electric Power; Hell's Canyon Dam; Ice Harbor Dam; TVA Appropriations, and Disposal of Defense Rubber Plants.

It is the recommendation of your committee that the American Federation of Labor continue its active interest for the protection of the rights of the American citizen in matters affecting conservation and development of natural resources in the best public interests.

(1954, p. 530) The EC Report contained a special section on activities of officers of the Federation to protect our natural resources and the public domain. The convention committee presented a report on this section of the EC Report which was unanimously adopted:

Your committee commends the officers of the Federation for their unceasing efforts to protect our natural resources and the public domain. We urge they continue to protect the natural forests and the public grazing lands. We further urge that the officers and the National Legislative Committee maintain a close watch on all legislation affecting the development of our water resources.

We note that the fight to erect a multiple purpose dam at Hell's Canyon is still continuing and urge continued support by the Federation for this project.

Your committee believes there is nothing more serious confronting this republic than the conservation of natural resources. With the tremendous expansion of the population a great deal of thought should be given to this problem so that we will not become another China with many starving when we have so many natural resources that can be developed to take care of the increasing population.

There are many square miles of land between the Mississippi and the Pacific wholly unproductive now and we are going to have to put that land in production to take care of future generations. In some parts of the country where the water supply is diminishing, citizens are fighting the establishment of new industry due to this shortage, while in those areas many rivers and their tributaries are dumping billions of gallons of water into the ocean.

We believe in private enterprise but there are some things which private enterprise cannot do.

The altruistic program of the A. F. of L. on conservation is thoroughly approved and steps should be taken to guard against any giveaway program on this very vital issue of conservation of the public domain and natural resources.

Retirement (Civil Service) (also see: Government Employees)

(Retirement for Ex-Service Officers)—(1928, p. 83) A bill making eligible for retirement under certain conditions officers and former officers of the army, navy or marine corps, other than officers of the regular army, navy or marine corps, who incurred physical disability in line of duty while in the service of the U.S. during the World War, passed both Houses but was vetoed by the President. It was passed over the President's veto. Labor supported this bill.

Riders to Legislative Measures Opposed—(1952, pp. 22, 67, 68, 242, 243, 456) Res. 2:

Whereas—We believe the principles of democracy are best served when each piece of legislation before Congress is considered on its own merits, and

Whereas—The increasing practice of attaching riders to appropriation and other bills has as its primary purpose the evasion of separate consideration, therefore, be it

Resolved—That the American Federation of Labor condemns the practice by certain members of Congress of attaching riders to appropriation and other bills as undemocratic.

The convention expressed sympathy with the purpose of the resolution and recommended that the officers of the A. F. of L. ascertain what can be done to discourage the use of this sharp legislative practice.

Right to Organize—(1930, pp. 77, 356) It is a common law right of every free citizen to choose his calling and while following that calling to manage his resources so as to promote his best interests. This common law right is inherent in every wage earner as in every salaried person, every investor of capital, and every manager of a business enterprise.

The resources of a wage earner are life, health, physical and mental energy, personality, and the profits he makes on his work. The specific methods that anybody may use to advance his interests and make progress in living will depend upon the conditions under which he lives and works.

This is an age of specialization, interdependence of interests and purposes. No man can live unto himself alone and no man can do business with himself alone. We live in associated groups and we work in associated groups, the interplay of whose functions is necessary for undertaking upon which all are more or less dependent for supplies and service. When society and business are organized upon a basis of associated activity to supply the needs of individuals, it is obvious that progress for all groups must come through associations for definite purposes and organized activity to accomplish the purposes of the associations. Accordingly, we find the American Bar Association, American Medical Association, the American University Professors Association, American Library Association, the American Society of Mechanical Engineers, the Business and Professional Women's Association, the United States Steel Corporation, the Metal Trades Association, the American Cotton Manufacturing Association, the American Management Association, the A. F. of L. and its 104 affiliated national and international trade unions. All these organizations have in common the fundamental purpose of promoting the business and professional interests of their members. Most of them are recognized as highly respected institutions, with commendable and praiseworthy purposes. The right of individuals to join the association which is organized to promote their professional or trade interests is neither questioned nor challenged.

In sharp contrast to this general acceptance of right to belong to associations and advance interests through them, is the attitude of many employers and courts toward the right of producing workers to join trade unions for the purpose of advancing their economic, social and political interests through trade unions. Some not only do not concede the right of their employees to join unions and to conduct their business through union channels but cruel as it may seem they discharge them when they exercise such a right. The issue resolves itself into the right of the individual employee to select a delegate or counsel to make his work agreement instead of either foregoing his right to a contract or attempting by himself to negotiate a satisfactory agreement with his employer. Obviously the individual employee would be at a very great disadvantage in attempting to negotiate a contract. Rarely in these days is the employer the owner. The large employers are corporations, owned by hundreds of thousands, who hold stock, and managed by a salaried group responsible to officials and directors usually chosen by large stockholders. Management is the employer. The employer would, of course, delegate his part to some representative, probably the employment bureau, which in the case of a large plant would be completely overwhelmed and unable to take care of its normal functions. Again there would probably be that delegation of a function which is denied workers.

Thus Labor is confronted with a situation in which one functional business group denies another the right to those same business methods which it itself is using and using to its strategic advantage to force compliance with its will. This arbitrary attitude and denial of the common law right to contract puts employer-employee relations on a despotic basis and forces a conflict in situations.

Some more progressive industrial undertakings that are alert to make use of the best management policies, recognize the advantage of having an organized producing group to cooperate in reducing wastes in producing and turning out the highest quality of product at the lowest production costs. They realize there must be agreement upon objectives and unity of purpose throughout the plant organization in order to get the best results. Some such employers have the wisdom to utilize the union agency which wage earners have created for associated activity; others are afraid of the power of such organization and set up their own "employee" organization which they can control. This fear on the part of employers which dominates many industrial policies and methods, has its roots in great concern lest they lose arbitrary control over distribution of the returns from products produced by the joint efforts of all who man the plant.

Tradition and established practice make producing employees a lower paid group than other existing groups. Only those persons in a position to insist upon just and equitable work contracts have been able to participate commensurately in the increased return from production. Their interests are well taken care of; they have status in the industry; their employment and incomes are regular. Workers denied the right to use the agency that can take care of their interests have no status in the industry. They have low wages and as a rule irregular employment, insecurity of income. Low wages mean these workers and their dependents cannot lay aside savings to provide for the emergencies of life and that when unemployment comes, they must get credit from retail dealers or apply to charity.

Labor maintains that no industry has a right to employ producing workers that cannot provide efficient management which can make profits, pay high salaries and wages. No industrial establishment has a right to pay excessively high salaries and bonuses to its executives and not provide securities and high annual incomes to all on its payroll. No industrial establishment has a right to employ men and women and utilize their life vigor, and then irresponsibly turn these employees adrift to get their living at the risk of the business world or at the expense of the general public. Many an establishment which turns its wage earners out to be supported by retailers or the public is declaring its usual dividends and has absolutely no claim to subventions of this nature.

The fear that rides industrial managements should not be permitted to deny wage earners their inherent right as free citizens and their common law rights.

Nor is it enough to acknowledge the right of the wage earner to join his union, if he is denied the right to make effective use of organized channels and collective methods which the trade union affords. In our Southern organizing campaign some employers have inflicted the greatest cruelty upon employees who exercised their right to join a trade union. These union workmen have been arbitrarily dismissed; that is, their opportunity to earn a living was taken from them because they did what they had a legal right to do. To deny workmen the chance to learn a living because they wish to exercise their right to make progress is to limit the opportunities for constructive development.

Industries cannot maintain prosperity unless there are buyers for their products. When industries increase output without at the same time increasing consumer buying power, they are taking a sure way to prepare for their own undoing.

Organization of wage earners is essential to orderly sustained progress. To make progress there must be definite plans for accomplishing these purposes. Planning must be controlled by a philosophy of what life is and what living can be. Through their organized channels, wage earners can control the development of their future, working in cooperation with the constructive organized groups with which they are associated.

By representing wage earners in negotiating work agreements, trade unions can bring to each separate problem informing experience in the whole industry—national and international. Union representatives who participate in such negotiations, have the advantage of familiarity with such procedure and with the issues and facts to be presented and considered. They can with expedition focus attention upon the important issues and thus help out industrial relations on a sound basis. Union representatives have that independence and that authority that are necessary for service as counsel for Labor.

When a contract under which work is to be done is negotiated jointly, Labor has a definite status in the industry. The foundation has been laid on which can be erected machinery for adjusting differences of opinion for the promotion of understanding and the creation of machinery for cooperation in solving the problems of work that arise daily, in finding the most efficient ways of doing the work and in creating good will for the undertaking and its products.

While common law assures Labor the right to make progress, neither common nor substantive law has kept pace with the spirit of the times not adjusted itself to the modern economic environment in which wage earners spend their work lives. Labor does not have the opportunity to exercise its rights. Our problem is to assure that opportunity to all. Opportunity lies in effective legal and economic right to organize and make use of union procedures.

Law must consider three fundamental factors: men, institutions, and environment.

The driving forces in human beings are unchanging. We simply call them different names in different periods. Institutions are the machinery through which society is carried on. They influence environment and change with environment. Interplay of forces, and cause and effect are fundamental facts in historic progress and should be fundamental consideration in formulating new laws and customs.

Each wage earner now has all the rights which any wage earner needed in the early nineteenth century, but neither substantive law nor its interpretation by the courts takes into account that the wage earner has real rights only as a member of an organized group of fellow wage earners. As the organization and environment of work have completely changed, the methods of exercising identical rights must change also. It is essential that equal opportunity be kept open to all citizens and all groups that condition prosperity.

In an age of associated endeavor prosperity does not lie in the dominance of a group but in sustained progress by all. Coordinated advancement for all is what Labor seeks to promote. We are just as opposed to control by the wealthy few as we are to a dictatorship of the proletariat. We propose intelligent cooperation through organized groups in furtherance of constructive principles. To assure Labor the right and the opportunity to follow this program legal and economic obstacles must be removed.

A major obstacle is abuse of the injunction in industrial disputes. We do not dispute the jurisdiction of equity because of its value as a protection against irreparable losses when there is no remedy at law. We object to abuse of procedure and misapplication of injunctions because of the court's misunderstanding of the rights of wage earners and their exercise under present economic organization and environment. We believe that the bill drafted by the subcommittee of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, would remedy many of the practices that have robbed us of opportunity to exercise our rights.

This draft measure would declare as public policy the right of wage earners to organize and exercise organization rights. It declares illegal contracts by which employers force employees to give up organization rights which are enumerated. It forbids injunctions restricting the exercise of organization rights. It prescribed procedure in issuing injunctions. It provides rules for injunction cases.

This legislation is needed to establish for wage earners collectively the rights they have as individuals and to give them an opportunity to make progress as an organized group.

We have made constructive injunction legislation the paramount issue in our legislative campaign. Favorable action upon our proposal is of fundamental importance to wage earnings and to the general public, for it involves justice in daily work.

Legislation can provide the opportunity for organizing activities and for the strengthening of the trade union movement. General organization of wage earners into trade unions will have a dynamic effect on national development. The serious problem that confronts us is how to stabilize prosperity.

Technical progress has enabled us to increase wealth at a faster rate than we have been able to work out methods for its equitable distribution. We have been producing larger outputs which have greatly increased the incomes of a minority. Here we have a primary error in our machinery for balance. Balanced or progressive equilibrium is essential to sustained progress. Mass purchasing power (largely incomes of wage earners) has not kept pace with mass production.

"Right-to-Work" Legislation—(1953, pp. 204, 638) The E.C. submitted a report on the status of right-to-work legislation in the several states. The following report of the convention committee considering this subject was unanimously approved:

Of all types of state legislation, the various "Right-to-Work" laws, directed against Labor and destroying union security, represent the greatest danger to organized labor and to the standards of living of all workers. Only in the past few weeks has the State of Alabama been added to the list of those states which have adopted this pernicious legislation.

All state federations of labor must oppose such legislation with renewed vigor. In many states, organized labor, by pointing out the anti-union character of this legislation, has successfully prevented the passage of proposed "Right-to-Work" laws. We will not rest, however, until the existing anti-union statutes prohibiting any type of union security contracts have been eradicated from the law-books of the 14 states which now have this legislation.

(Pp. 411, 650):

Whereas—Under the doctrine of states' rights, laws deceptively entitled "right to work," fostered and promoted by reactionary anti-labor interests, were enacted January 1, 1953, by 13 states, including Arizona, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Iowa, Nebraska, Nevada, North Carolina, Colorado, Kansas, Maryland, Massachusetts and Wisconsin (Maine, Massachusetts, New Mexico, Delaware, Louisiana and New Hampshire have repealed them), that outlaw all forms of union security clauses, including closed shop, union shop, preferential hiring, maintenance of membership and exclusive bargaining rights, for the purpose of curbing and reducing the membership and bargaining power of trade unions, if not to destroy them, and

Whereas—This growing and sinister "right to work" campaign harks back to the old open shop movement of the 20's, which had as its purpose, the destruction of trade unionism, backed by the manufacturers' associations, boards of trade, chambers of commerce, builders' associations, so-called "citizens' associations" and even business farmers organizations, which came up with the sugar-coated named of the American Plan, calculated to serve as a decoy duck to the well-meaning but misguided workers, imposing upon them the yellow dog contract, management dominated industrial councils, employee plans of representation, just another name for company unions, court injunctions against strikes that the bosses used to beat down bona fide collective bargaining through recognized standard trade unions and the principle of self-organization and the designation of representatives by, of and for wage earners, without interference, coercion or intimidation, therefore, be it

Resolved—That this Seventy-second Convention of the American Federation of Labor, assembled in St. Louis, Missouri, September, 1953, go on record as condemning the "right to work" laws as a menace to trade unions and the American way of life, since by weakening the trade union movement which fights for and achieves high wage levels, they reduce the purchasing power of the great masses of the wage earners which is the foundation of our expanding American economy.

(P. 650) Convention referred subject to officers of the A. F. of L. for guidance and study and such action as their findings may warrant.

(1954, p. 520) Seven resolutions, substantially the same, were submitted to the convention for action. They were considered jointly by the convention committee which reported the following resolutions, subsequently unanimously approved:

Whereas—So-called "right to work" laws now cover one-third of this nation, having been adopted in the following 17 states: Alabama, Arizona, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Iowa, Louisiana, Mississippi, Nebraska, Nevada, N. Carolina, N. Dakota, S. Carolina, S. Dakota, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia, and

Whereas—This represents an increase of four states in the last 18 months which have succumbed to the drive on the part of reactionary anti-union interests to put this vicious anti-American legislation into effect in a sufficient number of states, so it will, in practical effect, become the law of the land, even without Congressional action, and

Whereas—These so-called "right to work" laws are deliberately misnamed for the purpose of deceiving the people, degrading the employment standards of the workers and primarily as a device in opposition to organized labor in the attempt to discharge membership in trade unions; and

Whereas—Five other states—Colorado, Kansas, Maryland, Massachusetts and Wisconsin—have laws that restrict union security, and the legislatures in other states not yet affected have considered such legislation, and

Whereas—It is quite apparent that large national anti-labor groups are pushing a systematic program of attacking organized labor through the various state legislatures, and have already succeeded in crippling the effectiveness of the trade union movement in those states which have passed "right to work" laws, and

Whereas—"Right to work" laws have been properly branded as "right to scab" laws, because they prevent unions from negotiating any form of union security, guarantee the right of free riders to work in unionized shops, and ultimately break down union conditions, and

Whereas—The powerful anti-labor organizations that are spearheading this campaign in the state legislatures have taken on the trade union movement in those states where organized labor is weak, and these groups have already been so successful on the state level that they are virtually decimating the labor movement through these tactics and are succeeding in an insidious national plan to destroy organized labor by means of the state legislatures, therefore, be it

Resolved—That the American Federation of Labor launch at the earliest possible opportunity a full-scale drive to obtain repeal of all so-called "right to work" laws and to block enactment of any further laws of this type, and be it further

Resolved—That in order to implement this resolution, the American Federation of Labor take the following action:

1. Undertake an immediate study of the existing legislation and keep abreast of efforts of various state legislatures to enact such legislation.

2. Consider the calling of a special conference of state and local union officials to mobilize the full support of all affiliated groups for this campaign, and

3. Launch a full-scale campaign in each state to prevent enactment of such legislation, or to fight for its repeal by action of the respective legislatures or by referendum vote of the people.

4. Make a special effort to secure repeal of Section 14(b) of the Taft-Hartley law which gives these state laws priority over federal labor relations legislation.

Rio Grande Valley Development Project, Proposed—(1952, pp. 26, 463) Res. 15:

Whereas — It is the policy of the United States Government to assist undeveloped countries throughout the world in developing their natural and human resources, and

Whereas—There is a large undeveloped area in the Rio Grande Valley of the United States and the Republic of Mexico which, if properly developed, could improve the standards of living for the poverty stricken people in both countries, therefore, be it

Resolved—That this convention instruct its officers to call this matter to the attention of the proper authorities and urge that surveys be made and a joint project be worked out between the United States and Mexican Governments to develop the Rio Grande Valley basin.

Ritter (Anti-Picketing) Legal Case —(1942, p. 94) The Texas State Federation of Labor requested legal aid and assistance in an important case which was appealed from the Texas courts to the United States Supreme Court.

The Texas courts issued an injunction prohibiting members of the locals of the carpenters and painters unions from peacefully picketing the restaurant of a man by the name of Ritter, who had engaged a non-union contractor to erect another building for him a mile and a half away from his restaurant business. Before the building contract was let by Ritters, the unions had requested him to employ a union contractor, which he refused to do.

In a five-to-four decision the Supreme Court of the United States upheld the Texas courts. The majority opinion, written by Justice Frankfurter, held that the injunction was justified because the restaurant was not involved in the labor dispute. Justice Frankfurter, in effect, said that although Ritter was employing a non-union contractor and his building was being erected by non-union workers, yet his restaurant business or any other business conducted by him was immune from ordinary and peaceful union pressure. He declared that the non-union contractor was the real adversary of the union, and that Ritter was a "neutral" in the controversy.

This is a most unfortunate decision because under this doctrine, as pointed out by Justice Reed in his dissent, the unions could not have picketed Ritter even though he was erecting an addition to his present restaurant. . . .

It is hoped that the logic and accurate legal reasoning of the dissenting opinions will in short time persuade a majority of the court to renounce the indefensible Ritter doctrine.

Rochdale Consumers Plan—(1947, p. 206) In a section of its report on Consumer Cooperatives and Credit Unions, the E.C. stated: For the past 30 years the American Federation of Labor has repeatedly endorsed genuine Rochdale consumers' cooperation. In this form of cooperation, control is always in the hands of a democratic organization of consumers.

Roosevelt, F. D. (New Deal Blanket Endorsement Withheld) — (1939, p. 442) Res. 27 requested a blanket endorsement for the "New Deal" and to President Roosevelt. The resolution and convention action thereon follow:

Resolved—That the Connecticut Federation of Labor, in convention assembled, expresses its confidence in the principles and ideals of President Roosevelt's New Deal Administration, and expresses the hope that the President will press forward toward his enlightened, liberal, and humanitarian objectives. While the New Deal and Labor are not one, no previous Administration has been as friendly to Labor, and Labor must support the New Deal and oppose the conservatives of both parties who, in the last session of Congress combined to defeat New Deal measures and thus injure such groups as the unemployed, men, women and children who work for sub-standard wages in shop, field, and factory; the business men whose profits depend upon greater buying power; and the underprivileged who live in the slums; be it further

Resolved—This convention take notice of the fact that similar A. F. of L. conventions in such states as Ohio, Iowa, Missouri, and Tennessee, have already spoken out vigorously and without hesitation on these crucial issues of 1940; be it therefore finally

Resolved—That this convention, for the reasons given above, recommend to the National Convention of the American Federation of Labor that it give its full support to the New Deal and to President Roosevelt, and that our delegate to that convention be hereby instructed to present to the convention, and vote for, the sentiments contained in this resolution.

This resolution calls for a blanket endorsement of what is popularly known as the "New Deal" without defining what is covered by the term "New Deal."

In addition, it calls for the condemnation of the members of the political party in power who failed to support all so-called "New Deal" measures, and for the same condemnation of members of the minority party who had done likewise.

The actions of previous conventions on certain legislative measures, the action of special conferences called by the American Federation of Labor, and recommendations made in connection with certain measures by the American Federation of Labor, make it impossible for your committee to recommend any blanket endorsement as called for by the resolution.

The resolution does not distinguish between Congressional and Administrative action, neither does it distinguish between actions of the Administration, and of bureaus, boards and commissions.

The Houston Convention of the A. F. of L. instructed the Executive Council to energetically work to prevent the confirmation of Donald Wakefield Smith as a member of the National Labor Relations Board.

The American Federation of Labor was actively opposed to the enactment of the first Reorganization Bill.

The American Federation of Labor was actively and energetically opposed to the legislative measure which destroyed the prevailing wage which had previously protected Labor.

The Houston Convention of the American Federation of Labor by a unanimous vote, insisted upon amendments to the Wagner Act, not in any opposition to the basic provisions of the Act, but because of its biased administration.

On the other hand, your committee is fully conscious of the many legislative and executive acts which have proven most beneficial to Labor, some of them, such as Social Security, providing a necessary protection to Labor which should have been enacted many years ago.

Your committee, however, has cited several instances where the American Federation of Labor in its efforts to protect Labor's rights and welfare, has been forced to oppose legislation understood to have been originated by the "New Deal." We have avoided any cataloguing of those "New Deal" measures which we have favored and which we have opposed.

Your committee is further of the opinion that members of Congress cannot be arbitrarily divided into "New Deal" and anti-New Deal, for a number of those who have been our outstanding champions over many years, and who have supported the majority of "New Deal" measures, have also at times opposed some measures which were recognized as "New Deal."

For these and many other reasons, your committee regrets the introduction of the resolution. It is obvious that a political construction would be placed upon the rejection of the resolution, and equally so upon its adoption.

The hearty support which the trade union movement has given to a large number of "New Deal" measures should not lead this convention to give its blanket endorsement of all legislation which has been proposed or enacted by the so-called "New Deal," neither should our opposition to certain "New Deal" legislative and administrative acts permit us to voice condemnation of the "New Deal."

(1940, p. 312) In a letter addressed to the convention, the President expressed regret at inability to attend convention in person due to war emergency, but sent a message to be read. In part this message said:

"Now we have come to a period which demands intense and sustained cooperation so that our beloved Republic can present, in any emergency which might be forced upon us, the solid, imposing front of a great and united democracy. In order to do this successfully all of us are called upon to work together in a common purpose and for the common good that these United States shall stand forever free and that the institutions, we as a free people enjoy, shall ever be preserved. To this end Labor can make its contribution along with the rest of the American people. I am confident that this contribution will be generously and gladly given without reservation.

Labor will lend its aid in planning for full efficiency of industrial production, in planning for selection, training and placement of new workers, in planning for full labor supply, in maintaining the social gains of recent Labor and social legislation, in maintaining sound and uninterrupted work in the defense industries and in promoting sound employer-worker relationship at a time like this when the steady flow of production may be our greatest need. Sacrifice may be necessary in the future for every one. Responsible action and self-discipline, physical and moral fitness are now required of all of us as our part in the defense of our country and democracy.

Among the things which Labor will contribute, is, I venture to suggest, an unselfish, a far-sighted and a patriotic effort to bring about a just and an honorable peace within the now divided labor movement. Labor leaders, with the interest of the nation at heart, and the advantage of their followers in mind, can, I am sure, find the way to reach such a peace.

Peace may not be easy to achieve and the intricate problems involved may not be easy to solve. But when men of honor and good intentions sit down together they can work out a solution which will restore the much needed harmony either by unity or by a sensible working arrangement."

(P. 314) In reply a telegram was addressed to President Roosevelt pledging full support of A. F. of L. in defense plans and policies as follows:

"New Orleans, La.
November 18, 1940.

To the President of the United States,
The White House,
Washington, D. C.

"Please accept the profound thanks of all those in attendance at our convention for your most inspiring message. Be assured of the full support of the membership of the American Federation of Labor in the execution of the government's defense plans and policies. You can rely upon us to give freely of our skill, training service and labor to America in order to safeguard and protect our common heritage of freedom, liberty and democracy and in the realization of the common objectives set forth in the fifth paragraph of your appealing communication wherein you state 'Labor will lend its aid in planning for full efficiency of industrial production, in planning for selection, training and placement of new workers, in planning for full labor supply, in maintaining the social gains of recent Labor and social legislation, in maintaining sound and uninterrupted work in the defense industries and in promoting sound employer-worker relationship at a time like this when the steady flow of production may be our greatest need. Sacrifice may be necessary in the future for everyone. Responsible action and self-discipline, physical and moral fitness are now required of all of us as our part in the defense of our country and democracy.'

"We deeply appreciate the suggestion you make that 'an unselfish, a farsighted and a patriotic effort be made to bring about a just and honorable peace with the now divided labor movement.' Fortunately we can officially make answer to your suggestion in a most definite and sincere way. The Executive Council included in its report to the Sixtieth Annual Convention of the American Federation of Labor the following recommendation, 'The Executive Council fully understands the need of unity and solidarity within the ranks of Labor. It entertains a full and deep appreciation, as well as a complete understanding of the value of united action and of the mobilization of the full strength, power and influence of the workers of the nation into one united American labor movement. The Executive Council is firmly of the opinion that Labor in America can be solidified and united through affiliation with the American Federation of Labor. In order to accomplish this purpose and realize this objective, the Executive Council reports to the Sixtieth Annual Convention of the American Federation of Labor that it has endeavored to re-establish unity within the labor movement through conferences with representatives of the C.I.O. and has endeavored to bring about a settlement of existing differences during the past year. The committee representing the American Federation of Labor stands ready and willing to meet with a committee representing the C.I.O. for the purpose of negotiating a settlement, anywhere, any time, any place.'

"Your suggestion, therefore, that when men of honor and good intentions sit down together they can work out a solution which will restore the much needed harmony either by unity or by a sensible working arrangement is coincidental with this recommendation of the Executive Council to the convention now in session.

"I am confident the convention will concur in the recommendations of the Executive Council by officially authorizing the committee representing the American Federation of Labor to meet with a committee representing the C.I.O. around the conference table for the purpose of negotiating an honorable peace and the re-establishment of unity and solidarity within the ranks of Labor.

"I repeat, Mr. President, that these assurances will be carried out in good faith and with all sincerity whenever opportunity for the American Federation of Labor to do so presents itself.

WILLIAM GREEN, President,
American Federation of Labor."

(Birthday Holiday)—(1947, p. 660)
Res. 117, referred to the E.C.:

Whereas—When the history of the trade union movement in our nation is written, a very prominent place will be given to one whose far-sightedness and whose spirit of fairness, and whose consciousness of the needs of mankind, have left an indelible mark upon the development of our country, and

Whereas—The organized labor movement is very conscious of the contributions made by the late President Franklin Delano Roosevelt to the welfare of his country, and

Whereas—His life vibrated with the heartening warmth and brilliant glow of humanity, which reflected so wholeheartedly upon the masses of our people, and more especially upon those who toiled, so that they might live, and

Whereas—It is essentially important that the organized labor movement should strive to give to humanity a lasting reminder that the ideals and spirit of Franklin D. Roosevelt are deathless, and

Whereas—It is eminently fitting that the initiative to create this lasting reminder should come from the labor movement, to whom President Roosevelt's leadership and achievements have meant so much, therefore, be it

Resolved—That this great convention of the American Federation of Labor assembled in convention, go on record urging Congress to declare the birthday of our late President Franklin Delano Roosevelt, as a national legal holiday.

(1952, pp. 25, 462) Res. 11:

Whereas—The greatest strides that were made by the American labor movement were made during the term of office of our late President, Franklin D. Roosevelt, and

Whereas—He did, during his term of office, maintain his interest in the welfare of the working men and working women of this nation, and

Whereas—It would be fitting to set aside one day of each year to memorialize his many good deeds, therefore, be it

Resolved — That January 30, the day our late President, Franklin D. Roosevelt, was born, be set aside as a national holiday, and be it further

Resolved—That the Seventy-first Convention of the American Federation of Labor take appropriate action to sponsor legislation that would result in the naming of our late President, Franklin D. Roosevelt's birthday, January 30, as a national holiday

Roosevelt Memorial Association (Honors President Green)—(1930, p. 338) During the past year the Roosevelt Memorial Association selected the president of the A. F. of L. as one of the three citizens of the United States who contributed distinguished service to social progress. The outstanding service of President Green to industrial peace in the past year was cited by the association as the basis for the award.

This distinguished honor to the president of the A. F. of L. is a recognition of the economic statesmanship which President Green has contributed to the whole field of industrial relations. This high token of appreciation of the spokesman of the American labor movement is in effect an endorsement of the constructive policies and principles of the American trade union movement and our conception of the mutuality of national progress.

The A. F. of L. is a great economic institution whose purpose is orderly progress for wage earners that they may keep abreast social and economic progress of all other groups. Because President Green has been most effective and convincing in maintaining Labor's principle of constructive progress, he has been selected for a great personal honor which at the same time brings honor to the organization of which he is president.

We propose therefore that the convention of the A. F. of L. express its gratification at the honor conferred upon President Green and our appreciation of an award that in such a notable way focuses attention upon the principles for which our organization stands—the methods and policies of constructive progress.

Rural Mail Service—(1932, p. 239) There have been proposals from a number of sources that the rural mail delivery service be placed on a contract basis to the distinct disadvantage of 40,000 rural letter carriers whose wage and working standards, as well as their civil service status, would be destroyed. Furthermore, the so-called star route service, which is on a contract basis, is being steadily expanded to encroach upon and to duplicate in many instances the work of the rural delivery service.

The A. F. of L. instructs the E.C. to give all necessary cooperation to the National Federation of Rural Letter Carriers in carrying out its program to protect the rural carriers and the rural service against all destructive encroachments.

(1934, pp. 75, 397) Part of the reduced compensation for rural letter carriers was restored in the last session of Congress. The equipment allowance was increased from 4 cents to 5 cents, with the proviso that such allowance should not be changed except pursuant to law enacted hereafter by Congress. A previous reduction had been made by executive order. The salary of carriers on the rural routes of thirty miles, six days a week, was fixed at $1,800; on routes less than thirty miles, $60.00 per mile per annum for each mile or major fraction thereof. Carriers assigned to routes served six days a week shall receive $20.00 per mile per annum on routes in excess of thirty miles. Those on routes served three days a week shall receive $10 per mile per annum where the route is in excess of thirty miles. No consolidation of rural routes shall be made otherwise than on account of the resignation, death, retirement, or dismissal on charges of carriers in the rural mail delivery service.

The president of the National Federation of Rural Letter Carriers, visited Washington and appeared before the Post-Office Committee of the House of Representatives in favor of better conditions for the rural letter carriers. Representatives of the A. F. of L. aided in securing the changes made.

The Postmaster-General announced after his appointment in March 1933 that there were over 40,000 rural letter carriers and that the intention was to reduce the number to 30,000. There are at present 38,000 rural letter carriers. This number is being reduced approximately 100 per week.

(1938, p. 564) The A. F. of L. endorses the proposed legislation that no Rural Mail Carrier shall be required to work more than eight hours per day, five days per week and that no rural carrier shall be reduced in pay because of adjustment of route. Also endorses proposed legislation that no Rural Mail Carrier be transferred from one city to another against his wishes in order to consolidate rural routes.

(1939, p. 425) S. 1663 and House Bill H.R. 4588 are now pending in Congress providing an 8-hour limit workday except in an emergency, with pay for overtime; a 5-day week; the basic salary paid by the time required to complete duty instead of by the present unfair mileage system; no reduction in basic salary for any carrier now in service, and a 6 cents per mile day equipment maintenance according to the length of the route. Now there is no limit as to hours rural carriers can be required to work and a large number are now required to work hours far in excess of 40 hours per week within 6 days. The E.C. is directed to assist and further this legislation to have it passed during the present Congress.

(P. 425) The E.C. is directed to assist and endeavor to have enacted legislation that will be before the next session of Congress, which will provide for appointment of rural carrier substitutes from a Civil Service roster, which will later entitle them to appointment as a regular carrier according to seniority when a vacancy exists at the post office to which they are assigned.

Russia, Boycott (also see: German Boycott—1939; Communism) — (1939, pp. 225, 523) The convention unanimously approved the recommendations of the E.C. in reaffirming previous declarations favoring boycott of German goods and German services, and further stated: "... and for the same reasons, that the boycott be equally applied to all Russian manufactured goods and services, and that it further be applied to all other countries joining with Russia and Germany in the present conflict between the totalitarian governments and the great parliamentary nations of Europe."

(1926, p. 262) Resolutions favoring the recognition of the Russian government were unanimously defeated. The convention declared:

There has been no essential change in either the character or the operations of that regime since we last had the question under consideration. It remains a regime of enslavement, a regime determined to bring about world revolution if and when possible. Through the Red Internationale, which is controlled by the Communist Party of Russia, the soviet regime has continued its efforts to undermine and destroy the democratic labor movement of the U.S. Its lack of progress in that direction is due, not to any lack of determination on its part, but to the strength and deep conviction of the membership of the American trade union movement. If it is not the assassin standing over the prostrate body of freedom and democracy, it is always the would-be assassin, and we can be no less opposed to the one than to the other.

We are not interested in the commercial aspect of the question, agreeing fully with President Coolidge in holding that American principles are not to be bartered. Nor is the question changed by whatever may be the change—and there has so far been little—in the economic condition of the people of Russia. A regime of enslavement which for a purpose sees fit to feed its slaves well at times is no less a regime of slavery and no less repugnant and hateful in the sight of those who cherish liberty.

We extend our profound sympathy to the masses of the people of Russia, oppressed as they are, terrorized as they are whenever terrorism suits the purposes of the fiendish regime under which they exist, awed as they are at all times by a Red army which constitutes the most powerful and dangerous military machine in the world, and hopeless as they seem to be of any immediate release from their economic, moral, political and spiritual enslavement.

We regard the Soviet regime in Russia as the most unscrupulous, most antisocial, most menacing institution in the world today. Between it and our form of political and social organization there can be no compromise of any kind. We repeat the call to American trade unionists to stand true to their faith, to be militant in their defense of the principles of freedom and justice for which our movement stands and upon which our democracy rests its foundation walls.

Finally, we call attention to the recent declaration of our E.C. in which it was well said that our movement not only cannot join in any mission to investigate conditions in Russia, but deems any such mission wholly unnecessary. We desire to record our approval of that declaration and to add in this report the conviction that no trade unionist should permit himself to participate in any such adventure. Ample information is at hand and is constantly available concerning every particular which enters into our calculations in arriving at a decision on our course of action.

(P. 276) The president said: It seems to me proper and fitting that upon this very outstanding and important question the President of the A. F. of L. should say a few words and express his opinion relative thereto. There is no doubt in my mind regarding the attitude of the great majority of the delegates in this convention toward this report. We know that it will be adopted by a most decisive and overwhelming vote, but there are one or two things to which I would like to attract your attention.

It seems that at each convention of the A. F. of L. we are called upon to pass judgment upon the question involved in this committee's report, and this notwithstanding the fact that it is the well known settled policy of the great hosts of labor as represented in the A. F. of L. that it will not lend its approval to any proposal to recognize the existing government in Russia until it first quits making war upon the A. F. of L.

We have no objection to the kind of government the Russian people may set up or that they may support. We grant the peoples of every nation throughout the world the right of self-government. If the people of Russia believe in Communism and the Communistic philosophy, if they believe in the rule of autocracy and a dictatorship, then we accord the people of that great country the right to live under that form of government; but we object most seriously to the attempt that is methodically and systematically being made, in season and out of season, to crowd down the throats of the liberty loving people of America the Russian philosophy, and that it what we protest against.

It seems that the trade union movement of our country has been selected as the object of attack; it seems that our movement has been selected principally by those who control the Communist Party in Russia as the instrumentality and the vehicle through which they seek to establish their form of government here.

May I read to you the declaration of the Executive Committee of the Communist Internationale located at Moscow. It is as follows: "It is of extreme importance to the life and growth of the Communist Party that its members as a whole realize better the necessity of more offensive work in the labor unions, the capture of leadership of the labor unions. The capture of leadership of the labor union masses is vitally necessary, not only for the Communist Party at this time but also for the ultimate victory of the revolutionary struggle. The capture of the labor unions is our first and foremost task. For this purpose the Communist Party advocates that every Communist be a union member to organize a Communist faction in every union, to expose the officials of every union—"whatever that means"—to make fights in elections for officers of unions and delegates to conventions."

In conformity with that specific instruction the representative of one branch of the Communist Party in America sent a letter broadcast throughout the land just prior to this convention instructing their members to elect delegates to this convention, not trade unionists, but to elect Communist members of the left wing. The servant heard his master's voice, and in conformity with the autocracy set up in Russia the echo was here and he spoke, carrying out those specific instructions.

"At all conventions to introduce systematic and well prepared campaigns against officers." There isn't an officer of a responsible trade union in this convention that has not felt the effect of this poisonous propaganda. In every convention of practically every union affiliated with our movement these men are there with their poison undermining the standing, the character and good name of the officers of the A. F. of L. They seem to assume that if they can destroy confidence in the officers of our union, if those surreptitious attacks will succeed they will destroy the magnificent union itself.

"To arouse the masses to take up strikes and wage movements and to then skillfully utilize such movements for political ends. To oppose the amalgamation of labor banks and labor insurance, to make use of independent, dual and rival unions, to promote general discord and hatred and contempt for the existing order of things, especially among the foreign born." We have had some evidence of this in the City of New York.

A Communist elected or appointed to any official position in a union is under strict control of the Communist organization and the immediate instructions of the party faction in the union. The Communists also have an elaborate plan for establishing shop nuclei or committees to work in similar lines in shops not organized; in fact, the whole Communist Party is now organized as a shop nucleus. Only unemployed Communists can belong to the Communist Party unless they belong also to a shop nucleus.

Are we to be deceived? Are we as wise, experienced men with our eyes wide open to accept the sophistry of men and nurse to our bosom until it is warmed into life a reptile that would sink its fangs into our body and destroy us forever? That is what the trade union movement must decide and that is what it must face.

A short time ago a celebration was held in honor of the great apostle of Communism, Mr. Lenin. These meetings were held in the City of New York on the second anniversary of the death of Lenin. The press reports that one of the speakers was Charles Krombein. He was the chairman, and he declared that though Lenin was dead his spirit still lived and that an offensive instead of a merely defensive agitation was being started against capitalism. William C. Weinstone, general secretary of the Workers Communist Party of New York, also urged those present to establish a Soviet government in the United States. They understand their instructions. He condemned the present labor leaders for urging employers and employes to get together, declaring that a civil war of the classes was the only way by which the end could be accomplished.

The audience arose when Benjamin Gitlow entered the hall and when he came forward to speak Gitlow described Wall Street as "The home of the most arrogant, capitalistic system of all." He told of the work being done to gain control of the trade unions. M. J. Olgin, Communist author, speaking in Russian, said that Lenin's ideals were better realized today than they were when he lived. Other speakers told of what is being done among the children and of the movement to get recognition of Soviet Russia by the U.S. All the speakers appealed for support of workers in "bringing the day when the red flag will be the national emblem and the White House would be painted red."

Here is a report of Mr. Tomskey, who, I understand, is very important in what they call the trade union movement of Russia. In arguing for the centralization of power in the Central Committee in Russia, he said:

"We must also repeat what we have said more than once. All directives and orders of the All-Union Congresses—a section of the Party—and of the All-Central Soviet Trade Unions and of the All-Russian Central Soviet of Trade Unions, as the organ directing from Congress to Congress and working under the direct control of the Central Committee of the Party, under its sleepless observation, must be obligatory for realization locally. In conclusion, I consider it my duty to recall that the international work, like all work of the All-Russian Central Soviet of Trade Unions, including the international, has been carried on under the direct control of our Central Committee of the Party."

There is no doubt about this work being carried on radiating from Moscow out into all the world, a direct attempt to control our trade unions and through that control to substitute the philosophy of Communism with its class warfare and its violence, for the philosophy of the trade union movement as we understood it since its foundation.

I repeat again that if Russia wants to be Russia, if it wishes to be Communistic, if it wishes to live under a dictatorship and an autocratic form of government where freedom and liberty are neither practiced nor the words known, then, so let it be with Russia; but let it be within the confines of their own nation, and until they change their policy of vicious propaganda among our trade unions I am of the opinion that the trade union movement of America will vigorously oppose the recognition of that government by the government of the U.S.

This is our movement; we have come along the pathway of progress through all these many years; we know from experience what the record is. It is our philosophy, it is a part of our souls, our lives, it is something more than perfunctory membership in an organization. The trade unionist feels his organization, he feels it so deeply that he cannot command language that would adequately express his feelings. His devotion to this cause is great and many have given their lives in defense of it. And are we, to whom have been given the Ark of the Covenant, are we, the ones who maintain in our possession the virtues of our movement, to risk it now for sure destruction if those who would destroy it have their way by welcoming into our midst a stream of poison that would destroy our whole movement.

It was Abraham Lincoln who said in the most striking sentence that human ears have ever listened to, "You can fool some of the people all the time, you can fool all of the people some of the time, but you cannot fool all of the people all of the time." And so I say, paraphrasing that statement, that there may be those who can fool some of our trade unionists all of the time, who can fool some of them part of the time, but who cannot fool all of them all of the time.

And so, my friends, we are face to face with a momentous decision. I have respect for the judgment of those who differ with me, but it seems to me when the very life of our movement is at stake that there should be no difference of opinion regarding the course we should pursue. I am heartily in favor of the committee's report and I hope it will be adopted by such a decisive vote that there will be no doubt in the minds of the American people and the people throughout the world where the American Federation of Labor stands.

Relations With (also see: Communism, Foreign Policy)—(1947, p. 465)

The report of the convention committee was unanimously adopted as follows:

The tragic plight of mankind is glaringly revealed in the speed with which it is travelling toward another global conflagration. Two score millions are still under arms, while the world hungers for every grain of food, every cent of cash and every ounce of energy for productive work. Here are millions taken out of industry. They should instead be engaged in rebuilding the economy and raising the standard of living and purchasing power of the people. The Soviet regime which has been loudest in accusing demobilized America and other nations of war-mongering maintains a fully-equipped army of four millions—more than in 1939, before Germany and Japan were crushed. It continues to mobilize hundreds of thousands of youths in their 'teens for labor services in its gigantic war machine. And this despite the fact that with Nazi Germany and Nipponese imperialism smashed, no nation threatens or can endanger Russia's security today. Nor has the Soviet's adamant refusal to accept any international control and inspection of atomic weapons served the cause of world peace.

The Russian dictatorship bears the heaviest responsibility for the prevailing dangerous international tensions. Its spokesmen in the UN have paralyzed every attempt to develop it into an effective instrument of world peace.

Its Fifth Columnists, the Communists in the various countries, have under instructions and guidance from the Kremlin been working tirelessly to hinder and halt economic restoration, to paralyze and prevent post-war reconstruction, to provoke destructive social conflict, and promote economic collapse and chaos! These are the real aims of the newly reconstituted Comintern. While the primary aim of the United States is to promote reconstruction and prevent chaos, the primary aim of the Russian government is to prevent reconstruction and promote chaos.

The Soviet propagandists have, in the worst Goebbels-like fashion, slandered and vilified the American people who have been pouring out billions to help save millions from famine on both sides of the Iron Curtain. The Soviet government-owned press and its servile agents and tools in every land are feverishly howling for an economic collapse in the United States. "In the name of their so-called higher democracy, the Soviet dictators have been disfranchising and destroying not the Nazis and Fascists but the most loyal democratic elements in the Russian satellite states. The brutal rape of Hungarian democracy and the cold-blooded "legal" murder of the world-renowned democratic leader Petkov in Bulgaria are part of the international Communist pattern to exterminate all individuals devoted to democratic ideals as well as democracy itself. In fact, the Soviet rulers are relying, in large measure, on Nazi totalitarians to serve their own brand of totalitarianism.

Despite the fact that the Soviet dictatorship has been treating the United States as if it were already at war against the American people, American labor and the American people as a whole have only respect and friendly feelings for the Russian people. We distinguish between the Russian people and the war-breeding dictatorship which runs their country and denies them all rights and liberties and frantically seeks to extend its slave system to more nations. We are confident that the Russian people, like ourselves, want only a chance to work under decent conditions as free men in a peaceful world, and we look forward to the day when they will enjoy the blessings of a free people. The Bolshevik bureaucracy seeks to isolate their victimized subjects from other peoples and to insulate them against the ideas and ideals of democracy. At the same time, it desperately drives to infect the rest of the world with the destructive doctrines and degrading dogmas of their town type of totalitarianism.

Under the cover of bogus blocs and counterfeit coalitions and "united fronts" the Communists have already snuffed out the independence of several small defenseless nations. The Russian dictatorship is today menacing the national existence of the people of Austria and China.

It is false to estimate the present world crisis as a conflict between East and West. In reality it is a struggle between these sections of Europe and the world that are still free and those dictators and their puppets who seek to consolidate their enslaved areas and drive more nations into totalitarian captivity. In this struggle for liberty and human dignity, the American people have a vital stake. A world engulfed by totalitarian slavery cannot long have islets of freedom—no matter how large such islets may appear on the map.

The Executive Council's Report emphasizes the need to understand the foreign situation and to adopt clear-cut policies to promote the purposes of democracy. Since that report was written documents released from Paris, Moscow, and from Belgrade have made plain the hostile intent of the Moscow POLITBURO and its deliberate purpose to block recovery in Western Europe. The new Information Bureau is obviously the Comintern under a new name as the instrumentality by which the Communist Party can directly coordinate its activities in an attempt to influence foreign policies of other countries. The Bureau is to fight the Marshall Plan and so-called U.S. imperialism. The effect of this has been to polarize the world into two groups—those believing in individual rights and those believing the central government should dominate individuals. Cooperation between Soviet countries and Western countries is no longer possible for the Soviets officially make it plain that their purpose is aggression and the ruin of democracies.

It is plain that unless the U.S.S.R. is shorn of its veto power, it will deadlock and disrupt the United Nations. We therefore urge upon our Government that it do its utmost to secure favorable action on two proposals made by Secretary Marshall; that the General Assembly set up a continuous agency and that the veto be limited. The A. F. of L. believes it should be abolished to make possible majority rule.

We believe that economic recovery within Europe must be buttressed by an increasing degree of cooperation covering Western European countries similar to the Inter-American Defense Treaty. Such agreements are provided for in the United Nations Charter and afford practical channels for organizing the necessary military protection.

In this world in which there is little peace, we must maintain our objectives and our institutions. Peace has to be real before we can safely disarm.

The American people are not seeking to impose their way of life, their freedom, or any economic or political system on other nations. But all enemies of liberty and peace had better realize that the American people will never allow any power or combination of powers and puppets to impose their slave system on the United States. We likewise resent and oppose any other power or combination of powers imposing their system on any other people.

(Appeasement Opposed)—(1949, p. 435) The following policy statement with regard to appeasement of Soviet Russia was contained in an adopted committee report on the general world situation:

The atomic explosion by imperialist Russia has violently contracted the peaceful world. We firmly warn against any attempts to revive a policy of appeasement of Soviet imperialism at this critical juncture. The Russian dictatorship had refused to make any concessions or the slightest compromise for lasting peace when it was militarily weaker. There is nothing in the lives or activities of the Communist oligarchy to warrant any conclusion that it will be more cooperative and peaceful when it has at its disposal more powerful and destructive weapons. In its foreign as well as in its domestic affairs, the present Russian government has been increasingly pursuing policies based on zoology rather than sociology—the ethics and practices of the jungle rather than those of peaceful civilized society.

More than ever before, must the freedom-loving peoples, therefore, draw closer together. The American people, who now constitute the strongest bulwark of democracy and the primary obstacle in the path of totalitarian Soviet world conquest, must gird themselves for still greater efforts to insure their security and liberty and to help build a more prosperous, peaceful and free world.

In Communist Russia and its totalitarian empire, the democratic world faces a robotized monolithic despotism stretching from Berlin to beyond the Yangtse. This red tyranny is further buttressed by a vigorous fifth column operating in all free countries under various names, colors and covers. In the latter we face a band of fanatics who have no loyalty to their democratic homelands. Here are zealous "revolutionary" traitors who do not necessarily operate for money but for a tyrannical, dogmatic movement which is far more dangerous to the humanitarian ideals and interests, to freedom of conscience, and to the well-being of all mankind. Here is an anti-social movement whose political "principles" demand that its adherents, fellow-travellers, and camp-followers betray their own peoples to a foreign totalitarian power seeking world domination. Here are the hidden thieves of our national security and welfare.

It is true that without adequate military power there can be no security against this world-wide menace. But it would be folly to conclude that military prowess alone can assure our security and world peace. Russia's Cominform and its followers and supporters in other lands are not a political force—in the democratic sense of the word—but a germ latent in our body-politic which becomes virulent whenever there is a weakening in its health through poverty, social injustice, or lack of democratic unity and initiative. The democratic nations must, therefore, simultaneously supplement their collective armed might with constructive and progressive economic, social, and political policies.

(1950, pp. 19, 458) Res. 2 proposed that a sharp line of distinction be drawn between feelings of U.S. toward leaders of Russian people, and the people themselves. The resolution was unanimously adopted:

Whereas—The relations between the Communist dictatorship of Russia and our country and the other free nations have gravely deteriorated, and

Whereas—The increasing tension and antagonism are due solely to the aggressive imperialist course of the Kremlin regime and its utilization of the Cominform and the W.F.T.U. as instruments of subversion and espionage in furtherance of these rapacious and war-breeding policies, and

Whereas—In preparation for further military assaults against other nations and for plunging mankind into another catastrophic war, the Soviet regime is feverishly seeking to stir up among the people of the Russian empire suspicion, hysterical fear and hatred of the democratic countries and particularly the United States as enemies of the Russian nation, and

Whereas — The American people bear no hostility toward or hatred of the Russian people for whom our nation has traditionally had a warm friendship and sincere admiration as evidence in our active sympathy for them in their years of courageous struggle against Czarist tyranny and in our unstinting aid to them when they were threatened with national extinction by the Hitler hordes, therefore, be it

Resolved—That this Convention of the American Federation of Labor call upon the United States government and all its appropriate agencies to make clear to the Russian people that we distinguish sharply between them and the dictatorship ruling over them, that the American people are the friends and not the enemies of the Russian people, and that our conflict is solely with despotic rulers in the Kremlin thirsting for world domination, and be it further

Resolved—That through the Voice of America and all other appropriate official channels, our government should make it clear to the people of the U.S.S.R. that it is against American policy to impose on the Russian or any other people any political regime, or social and economic system, not of their own free choice, and be it further

Resolved—That the Convention empower the Executive Council through the Free Trade Union Committee and in cooperation with the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions to develop a program and take the necessary practical measures for reaching and making clear to the people of Russia and providing them with the message of international free trade union solidarity and assurance that together with all the workers of the world hope and strive for the day when the working people of all countries will lose all political and economic chains and be truly free men in one free and peaceful world.

(Economic Aid to Russia and Her Satellites)—(1951, pp. 125, 528) The Executive Council reported on proposed legislation (Wherry Amendment) which would have prevented assistance to nations carrying on trade of military goods with Russia and her satellites. The A. F. of L. supported efforts to prevent the passage of the legislation.

"Slave Labor in Russia" (Publication)—(1949, p. 452) The report of the convention committee on forthcoming publication of SLAVE LABOR IN RUSSIA, was unanimously approved by the convention:

The damning evidence on forced labor in the Soviet Union submitted by the American Federation of Labor to the United Nations was released today in book form in St. Paul, Minn., where the Federation is holding its 68th annual convention.

The 192-page book entitled "Slave Labor in Russia" contains evidence from many sources to support the contention which the A. F. of L. has long made that inhumane and slave labor conditions exist under the Communist regime. The A. F. of L. has taken the initiative in advocating before the United Nations that an international investigation of Soviet Labor camps be made. . . .

Your Committee on Internal Labor Relations recommends that every member undertake to purchase this book and become fully familiar with the slave labor conditions existing in Russia.

Sacco-Vanzetti Case—(1926, p. 242) The convention of the A. F. of L. of last year and of several years prior thereto have repeatedly declared that Sacco and Vanzetti should be accorded a new trial in order that no man's life may be placed in jeopardy without a just and fair trial and be found guilty beyond a reasonable doubt. This insistence for a new trial was predicated on the doubt of many as to the guilt of these men and because of the belief that the enforcement of this decision without a retrial and a full and complete opportunity to present all possible evidence having come to light either as to the guilt or innocence of these men would be a miscarriage of justice.

Safety (Laws)—(1932, p. 409) The A. F. of L. favors the submission to Congress of a legislative proposal to require that contractors engaged in the construction of buildings for the federal government must conform to the laws of the state in which they are operating relating to safety and the prevention of accidents in the building industry.

(1936, p. 126) So many deaths were occurring among workmen on public works that Congress considered remedial legislation. Representative Welch of California introduced a bill in the House which provided more adequate protection to workmen on projects wherever situated belonging to the U.S., by granting to the several states jurisdiction to enforce their state workmen's compensation, safety and insurance laws. This bill passed the House, but in the Senate the words "safety and insurance" were stricken out.

Many deaths had occurred in years gone by because state laws could not be enforced. One of these laws particularly referred to the erection of a skeleton of a building by iron workers. Some states require that a floor be laid in each story as fast as the structure is erected. Failure to include the safety provisions of state laws is a very grievous mistake. The A. F. of L. will endeavor in the next session of Congress to have the present law adequately amended.

As only a few states have safety laws that would protect the workers on government projects, therefore, it would be necessary that Congress itself enact safety legislation.

(Labor Dept. Bureau)—(1930, pp. 106, 233) The Labor Committee of the House reported favorably a bill to establish a safety bureau in the Department of Labor. The bureau would collect information that would be of value in preventing accidents. All safety devices would be made known to the manufacturers throughout the country and as fast as new inventions developed they would also be made public. The opposition appears to emanate from those who are agitating for a national museum to contain samples of machinery and transportation equipment. The A. F. of L. does not see where the safety bureau in the Department of Labor would interfere with the proposed national museum and, therefore, will continue to advocate the measure before Congress.

(Industrial)—(1939, p. 400) Industrial accidents in the United States during the last year alone caused 16,500 deaths and 1,350,000 injuries. The delegates to the 59th convention of the A. F. of L. hereby urge all affiliated labor groups, including local unions, to immediately organize safety committees within their organizations and to actively engage in the promotion of safe and healthful work practices; that this safety work be undertaken along the following specific lines:

- (1) study and analysis of the safety and health problems of each trade or industry and the preparation of recommendations for the prevention of accidents and occupational diseases.

- (2) inclusion in union agreements of clauses requiring the provision and maintenance of safe and healthful working conditions.

- (3) exertion of pressure on state and local authorities for the adequate regulation of industry through specific safety and health requirements to the end that industrial accidents and occupational diseases may be prevented.. The benefits of workmen's compensation laws to be extended to all workers and that exclusive state funds be set up so that injured workers will receive the full benefits due them, and at the same time bring about reduction in compensation insurance cost.

(1946, pp. 305, 526) The convention considered and adopted resolutions Nos. 43 and 115 dealing with industrial safety, requesting the Secretary of Labor to institute a nationwide program encompassing all manufacturers of industrial equipment and urging them to install proper safeguards when the machines are manufactured.

(Appliances, War Priority)—(1942, p. 584) The convention unanimously adopted the following resolution:

Whereas—Due to priorities, badly needed material used to make helmets for the protection of workers in war industries is not obtainable, as well as materials for screens to safeguard workers against exposed parts and movable machinery, and

Whereas—This is causing a great number of accidents in the shipyards as well as a serious interference in war production, therefore, be it

Resolved—By the annual convention of the A. F. of L. that all such materials be given priority status, and be it further

Resolved—That copies of the resolution be sent to the appropriate governmental bodies.

(State Legislation)—(1943, p. 88) The state legislatures completely ignored the need for adequate industrial safety measures and inspection staffs. About half the states have no authority to make safety codes for industry. Not one state was given such authority this year. The only legislation enacted was in the form of minor changes in safety standards for special groups of workers, such as employees of projection rooms in motion picture theaters.

The need for passage of the Norton Bill for federal aid to state labor departments to protect the health and safety of workers is amply demonstrated by the lack of interest shown by the states in this subject. This bill, H.R. 2800, was introduced in Congress at the request of the A. F. of L.

(Highway)—(1947, p. 630) Res. 16 was unanimously adopted as follows:

Whereas—Accidents in industry for the past few years have been decreasing in number because the A. F. of L., through its advocacy, teaching and legislative activities toward improved safety measures have been chiefly responsible in the lowering of industrial accidents, and

Whereas—While industrial accidents have been decreasing, automobile accidents have been increasing and from statistics produced by the National Safety Council it is learned that almost 70 per cent of all fatal automobile accidents occur between dusk and 10 p.m. at night, and

Whereas—Many reasons have been attributed for this extraordinary condition, but by tests actually made by organizations interested in accident prevention, we find that the chief cause of these accidents are lack of, or improper street and highway lighting, and

Whereas—This condition can be corrected by proper legislation and allocation of sufficient funds to properly light the highways and the streets of the cities of the U.S., therefore, be it

Resolved—That the A. F. of L. at its 66th convention, assembled in the City of San Francisco, beginning on the 6th day of October, 1947, pledges itself to the work of reducing to the lowest possible minimum, automobile accidents which have heretofore been caused from insufficient and improper lighting, and that we instruct our incoming officers to use their utmost powers and influence to bring about and cause the proper lighting of the highway system and the streets of the cities of these United States, and be it further

Resolved—That the incoming officers enlist the support of the U.S. Safety Council in the promotion of the remedial measures, and be it further

Resolved—That our action and efforts in this behalf is one of safety alone, bearing in mind that for every two industrial workers killed on the job there are 17 killed on the highways.

(Code, Uniform)—(1947, p. 556) The E.C. was instructed to study and take appropriate action on Res. 99 which called upon the A. F. of L. to sponsor federal legislation to create a uniform safety code covering industry in commerce or affecting interstate commerce; and to sponsor legislation setting up uniform and adequate financial compensation for industrial accidents and occupational diseases. The convention committee recommended that "in light of the hazards to those employed in states with fair standards," this resolution should be studied and acted upon as stated above.

(President's Conference on Industrial Safety)—(1949, p. 240) The federal government has undertaken a national campaign to reduce the needless annual toll of 2 million work injuries. The President called upon organized labor, management and all interested groups to pool their experience in this great common endeavor.

A Coordinating Committee was formed to organize the conference and work began on the compilation of conference reports and agenda. Fifty-one members of the A. F. of L., headed by President Green, played an active role in the deliberations of the conference.

One thousand two hundred delegates representing labor, management, federal and state government, insurance companies and nonofficial organizations with a basic interest in industrial safety, met in Washington to work out a program whereby it was hoped to achieve the goal of a million fewer accidents a year.

The reduction and prevention of industrial accidents is primarily the responsibility of the respective states. Accordingly, the President's Conference on Industrial Safety recommended the calling of Governors' Conferences on Industrial Safety by the states, patterned after the national conference in Washington, as a major activity of a continuing industrial safety program.

National and international unions can serve the cause of safety for their members by creating a union safety organization from the international through the local unions. Trained union safety representatives would be in a position to cooperate practically with management in the development and maintenance of sound safety organizations in industry.

These safety representatives will be in a position to see that the interests of labor are adequately considered in safety programs.

(P. 474) The convention commended the National Safety Conference referred to in the E.C. report and made the following statement:

We hope the planned state conference will implement the program and that our trade unionists will take leadership in this humanitarian and wise undertaking. Technical safety information is essential and we urge the federal and state governments to provide this service.

(Pp. 67, 494) Whereas — The nation was made aware of the problems of industrial safety by the calling of a "President of the U.S. Conference on Industrial Safety," and

Whereas—The resources and prestige of the federal government were placed behind a nationwide program to reduce industrial accidents by one million by 1952, thereby reducing the needless toll of two million work injuries a year, and

Whereas—This conference sought the active cooperation and participation of labor, management, and all interested groups in achieving this worthy goal, therefore, be it

Resolved—That the A. F. of L. in convention assembled, give full support to the holding of this type of conference to the end that industrial accidents be reduced, and further that affiliated international unions cooperate wholeheartedly in these national safety conferences and, be it further

Resolved—That the A. F. of L. be urged to call upon the state federations of labor and other central labor bodies, and all affiliated international unions, to participate actively in state safety conferences, as well as national, and to further implement, where possible, the recommendations of these conferences, both on a national and a state level.

(1950, p. 207) We pointed out last year the dangerous trend toward taking away from state labor departments their functions in the field of industrial health and placing them in state health departments. One more state—Virginia—was added to the list of states in which there will now be dual regulation and inspection of places of employment for the control of working conditions. The labor departments with their traditional authority to inspect workplaces are finding this authority being whittled away by the use of federal money given under the Social Security Act for general programs for state health departments. For years the A. F. of L. has actively supported legislation for federal funds to state labor departments to help them do the technical engineering jobs that are necessary in a modern safety inspection program. Opposition from the state health authorities has been largely responsible for the failure of Congress to enact this legislation. So instead of a vigorous health and safety program for the protection of the workers in their places of employment we are finding jurisdictional squabbles between the inspectors of health and labor departments. We again urge that organized labor in the various states take steps to prevent further encroachment by health departments on labor department's activities, and to secure enactment where needed of legislation giving the state labor departments rule-making authority and enforcement in the field of safety and health in industry.

(1951, pp. 137, 507) A. F. of L. endorsed proposal for an appropriation of a half million dollars for manpower conservation through promotion of industrial safety to be administered by the Department of Labor's Bureau of Labor Standards.

(Safety Council Established)—(1951, pp. 139, 508) As a direct result of legislation strongly urged by the A. F. of L., the Federal Safety Council has been established in the Department of Labor under P.L. 357, which charges the responsibility to the Department of Labor for servicing all federal agencies. Our testimony to the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare in favor of the bill—to expand the government employees disability compensation act—called for carrying on a program of preventive and educational work to reduce the accident frequency and severity rate. The suggestion was adopted and the council was set up.

The Federal Safety Council is the successor agency to the Interdepartmental Safety Council. The Interdepartmental Safety Council had been an informal type of activity which functioned only negligibly. The new council promises to get results through procurement of an annual budget and serious attention to the work at hand.

(P. 125) At the time the Defense Production Activities Appropriation bill was before the committees of the Congress, we urged that manpower conservation in industry be promoted throughout the country, $500,000 to be spent by the federal government.

We pointed out that in World War II a good job in this field had been done by the states but that there were wide gaps in coordination which caused much of the effort to be on a purely local basis. Further, that in time of war or in preparation for war, industry and its employees are inclined to sacrifice safety methods for expediency, speed and production time tables.

It was explained that our affiliated unions are rightly concerned over the safety of their members. We feel the urgency for protecting the nation against waste and carelessness. In the third and fourth quarters of 1950, in the wake of the Korean outbreak, the accident rate rose in industry noticeably. We are convinced that now, even more than ever, we must save lives and limbs and prevent loss on the job through occupational deaths and injuries.

(P. 529) We propose concurrence in the proposal for expansion and coordination of present undertakings for industrial safety. The purpose is made more important by the tight manpower needs of defense and in increased tensions of defense production with its use of inexperienced workers, and workers in unfamiliar jobs.

We urge the officers of the A. F. of L. to increase efforts to these ends.

(1952, pp. 277, 495) The E.C. reported efforts to secure legislation to provide safety measures for the prevention of industrial and mine disasters. The convention directed continued efforts toward further strengthening the laws concerning industrial and mine safety.

(1953, pp. 182, 591) The E.C. reports on specific legislation introduced which would provide assistance to the states in the administration of safety laws. No hearings have been held, nor interest shown by the House or Senate Labor Committees. The federation has worked hard in its attempt to retain a decent budget for industrial safety work of the Department of Labor.

Your committee recommends acceptance of the E.C. report on this subject, and further recommends that the A. F. of L. continue its activities for this type of legislation.

(Expansion of Bureau of Labor Standards) — (1954, pp. 413, 531) Res. 114: Whereas—The fifteen thousand deaths and two million occupational injuries suffered by workers each year is a matter of vital concern not only to workers and their families but also to the national economy, and

Whereas—Every effort should be made to conserve our human resources by curbing the great toll of unnecessary accidents and thereby eliminating suffering and costs, and

Whereas—Active participation by unions in safety programs and in joint labor-management safety committees has demonstrated its effectiveness in reducing the accident toll, and

Whereas—The Bureau of Labor Standards through the organization of the President's Conference on Occupational Safety and through its safety training programs and its special industry drives has given much needed leadership to the accident prevention movement, and

Whereas—The services of the bureau to the states, to the unions and management must be greatly extended to secure maximum results; now therefore be it

Resolved—That the delegates to the 73rd convention of the A. F. of L. in convention assembled call upon the Congress of the U.S. to appropriate sufficient funds to the Bureau of Labor Standards to expand its safety activities, and be it further

Resolved—That we urge the President to continue his Conference on Occupational Safety to stimulate accident prevention efforts, and be it further

Resolved—That this convention go on record as recommending to all affiliated unions that they establish safety programs, that they provide for labor-management safety committees in all future contracts with employers and that they urge their respective locals to actively support safety programs in their work places and communities.

The convention referred this resolution to the officers of the A. F. of L.

(1954, pp. 157, 592) The E.C. submitted a special report on efforts being made to weaken safety legislation. The convention unanimously adopted its committee report which stated in part:

These moves made in the name of economy would seriously endanger the safety of the workers in many industries.

We further note that no action was taken by Congress on A. F. of L. proposals to strengthen rather than weaken existing safety legislation.

We recommend that the convention instruct its officers to continue their efforts to improve safety legislation and bills affecting occupational hazards and diseases and resist vigorously all moves that would endanger the health and welfare of workers.

Sailors Union (Jurisdiction)—(1948, p. 335) Res. 136 requested support "for any action which the membership of the Sailors Union of the Pacific may deem fit to take which will protect their rightful and recognized jurisdiction over work to which claims are now being made by organizations unaffiliated with the A. F. of L." in negotiations being conducted with the waterfront employers and shipowners of the Pacific and Alaskan ports.

(P. 471) The following statement submitted by the convention committee was adopted in lieu of the resolution as submitted:

Your committee is in hearty accord with the objective sought by this resolution but rather doubts the wisdom of its approval in the form presented. It requests and seeks the encouragement and support of the A. F. of L. in broad and undefinable language.

Your committee therefore recommends that every possible encouragement and assistance be extended to the Sailors' Union of the Pacific and as may be requested by the Seafarers' International Union of N.A., in its contest with the unions of the CIO referred to in the resolution, and that every possible aid be given to this organization to the end that the process of negotiating a contract with the Waterfront Employers and Shipowners will terminate speedily and successfully in favor of the Sailors' Union of the Pacific.

Salary Standardization: St. Paul Plan—(1942, p. 560) Two resolutions were submitted for consideration by the convention, both dealing with a salary standardization plan then being projected in St. Paul. The purpose of the plan was condemned and the resolutions referred to the E.C. The two resolutions follow:

Res. 25:

Whereas—A concerted effort is being made by a Detroit newspaper in an attempt to have the so-called "St. Paul Salary Standardization Plan" adopted for all municipal employees of the City of Detroit, Michigan, and

Whereas—It is the hope of the sponsors of this legislation to enlarge the scope of the "St. Paul Plan" to other municipal employees should they be successful in saddling it upon Detroit municipal employees, and

Whereas—From written statements obtained from City Employees Unions in St. Paul the plan is nothing but a pure and simple method of keeping wages down and has proven a drastic obstacle to overcome when attempts are made to adjust wages fairly, and

Whereas—Because we feel that should the movement spread it would constitute a major threat to all forms of public and private labor, therefore, be it

Resolved—That the A. F. of L. be and is hereby placed upon record as being opposed to the adoption of any "cost of living" contracts or plans of a similar nature to the "St. Paul Salary Standardization Plan" and to cooperate with all affiliated organizations to prevent the incorporation of cost of living formulas in union labor agreements.

Res. 113:

Whereas—A concerted effort is being made by taxpayer groups in an attempt to have the so-called "St. Paul Salary Standardization Plan" adopted for all municipal employees throughout the U.S., and

Whereas—It is the hope of the sponsors of this legislation to enlarge the scope of the St. Paul Plan to other private employees, should they be successful in saddling it upon municipal employees, and

Whereas—From first-hand information and statistics obtained by representatives who were sent to St. Paul to study this plan, it was stated by Mr. J. B. Probst who originated the plan, that it is already in operation in 703 cities at the present time, although he refused to supply a list of the same, and

Whereas—From written statements obtained from city employees, and unions in St. Paul, Minnesota, the plan is nothing but a pure and simple instrument for keeping wages down and has proved a drastic obstacle to overcome when attempts are made to adjust wages and salaries fairly, and

Whereas—Should the movement spread to other states it may jeopardize and become a major threat to all forms of public and private labor, and

Whereas—The seriousness of this attempt is of such import that in September of last year the Minneapolis and St. Paul Central Trades and Labor Council and the Minnesota State Federation of Labor went on record as being opposed to the St. Paul Salary Standardization Plan, and further instructed all Minnesota local unions to avoid the incorporation of any "Cost of Living" formulas in labor contracts by reason of their detrimental influence as experienced in the past and

Whereas—The International Association of Fire Fighters, at its convention held in Columbus, Ohio, September 14-17, 1942, went on record as being opposed to the adoption of any "Cost of Living" contracts or plans of a similar nature to the St. Paul Plan, and has warned all local unions in the International Association of Fire Fighters to take precautions against the attempts of groups which would attempt to place any such type plan in effect, therefore, be it

Resolved—That the delegates assembled at this, the sixty-second convention of the A. F. of L., go on record as being opposed to the adoption of any "Cost of Living" contracts or plans of a similar nature to the St. Paul Plan.

Sales Tax (See: Taxation)

Salk Vaccine (Health)—(1955, p. 224) On April 18, President Meany issued a statement, expressing the gratification of the A. F. of L. at the success of the vaccine tests and its concern with the problem of distribution and control. With respect to Secretary Hobby's conference, the statement declared that:

... the matter of distributing the vaccine presents basic economic, social and humanitarian problems which are not within the special competence of the medical profession and the pharmaceutical industry. The A. F. of L. calls upon the President and the Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare immediately to broaden the invitations to the conference to include representatives of the religious faiths, workers, farmers and the great women's organizations.

Regarding the necessity for a prompt and effective governmental program, President Meany stated that:

While the supply is limited, its use should be rationed according to priorities of medical need and under auspices which insure that children in the poorest sections of this country should have the opportunity to benefit equally with those in more fortunate areas. To achieve these ends an official national policy is necessary, and if any such policy is to be effective, a substantial part of the supply of the Salk vaccine must be purchased and distributed through the public health agencies. . . . We call upon Congress to take up this matter immediately as a non-partisan measure and to make available without delay whatever appropriation our governmental and other experts consider necessary to assure the people of the U.S. that this preventive against a dreaded disease shall be administered with fairness for all, with privileges for none.

Salt Mines—(1938, p. 453) There being no state law relative to salt mines, and taking into consideration the vast dangers as a result of this, and, too, realizing coal mines and numerous other mines are covered by various laws to secure for their workers safe and healthful working conditions, members of Salt Workers Union, in view of the fact that the other mines are required to maintain two or more shafts, salt mines should also be required to maintain two or more shafts. The A. F. of L. will give every aid to secure the necessary legislation for two or more shafts for salt mines.

Scholarships and Loans (Education)

School Lunch Program (also see: Education and Planning)

(1943, pp. 261, 368) Res. 84 proposed a permanent food and milk program for school children:

Whereas—The Congress of the U.S. enacted P.L. No. 320 on August 25, 1935, section 32 of which law makes available annually to the Department of Agriculture 30 per cent of all monies collected as import duties to be used by the Department of Agriculture for relief of farm food surpluses and said department did, as one method of using up farm surpluses, sponsor a nationwide school lunch and school milk program, and

Whereas—The 78th Congress did on July 5, 1943, pass the annual appropriation bill for the Department of Agriculture which included a provision that, notwithstanding the fact that farm surpluses no longer exist, a sum not to exceed $50,000,000.00 could be spent during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, for the continuance of the school lunch and school milk program. At that time Congress made it plain that the provision was for one year only and that worthy as the school lunch program is, some other means should be developed rather than to charge it to section 32, and

Whereas—The continuance of the school lunch and school milk program is of a benefit to the health and welfare of the child, which was brought to light during the induction of selectees for the armed forces of the U.S. when large numbers of men were shown to have suffered from malnutrition and poor teeth as a result of inadequate food. Encouraging better nutrition is basically an educational function and school lunch rooms offer an ideal place for teaching this subject, and furthermore, despite vastly increased industrial activity, there is still a considerable percentage of families in need of some assistance to provide nutritive foods in adequate quantities for their children, and

Whereas—The continuance of this program will permit more than 6,000,000 school children of the nation, to have available daily, a complete dietetically well balanced school lunch at very low cost, now therefore be it

Resolved—That the A. F. of L. in convention assembled go on record recommending to the Congress of the U.S. that the school lunch and school milk program be perpetuated, and that Congress enact suitable legislation to effect this purpose, beginning July 1, 1944, and to appropriate sufficient monies to finance it from any unincumbered funds in the U.S. Treasury. These funds to be made available in direct grants to local school boards or districts until such time as this obligation can be absorbed by the local communities.

Resolution No. 84 requests endorsement of a proposal that legislation be enacted to provide that Congress appropriate sufficient funds to continue the free milk and lunch program for school children and that such fund be allotted to local school boards or districts until such time as that obligation can be assumed by local communities.

Your committee recommends that the resolution be referred to the E.C. with instructions to work out an equitable plan for needed assistance to school children and to initiate the appropriate legislation.

(1946, pp. 225, 615) The E.C. reported A. F. of L. support for legislation proposed to extend the school lunch programs. The convention approved the E.C. report.

(1947, p. 287) The E.C. reported continued but unsuccessful efforts on the part of the federation to secure
